Moreover, we are of the opinion that the bond in form is in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. There is no merit in appellant's contention that adding the words "and the said road finally not opened" renders the bond void, for the reason that it lessens the liability of the bondsmen. The added condition is mere surplusage. The words neither add to nor detract from the liability of the bondsmen. Their obligation is to pay the costs of viewing and surveying if, after such examination and survey, the board shall deem it inadvisable to grant their petition, the granting of which would be equivalent to the opening of the road. If the petition be denied, such denial constitutes a final disposition of the proceedings thereunder for the opening of the road and their liability would attach at once. The proceedings being at an end, the road could not be finally or otherwise opened thereunder. It is idle to claim that the bondsmen would be released from liability because, after their petition was denied, a road covering the same territory might be opened under a dedication or purchase. The bond could have reference to no road other than that opened in the proceeding initiated by the petition with which the bond was filed, and to which it referred. At most, the alleged defect constitutes a mere irregularity, which did not affect the private rights of appellant. Hill v. Board of Supervisors, 95 Cal. 239, 30 Pac. 385.

The judgment is affirmed.

SAN PEDRO SALT CO. v. HAUSER PACKING CO. (Civ. 710.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 10, 1910.)

1. SALES (§ 84*)—CONTRACTS—RENEWAL AT ELECTION—TIME TO EXERCISE ELECTION.

A contract for the sale and delivery during a year of a specified quantity of salt at a fixed price, which gives the buyer the option to renew the agreement for a second year, without specifying the time within which the election must be made, binds the buyer to exercise his option before the expiration of the contract, and an election made within 30 days after the expiration of the contract is ineffectual.

2. SALES (§ 84*)—CONTRACTS—LIABILITY OF BUYER.

A contract for the sale and delivery during a year of 200 tons of salt at $5 per ton gave the buyer the option to renew the agreement for a second year, without specifying the time within which he should elect to renew. He did not elect to renew until after the expiration of the year. During the following year he ordered salt from the seller as he had previously done under the contract, and in conversations with representatives of the seller he insisted that the purchases were made at the price stipulated in the contract. The seller never consented to the sale at such price, but he disclaimed any renewal by the buyer of the contract, and the invoices accompanying the shipments gave the price which was in excess of the price fixed in the contract. Held, that the seller could recover the value of the salt delivered after the expiration of the contract.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1056*)—HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error in sustaining objections to questions to witnesses on cross-examination was not prejudicial, where the most favorable answers could not have benefited the cross-examining party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Isidore B. Dockweiler, for appellant. B. W. Hahn and Hahn & Hahn, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On August 26, 1905, plaintiff contracted in writing to deliver to defendant during the ensuing year 200 tons of salt at the price of $5 per ton as therein stipulated. The contract contained a provision to the effect that the defendant should have the option to renew the agreement for a second year, but failed to specify the time within which defendant should elect to renew the agreement. By its terms the contract expired on August 27, 1906. Within the year following such expiration plaintiff delivered to defendant a certain amount of salt alleged to be of the reasonable market value of $2,525.50, and for the recovery of which, less payments made, this suit was instituted. Defendant claims that, pursuant to the provisions of the agreement according such right, it renewed the contract under which it was entitled to the salt so delivered at the price specified therein. The court found there was no renewal of the contract and gave judgment against defendant for the value of the salt. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and it appeals from the order denying the same.

The evidence clearly tends to prove that defendant did not elect to renew the contract prior to its expiration on August 27, 1906. Appellant contends, however, that, as the contract fixed no time when it should exercise its option to renew, it had a reasonable time after the expiration thereof within which to act, and that it did, by letter, within 30 days after its expiration, notify plaintiff of its election to renew the contract. Where a contract provides for its renewal at the election of one party thereto without fixing the time when such option shall be exercised, the time for giving notice of such renewal cannot be extended beyond the date of the expiration of the contract. The right to renew, like other rights, must necessarily cease when there is no longer a contract under and by virtue of which to claim the privilege. Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 Pac. 537; Renoud v. Daskam, 34 Conn. 512; Thiebaud et al. v. First Nat. Bank, 42 Ind. 212. Under the contract defendant was required to take the salt so purchased thereunder within one year after the date of the contract. It might with equal propriety insist that it had a right to delivery of the salt within a reasonable time after the expiration of the year as to insist upon the right of renewal of the contract after it had expired.

Appellant claims that during the year following the expiration of the contract it ordered salt from respondent as it had previously done under the contract, and that in conversation with representatives of the salt company it insisted that such purchases were made at the price stipulated in the contract. Conceding this to be true, it is clear that plaintiff never assented to the sale at such price of the salt so ordered by defendant. On the contrary, the evidence clearly tends to show that plaintiff at all times disclaimed any renewal by defendant of the contract. The invoices, copies of which are brought up in the record, included a large number of shipments of salt. Copies of these invoices accompanied each shipment, and the price of $8.50 per ton inserted in such invoices afforded ample evidence to defendant that the price at which plaintiff was supplying the salt was greater than that of $5 per ton stipulated in the contract.

The alleged errors of law are all based upon rulings of the court in excluding certain questions asked by defendant on cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses. We perceive no error in any of these rulings. None of the questions constituted proper cross-examination. Moreover, the most favorable answers to these questions could not have benefited defendant, and hence, if the rulings were improper, were not prejudicial to the defendant.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 87*)—ON STIPULATION—VALIDITY.

A judgment, which recites that it was made pursuant to stipulation entered into in open court in the presence of the attorneys for both parties, "and of such defendants, * * * it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the said stipulation was duly entered into in open court," is a valid judgment.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where there is no bill of exceptions, all intendments in support of the judgment appealed from must be indulged, and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken, and any matters which might have been presented to the court below which would have authorized a judgment will be presumed to have been presented.

4. TRIAL (§ 388*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*) —NECESSITY OF FINDINGS.

Where a judgment is entered upon an agreed statement of facts, no findings are necessary, and the same rule applies where the judgment is entered upon stipulation; for it will be presumed, if necessary to support such judgment, that the stipulation was made a matter of entry, and was sufficiently specific to authorize the entry of the judgment.

6. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 85*)—ORAL STIPULATIONS.

Where an attorney in open court verbally stipulates that an order or judgment may be entered, and agreeably thereto the order or judgment is entered, it then becomes an executed stipulation, and Code Civ. "This matter coming on regularly for trial in open court, by the court, both parties having waived a jury, the 24th day of September, 1908, in the presence of Gavin McNab, Esq., counsel for plaintiff, and of Joseph Slye, Esq., of counsel for the defendants, Louis Woolf and Mary L. Woolf, and of said defendants, and the parties hereto having entered into a stipulation in open court and duly reported by the official reporter of this court, whereby the amount payable by the defendants to plaintiff was fixed at $1,300, together with subsequent costs, including the calendar fee and reporter's fee, $500 of said sum to be paid by the 28th of September, 1908, and the remainder within 30 days from said 24th day of September, 1908, and whereby it was agreed that in the event the said money should not be paid in accordance with said stipulation at that time, then judgment should go against said defendants as asked in the complaint, without further trial; and the cause having been regularly continued from time to time, and finally until this 18th day of November, 1908, and counsel for plaintiff having, on this said 18th day of November, 1908, in the presence of counsel for defendants, moved for judgment, pursuant to said stipulation, and Joseph Slye, Esq., of counsel for defendants, having moved for a further continuance to permit of compliance by defendants with the requirements of said stipulation; and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the said stipulation was duly entered into in open court, and that defendants, and each of them, had failed to comply with same, and that plaintiff is entitled to judgment in accordance with the terms of said stipulation, in all respects as asked in the complaint; and the law and the premises being by the court here understood and fully considered—it is hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed, and this court does hereby order, adjudge, and decree, that plaintiff above named do have and recover possession of the real property, the subject of this action, which said real property is particularly described as follows, to wit: [Description of property.]

"J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Indorsed: "Filed Dec. 2, 1908. H. I. Mulcrevy, Clerk, by Milton M. Davis, Deputy Clerk."

It appears from what purports to be a bill of exceptions, in support of the motion to annul the judgment, that on January 12, 1909, defendants filed with the clerk a notice of motion to set aside and annul the judgment, on the grounds: (1) That the court had no jurisdiction to enter the judgment, and it is void; (2) that it was made without the consent of defendants, and without a trial of the facts in issue; (3) that it was made through mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect upon the part of defendants. The motion came on to be heard on January 29, 1909, upon the pleadings in the case, and upon certain affidavits filed by defendants and upon certain counter affidavits submitted by plaintiff. On February 11, 1909, the court made the following order: "Ordered that if within 15 days defendants pay to plaintiff the sum of $1,062, said motion be granted, and if not so paid, motion to be denied." The bill of exceptions purports to be "upon said motion and order of this court, made in relation thereto."

Respondent makes the point that the order refusing to set aside a judgment or order is not appealable. It was held in Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 409, 22 Pac. 175: "The motion was not for a new trial, but was merely to set aside the judgment, and the judgment was itself appealable. It is settled that when a judgment or order is itself appealable the appeal must be taken from such judgment or order, and not from a subsequent order refusing to set aside—citing cases. There are some exceptions to this rule, but the case does not fall within any of them. The plaintiff should have appealed from the judgment, with a bill of exceptions upon that appeal." See Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 11, 79 Pac. 527. Nevertheless, we have examined the bill of exceptions, and, upon a careful reading of the affidavits before the trial court at the hearing of the motion, we think its order finds ample justification. We see no infirmity in the judgment. It is there recited that it was made pursuant to stipulation entered into in open court, in the presence of the attorneys for both parties, "and of said defendants; * * * it appearing to the satisfaction of the court that the said stipulation was duly entered into in open court," etc. There being no bill of exceptions upon the appeal from the judgment, all intendments in support of the judgment must be indulged (Von Schmidt v. Von Schmidt, 104 Cal. 547, 38 Pac. 361), and all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken; and any matters which might have been presented to the court below, which would have authorized the judgment, will be presumed to have been thus presented (Id.). Appellants now urge nothing against the validity of the judgment which might not have been presented to the court below, and passed upon by that court favorably to respondent.

It will be presumed that findings were waived where there is nothing to show that findings were not waived. Goyhinech v. Goyhinech, 80 Cal. 410, 22 Pac. 175. Where judgment is entered upon an agreed statement of all the facts in the case no findings are necessary (Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 Pac. 364); and we see no reason why the same rule should not apply where the judgment is entered upon stipulation, for it will be presumed, if necessary to support the judgment, that the stipulation was made a matter of minute entry, and was sufficiently full and specific to authorize the entry of the judgment. It appears from the recitals in the judgment that the matter came on to be heard September 24, 1908, and pursuant to the stipulation then made in open court the amount payable to plaintiff by defendants was fixed at $1,300, of which $500 was to be paid September 28, 1908, and the remainder within 30 days from September 24, 1908, and if not so paid, judgment should go against defendants as asked in the complaint. Judgment was not finally entered until November 28, 1908. The judgment shows on its face that defendants obtained an extension of time in which to make payments, and thus secured some favor by it. Having agreed to the judgment, in open court, though by verbal stipulation, defendants are not at liberty to repudiate the other provisions of the stipulation. Himmelmann v. Sullivan, 40 Cal. 125; Hawes v. Clark, 84 Cal. 275, 24 Pac. 116; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 287, 30 Pac. 529. In Reclamation District v. Hamilton, 112 Cal. 603, 609, 44 Pac. 1074, approving Himmelmann v. Sullivan, supra, it was held that section 283, Code Civ. Proc., prescribing the manner in which the attorney may bind his client by stipulation, is executory, and does not refer to executed agreements. It seems to us that when an attorney in open court verbally consents or stipulates that an order or judgment may be entered, and agreeably thereto the order or judgment is entered, it then becomes an executed agreement or stipulation, and the rule last above stated applies. In Coonan v. Lowenthal, 129 Cal. 197, 61 Pac. 940, it was held that, where an attorney consents orally in open court to the amendment of a pleading, section 283, Code Civ. Proc., cannot be invoked to the prejudice of the opposing party. To give section 283 a literal construction would greatly retard the business of the court, and lead to absurd consequences. Every admission, consent, or agreement made in the course of the trial would either have to be reduced to writing or filed with the clerk or by the clerk entered in his minutes. It was never intended that the section should receive such a construction.

PEOPLE v. PHILLIPS. (Cr. 152.)

1. Homicide (§§ 228, 234*)—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence, in a prosecution for homicide, held sufficient, if believed, to show that the crime was committed, and that accused was guilty of committing it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 471–476, 482–493; Dec. Dig. §§ 228, 234.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 213*)—Preliminary Examination—Waiver of Objections.

After the jury was sworn, and the district attorney had made his opening statement, and the complaining witness was about to be sworn, defendant objected to the taking of any testimony on the ground that he had not been properly committed by the examining magistrate because in the body of the complaint the given name of the complaining witness was different from the given name signed to the complaint. Held that, if this variance was a material one, it should have been presented on motion to set aside the information, and it came too late at the time it was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 431–433; Dec. Dig. § 213.*]

3. Criminal Law (§ 660*)—Reception of Evidence—Objection to Interpreter.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, a number of the witnesses were Indians, who were unable to testify in English, and it was recognized by all that the interpretation was likely to prove inexact in the hands of any one within reach of the court, the proper time to question the qualification of an interpreter was before he was permitted to act, and, where the best is made of the situation by consenting to a person acting as interpreter who was known not to be able to interpret exactly either the oath or the evidence, the accused was not entitled to have the testimony given through such an interpreter stricken out without some showing that in a particular instance complained of the oath was not correctly interpreted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 660.*]

4. Criminal Law (§ 707*)—Reception of Evidence—Harmless Error.

In a prosecution for murder, many of the witnesses were Indians, who could not testify in English, and the court allowed accused to introduce the testimony of his witnesses with the aid of his stepfather as an interpreter, and allowed the district attorney to have an Indian boy as a check interpreter to prompt him when it appeared to the boy that the interpretation had not been correctly made. Much of the defense was introduced in a leading form. The district attorney objected to one answer given by the interpreter, and said, "Is this interpreter giving the answers to the witness, or is she testifying?" Held that, there being enough in the record to justify the remark, the suggestion that the interpreter might be giving his own version of the matter was not prejudicial to accused.

5. Criminal Law (§ 782*)—Instructions—Justification.

A requested instruction, in a prosecution for homicide, that no justification or excuse of the act by defendant is required to be proven "by a preponderance of evidence," is properly modified by striking out the words in quotation marks.

6. Criminal Law (§ 829*) — Instructions Already Given.

Striking out from an instruction on reasonable doubt the clause, "which never shifts, but remains throughout the whole case upon the prosecution," is not prejudicial to defendant, where it is in effect covered by other instructions.

7. Criminal Law (§ 1104*)—Appeal and Error—Preparation of Transcripts.

The statute making a typewritten transcription of the evidence the record on appeal does not change the rule of the Supreme Court requiring the transcripts in all cases to conform to certain dimensions.

TAGGART, J. Information for murder. Verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree, and judgment ordering imprisonment in state's prison for term of 50 years.

The defendant, the man whom he killed, Jim Alonzo, and all the witnesses who testified, except the officers and the complaining witness, were California Indians. The complaining witness, who is a Mexican and the son-in-law of the deceased, was the only witness, other than the officers, who could make himself fully understood in English; the others being assisted more or less by an interpreter who was sworn to interpret from English into Indian and from Indian into English. These Indians and the complaining witness were all staying at a sheep-shearing camp at the time of the killing of Jim Alonzo. The day of the occurrence, August 22, 1909, was Sunday, and some or all of these Indians had been to one of the neighboring towns and returned to camp toward night. The defendant and his wife were the last to reach camp, arriving about dusk or a little after dark; the former bringing with him some whisky. The deceased immediately upon defendant's arrival asked him for a drink, which was freely given; the complaining witness and another Indian, Andrew Tip or Tepe, also taking a drink. Upon Jim Alonzo asking for another drink a little later, some altercation took place between him and defendant which ended in the defendant pulling a pistol and firing three shots, one of which hit Jim Alonzo and caused his death. The conversation between the two men while quarreling was carried on principally in the Indian language, and the complaining witness was unable to understand the purport of it; but the testimony of the other witnesses for the prosecution, who testified, in part at least, through an interpreter, tends to show that defendant was at all times the aggressor, and that the deceased was acting in a conciliatory manner. So far as the complaining witness could understand what was said, or see what was done, his testimony supported the same view. The testimony of the witnesses for the defense (who were relatives and friends of the defendant, as the witnesses for the prosecution were relatives and friends of the deceased) tended to show that the deceased was the aggressor, and at least one of them testified that the first two of the three shots fired by the defendant were fired in the air to deter the deceased from advancing upon defendant, and that the third and fatal shot was only fired after these had failed, and when deceased was making a demonstration which might have indicated an intention upon the part of Jim Alonzo to pull a weapon. There can be no question that, if the evidence of the prosecution be believed, it was shown by the testimony of eyewitnesses that the crime was committed, and that defendant was guilty of committing it. This was supplemented by evidence that the defendant ran away immediately after the killing.

After the jury was sworn to try the cause, the district attorney had made his opening statement, and the complaining witness called and about to be sworn, defendant objected to the taking of any testimony on the ground that he had not been properly committed by the examining magistrate, because in the body of the complaint the name of the complaining witness was given as "Marcello" Baker, while the name signed to the complaint was "Undo" Baker. This is assigned as error. If this variance was a material one, it should have been presented on motion to set aside the information, and came too late at the time it was made. People v. Morley, 8 Cal. App. 372, 374, 97 Pac. 84.

The witness Belle Jim, the daughter of the deceased, and wife of the complaining witness, was examined through an interpreter named Willie Atwell, to whose acting in this capacity defendant consented before the witness was sworn; it being at that time recognized by all persons interested that the interpretation was a difficult matter and likely to prove inexact in the hands of any one within reach of the court, but the interpreter was permitted to proceed without objection. After the testimony of this witness was closed, and the next witness, Josie Alonzo, the wife of the deceased, was being interrogated with respect to her knowledge of English and of the significance of an oath, it was disclosed that the interpreter, Willie Atwell, was not able to clearly convey to the mind of the Indian witness the full purport of the oath administered by the clerk. Thereupon defendant moved that all the evidence of the witness Belle Jim be stricken out on the ground that she was not properly sworn. The court then interrogated the interpreter as to his qualifications and ability to interpret in the English and Indian languages and proceeded with the examination of the witness then on the stand, Josie Alonzo, without objection; and later, when the motion to strike out the testimony of Belle Jim was renewed, the court said: "The presumption is that the witness was properly sworn, and the motion to strike out is denied. If there is a showing made in this court that will overcome that presumption, in the opinion of the court, and tend to show the fact that the witness wasn't sworn, or didn't understand the oath when administered, the court will hear such offered proof or testimony if it be offered; but the motion is at this time denied." No further showing was made by the defendant as to the improper interpretation of the oath to the witness Belle Jim.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying this motion. The proper time to question the qualification of an interpreter is before he is permitted to act, and where, as in this case, the best is made of an unsatisfactory situation, by consenting to a person acting in this capacity who is known not to be able to interpret or translate exactly either the oath or the evidence, it cannot be said the defendant is entitled to have the testimony given through such an interpreter stricken out, without making some showing that in the particular instance complained of the oath was not correctly interpreted. There was no showing whatever that the oath as administered to Belle Jim in English was not properly interpreted into the Indian language. Neither was there any attempt to negative the presumption that might have arisen, from the knowledge of English which she displayed, that she understood the oath when spoken by the clerk in that language. In other words, as the trial court said, the record is regular on its face, and no showing inconsistent with it was made.

When the defendant was permitted to introduce the testimony of his witnesses with the aid of his stepfather as an interpreter, the court allowed the district attorney to have an Indian boy as a check interpreter to prompt him when it appeared to the boy that the interpretation was not correctly made. The calling of the court's attention to the discrepancies reported by the boy on four or five occasions is assigned as misconduct on the part of the district attorney. On the first occasion the district attorney stated the answer of the question as interpreted by the boy, and, on being admonished that he must not state what the boy said, confined himself to objecting on the ground that the interpreter was not asking the question propounded by counsel, and in the last instance inquiring: "Is this interpreter giving the answers to the witness, or is she testifying?" Much of the defense was introduced in a leading and suggestive form, and there is enough in the record to justify the remark last made, and we do not see how the defendant could have been prejudiced by it. The trial court strained its discretion in respect to the admission of leading and suggestive questions on behalf of the defense in order that the defendant might have the full benefit of all the justification for his act that could be presented. This is not said in criticism of the court's action in this respect, but in support of the view that, under the conditions of this trial, the statement of the district attorney containing the suggestion that the interpreter might be giving his own version of the matter could not have been prejudicial to the defendant.

The language in the argument of the district attorney, the use of which is assigned as misconduct, is found in the evidence in the case. One witness at least testified that the defendant jumped over a fence and ran, after the shooting occurred.

It was not error for the trial court to make the modifications of the two instructions complained of. An instruction that no justification or excuse of an act by a defendant is required to be proven is only weakened by being stated in the form that he is not required to establish his justification or excuse, "by a preponderance of evidence." The insertion of the words quoted only tends to mislead the jury and detract from such an instruction given at the request of the defendant. The court properly eliminated these words from the instruction before giving it. The clause stricken out of the instruction on reasonable doubt, "which never shifts, but remains throughout the whole case upon the prosecution," is covered in effect by the instructions given by the court, and no prejudice could have resulted from the failure to give it where requested. We find no prejudicial error in the record.

We have considered this appeal upon the record presented without passing upon the Attorney General's objections urged in his brief. We have also done this, notwithstanding the record is not prepared in accordance with the rules of the Supreme Court. The statute making a typewritten transcription of the evidence the record on appeal does not change the rule of the Supreme Court requiring the transcripts in all cases to conform to certain dimensions. Whether typewritten or printed, there must be some uniformity of size in the files of the court that they may be preserved in satisfactory form, and for this reason the rules as to dimensions are applicable to written and typewritten, as well as printed, transcripts and briefs.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 339*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

A clause in specifications for street work requiring the contractor to observe all the ordinances as to the obstruction of streets, keeping open passageways and protecting the same where they would be dangerous to public travel, and making him responsible for all damages the city may have to pay on his failure to protect the public, does not increase the obligation of the contractor and one subject to an assessment for the work may not complain on the ground that the cost of the work is thereby increased.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Charles Schindler against C. C. Young and others. From a judgment for defendant C. C. Young, rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. C. Spencer, for appellant. F. O. Daniel, for respondent C. C. Young.

SHAW, J. Action to recover the amount of an assessment levied for street improvement against a lot owned by defendant C. C. Young.

Defendant interposed a demurrer upon the ground that the second amended complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court sustained the demurrer and denied plaintiff's right to further amend, stating as a reason for such denial that it satisfactorily appeared to the court that plaintiff could not amend his complaint so as to state a cause of action. Judgment was thereupon rendered for defendant, from which plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

We regret that respondent has not deemed the case of sufficient importance to justify him in filing points and authorities, or otherwise attempting to aid the court in arriving at a decision upon the appeal. In the absence of any suggestion on his part directing our attention to other alleged defects in the voluminous complaint, which, with exhibits, covers some 35 pages of the transcript, we shall assume, as stated by appellant, that the chief ground upon which the ruling of the court was based was a clause in the specifications under and in accordance with which the proceedings were had and taken and the work required to be done. This clause is as follows: "The contractor will be required to observe all the ordinances of the board of trustees in relation to the obstruction of streets, keeping open passageways and protecting the same where they are exposed and would be dangerous to public travel, and he will be held responsible for all damages the city may have to pay in consequence of his failure to protect the public from injury."

The court no doubt had in view the principle applied in Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, 32 Pac. 701, Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, and like cases. In the former case the specifications required the contractor to give a bond with sureties conditioned for the keeping of the street so improved in thorough repair for a period of five years from the completion of the contract. It was not only held that requiring the bond was unauthorized, but that such requirement changes and may increase the burdens of the property owner in that the contractor must charge a higher price for the work by reason of having to keep the street in repair. Clearly, its effect was to impose a duty upon the contractor other than that which the law imposed and as to which there was no authority in law for the creation of contractual relations.

The specifications in Blochman v. Spreckels contained the following provisions: "The contractor shall keep good and sufficient guards around said improvements, by fence or otherwise, to prevent accident, and shall hang thereon lights, to burn from dusk until daylight; and the contractor shall hold the city harmless for any and all suits for damages arising out of the construction of said improvements. The contractor shall, when required to do so by the superintendent of streets, remove from the work any overseer, laborer, or other person, who shall refuse or neglect to obey the said superintendent in anything relating to the work, or who shall perform his work in a manner contrary to these specifications or be found incompetent or unfaithful. All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications shall be sustained by the contractor." The court in denying a recovery based its conclusions solely upon the provision requiring the contractor to sustain all loss or damage, which it is held contemplated any damage which might subsequently result from the nature of the improvement. It was further held that the contractual assumption of such liability was unauthorized and its effect was to increase the burdens imposed upon the property owner. As to the other provisions contained in the specifications, it was intimated a fair interpretation would warrant holding them all to relate to damage during the progress of the work and before the city had accepted it.

In the case at bar the provision, while it had no proper place in the specifications, is clearly distinguishable from those discussed in the above and like cases. It does not contemplate any obligation devolving upon the contractor after the completion and acceptance of the work. Under the contract, he assumes no duty other than that which is imposed by law or the city ordinances. His obligations were not increased by the contract requiring him to take measures prescribed by ordinance applicable to all persons for the protection of the public from dangers incident to exposed and unprotected obstructions in the public highways. The specifications imposed no additional burdens in this respect. So, too, the contractor in prosecuting the work was liable for damages to persons who might receive personal injuries by reason of his negligence in failing to observe proper precautions to protect the public, but we know of no provision of law in this state under which the city could be required to pay damages to one injured in consequence of a defective street (Arnold v. City of San Jose, 81 Cal. 619, 22 Pac. 877; Chope v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113), or the fact of the contractor neglecting a duty thus enjoined upon him. As the city could in no event be required to pay damages on account of the contractor's negligence in failing to observe the ordinances, the requirement imposed no new or additional obligation upon him. It is therefore apparent that the agreement on the part of the contractor to do that which the law, in the absence of a contract, required him to do, though not under the law a subject of contract, and hence unauthorized, added nothing to his duties, obligations, or liabilities. This being true, it would seem clear that no ground exists for presuming that, by reason of such specification, the cost of the work was increased to the detriment of the property owner. And, since his burdens were not increased, the case is not brought within the principle announced in the cases hereinbefore cited. The court erred in sustaining the general demurrer.

The court also sustained the demurrer interposed upon the ground that the complaint was ambiguous. An examination of the complaint discloses that, whatever uncertainty may exist therein, it is not obnoxious to demurrer on the ground of ambiguity.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to overrule the general demurrer and permit plaintiff to make such amendment to his complaint as he may be advised.

EELLS v. GRAY BROS. CRUSHED ROCK CO. (Civ. 772.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 397*)—ACTS OF AGENTS—APPARENT AUTHORITY—LIABILITY OF CORPORATION.

Where the secretary of a corporation had apparent authority to act for the corporation, the fact that the board of directors had adopted no formal resolution conferring such authority was immaterial.

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 425*)—ACTS OF AGENTS—APPARENT AUTHORITY—LIABILITY OF CORPORATION—ESTOPPEL.

If a corporation clothes an officer or agent with apparent authority to act for it in a particular matter, it will be estopped to deny such authority as against persons dealing with him in good faith and in ignorance of limitations upon his authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by George I. Eells against the Gray Brothers Crushed Rock Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ames & Manning, for appellant. R. Y. Williams and Williams & Rutan, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover the value of certain nursery stock, consisting of budded walnut trees, alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendant at its special instance and request. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Defendant offered no evidence, and the only point which it urges as ground for reversal is that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

Defendant is a corporation, and, as shown by the evidence, the owner of a 24-acre orchard in Orange county, which for 10 or 12 years prior to the commencement of this suit had been in the care and under the management of one William E. Case. The trees were delivered to defendant at the request of Case, who, pursuant to oral instructions given him by the secretary of the corporation, and acting on its behalf, ordered them delivered at defendant's orchard, and the fair inference from the evidence is that upon their delivery he planted them upon defendant's land, as he was instructed to do by defendant's secretary. Subsequently, the bill for the trees was sent to defendant, who, on November 27, 1908, returned it to plaintiff with the request that it be submitted to "Mr. W. E. Case, who has charge of our place, for his approval." On January 6, 1909, defendant, in reply to plaintiff's demand for payment, wrote: "In reference to the payment of the same (the bill for the trees), we would ask if it would not be satisfactory if we would send you a sixty and a ninety day note covering the amount as you want to close up the estate." It further appears from the evidence that it was and had been the custom of defendant to transmit directions to Case, its manager, regarding the care of the orchard, through its secretary. Case testifies that "sometimes it was one (the secretary) and sometimes the other, whichever one happens to be there, and sometimes they write about it." It thus clearly appears that the secretary, who directed the purchase, was clothed with apparent authority to act in the matter. The fact that the board of directors adopted no formal resolution conferring such authority upon him is immaterial; it was not necessary. "If a corporation clothes an officer or agent with apparent authority to act for it in a particular matter, it will be estopped to deny such authority as against persons dealing with him in good faith, and in ignorance of limitations upon his authority." Section 707, Clark and Marshall on Private Corporations. It is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of this proposition. Suffice it to say that we cannot perceive how the court, under the facts here presented, could have reached any conclusion other than that which resulted in the judgment rendered for the value of the trees so delivered to defendant and by its agent planted upon its land.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. NEW TRIAL (§ 72*)—GROUNDS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—DUTY OF TRIAL COURT.

On motion for a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the trial court cannot merely determine whether there is a conflict in the evidence, but must weigh it for both parties, and, if the verdict in his judgment is against the weight of the evidence, must grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 146–148; Dec. Dig. § 72.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 979*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—GRANTING NEW TRIAL.

An order granting a new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict will not be reversed, unless there was a manifest abuse of discretion in granting it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3871; Dec. Dig. § 979.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 933*)—PRESUMPTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS IN FAVOR OF JUDGMENT.

The language of an order granting a new trial, as to the grounds of granting it, must be interpreted by the appellate court so as to support the order if possible.

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 163*)—ORDER—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTIONS.

A statement, in the order granting a new trial after verdict for plaintiff, in an action for injuries by being thrown from a street car, that the new trial was granted because plaintiff assumed the risk of riding on the steps where he did was at most a mixed inference of fact and law, and meant only that plaintiff assumed all risks of riding where he did which the evidence showed were incurred by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 163.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 346*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a street car company for injuries to plaintiff by being knocked off a street car by being struck by the handlebar on another car while he was riding on the steps, evidence held to support a finding that there was no risk to plaintiff due to a defective rail, or the swaying of the car from such cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 157*)—GROUNDS—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ruling upon a motion for new trial for insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the trial court must assume that the instructions given by it correctly stated the law.

7. NEW TRIAL (§ 157*) — GROUNDS — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In passing upon a motion for a new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict, the trial court was bound to consider all testimony introduced without objection, whether competent or not.

8. CARRIERS (§ 292*) — EQUIPMENT — SAFETY BAR.

A street car company is not required, as a matter of law, either by a statute or rule of law, to keep a safety bar before the entrance of open street cars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

9. CARRIERS (§ 321*)—TRIAL (§ 256*)—INJURIES—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

In an action against a street car company for injuries by being knocked off the step of a car by the projecting handlebar of a car going in the opposite direction, an instruction that there was no law requiring the company to place a safety bar on the side of the car on which plaintiff was riding was correct so far as it went, and did not preclude plaintiff from showing negligence in not providing a safety bar under the circumstances, and plaintiff cannot complain thereof, not having requested an appropriate instruction on the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 321;* Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 628–641; Dec. Dig. § 256.*]

10. CARRIERS (§ 320*)—PASSENGERS—INJURIES—JURY QUESTION—NEGLIGENCE.

The distance between the projecting steps of passing street cars on defendant's double tracks was only three inches, and the distance between the bodies of the cars was 18 inches, but the handlebars of cars on either track would extend 2⅝ inches beyond that distance. There was no safety bar across the entrance of the car on which plaintiff was riding and injured by being struck by a handlebar on another car, and plaintiff was riding on the step of the entrance because of the crowded condition of the car. Held, that it could not be said as a matter of law that it was negligence not to provide a safety bar on the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 320.*]

Action by Harry H. Morgan against the Los Angeles Pacific Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial after verdict for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake and Jones & Drake, for appellant. Gurney E. Newlin, John D. Pope, and J. W. McKinley, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while a passenger upon an electric car of the defendant which was being operated in the city of Los Angeles. The verdict of the jury was for plaintiff for $5,000, and the superior court granted a motion by defendant for a new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. This appeal is from that order.

Several other grounds of motion are stated in the notice of intention, and it appears to be conceded by appellant that, if the ruling of the trial court can be sustained upon any of the grounds stated in the notice, its order must be affirmed. We think, however, that under the rules applicable to the action of the trial court upon all matters relating to the weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses, the order of the superior court must be sustained on the ground therein stated. There is a clear and obvious distinction between the duty of a trial court and the duty of an appellate court with respect to the decision of such questions on a motion for a new trial. The trial court cannot rest upon a conflict in the evidence, but must weigh and consider the evidence for both parties, and determine for itself the just conclusion to be drawn from it. Where the decision is against the weight of the evidence it is the duty of that court to grant a new trial. In considering the question upon the motion, the trial judge must act upon his own judgment as to the effect of the evidence. In an action tried by a jury, the parties are entitled to the judgment of the jury in rendering a verdict in the first instance; but, upon a motion for a new trial they are equally entitled to the independent judgment of the judge as to whether such verdict is supported by the evidence. Green v. Soule, 145 Cal. 96, 78 Pac.

337. The trial court having discharged this duty (which duty, says the Supreme Court, judges of the superior court are generally only too reluctant to perform), and made its order granting a new trial on this ground, that order will not be reversed by an appellate court, unless it appears that there has been a manifest abuse of the sound, legal discretion which the trial court is presumed to exercise in passing upon such a motion. Pico v. Cohn, 67 Cal. 258, 7 Pac. 680. "It is only in rare instances and upon very strong grounds that the Supreme Court will set aside an order granting a new trial." Quinn v. Kenyon, 22 Cal. 82.

Plaintiff left the business part of the city of Los Angeles on one of defendant's regularly operated street cars to go to his home in the residence district of the city, about the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon. When he attempted to board it he found the car was "jammed," and he could not get in the car on the right-hand side, the proper side to enter. The conductor said: "Some of you fellows will have to get off of those steps; people cannot get on and off"—so he walked around to the steps at the rear of the car on the inside or left-hand side. According to his own testimony, he stood on the top step, holding himself on by the emergency brake wheel, while others testified that he was on the bottom step, and there was some testimony tending to show that he could not reach the brake wheel from the position in which he stood; one witness stating that he was holding on by hooking his arm around the post. The car upon which he was riding was a wide one, being 8 feet 6 inches across, while from tip to tip of the projecting steps it was nine feet and nine inches. The double tracks upon which the cars on this line were operated were of 3 feet 6 inch gauge and 10 feet from center to center, thus leaving but 3 inches clear between the steps of passing cars. The distance of 18 inches between the bodies of passing cars was also further reduced by the projection of the handlebars from each of them a distance of 2⅝ inches. There was no safety bar across the entrance to the car upon the steps of which plaintiff stood, and this is also alleged to be an act of negligence upon defendant's part which contributed to plaintiff's injury. The trial court instructed the jury that there was no law requiring the defendant to have a safety bar at such a place, and one of the witnesses who stood upon the steps with the plaintiff, testified, in effect, that if there had been one, it would only have rendered the position of a person standing on the top step the more dangerous, as it would have prevented him from getting his body inside the line of the car.

In the position described the plaintiff rode quite a distance without mishap, quite a number of cars being passed on the other track during this time, but when about a mile and a half from where he boarded the car he was struck by the projecting handlebar of another car of defendant going in the opposite direction, and thrown from his place on the step to the ground, the force of the collision wrenching loose the handlebar which struck him and precipitating that to the ground also. Plaintiff was badly injured, was in the hospital for nine weeks, and from the character of his injuries the verdict could not well be attacked on the ground that it was excessive. The negligence mainly relied upon by plaintiff is alleged to be the unsafe and defective condition of the defendant's roadbed at this point, which caused the car on which plaintiff was riding to give a sudden lurch or jerk to the side, thus throwing plaintiff's body out, and causing his head to project beyond the side of the car at the moment the other car was passing.

Plaintiff's own testimony located him as standing upon the top step, with his head inside the line of the body of the car, until the lurch or jerk threw him against the projecting bar. There was other evidence to sustain this view, as there was to support the theory of plaintiff that there was a lurch or sudden jerk of the car such as might have been caused by a defect in the rail. There was, however, no direct evidence of any particular defect or loose rail at the place of the accident at the time of the accident; there being, however, evidence as to the crooked condition of the track at other times when excavations were made to repair or relay the rails. Some of the other passengers who were on the car did not notice any such motion, and still others stated that there was no such swaying or rocking motion as would have been produced by a defect in the track, but merely the jerk caused by plaintiff coming in contact with the other car.

Appellant, however, quotes the language of the trial court in granting the motion to show that the order was made "because the plaintiff assumed all the risk in riding where he did," and contends that it was the evidence upon the issue of contributory negligence which the learned judge who tried the cause construed to support the order made. If it were necessary for us in considering the order before us to read this language of the trial judge into it, we would still be bound to interpret the language in support of the court's action. It could not be said that the evidence in the record would justify this court in saying as a matter of law, that the plaintiff did not assume all the risks in riding where he did, and it is not necessary that we should assume for the purpose of this appeal that the declaration of the trial court that he did was a conclusion of law alone. At most, it was a mixed inference of fact and law, and in considering the court's language we must so regard it. So considered, it would mean only that the plaintiff assumed all the risks of riding where he did which the facts of the case disclosed were incurred by him. Thus the question of reconciling the conflicting testimony above mentioned would be before us, and, taking the most favorable view of the evidence in support of the order, there was no risk due to a defective rail or swaying or lurch of the car from such a cause, referred to by the trial court when it said the plaintiff assumed all the risks in riding where he did.

For the purpose of passing upon the motion for a new trial the trial court was bound to assume the instructions given by it to correctly declare the law, as well as to consider all testimony introduced without objection, whether competent or not. Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 102, 77 Pac. 762. In other words, the law given to the jury by the court, and the evidence which the court permitted the jury to hear, constitute the law and evidence which must be considered by the court upon a motion for a new trial. The trial judge must determine the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict in the light of the same facts and law that were before the jury. The instruction of the trial court that "there is no law requiring the defendant to place and keep in place a safety bar on the side of the car on which plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident which resulted in his injuries" is therefore not before us on this appeal except for the purpose indicated. Treating this question as one of those which we are called upon to determine for the purposes of a new trial (section 53, Code Civ. Proc.), we are of opinion that the instruction, as far as it went, correctly stated the law. There is neither statute nor ordinance, nor as we are advised, legal precedent, requring the defendant to place and keep in place a safety bar, either in the entrance where plaintiff was riding, or in entrances of this class generally. The instruction did not preclude the plaintiff from showing, or the jury from considering, whether or not it was negligence upon the part of defendant not to provide a safety bar under such circumstances as existed here. An appropriate instruction in this regard would no doubt have been given by the court had it been requested, but the trial court would not have been justified in saying as a matter of law that the absence of the safety bar in this case was negligence per se.

PEOPLE v. LEE. (Cr. 205.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 16, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 13, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court May 13, 1910.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1159*)—Appeal—Questions of Fact.

The question whether the testimony of a witness is improbable and in contradiction of the other testimony in the record is solely for the jury below, and the appellate court will not pass on their finding, where it is substantially supported.

2. Homicide (§ 228*)—Sufficiency of Evidence—Venue.

Evidence in a prosecution for homicide to prove venue held to show that the crime was committed in the county where the venue was laid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 228.*]

3. Witnesses (§ 268*)—Cross-Examination—Scope.

In a prosecution for homicide, a witness called by the prosecution testified that he was a police officer, that on the evening of the difficulty, and after he had heard of it, he saw accused. Held, that a question on cross-examination whether the deceased made any statement about not wanting to prosecute anybody, and that it was his own fault, was not proper cross-examination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 268.*]

4. Witnesses (§ 236*)—Examination—Questions.

In a prosecution for homicide, a witness for defendant testified that he was a police officer, that he was present shortly after deceased had been arrested, and was then asked if he heard deceased make any statement at the time about the encounter. Held, that the question as asked was too indefinite, and an objection to it was properly sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 236.*]

5. Criminal Law (§ 823*)—Instructions—"Manslaughter"—"Involuntary Manslaughter"—"Voluntary Manslaughter"—Error Cured by Other Instruction.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, the court instructed that manslaughter is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and that it is of two kinds—voluntary (that is, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion); involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act, which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. The instruction was in the language of Pen. Code, § 192. Held, that the portion of the section defining involuntary manslaughter might well have been omitted, but could not have misled the jury, as they were fully instructed elsewhere as to the rights of self-defense and of defendant to act upon appearances.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Benjamin B. Lee was convicted of manslaughter, and appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 99 Pac. 1110.

Wm. H. H. Hart (Joseph A. Brown, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was charged by the information with the crime of murder, and a verdict returned finding him guilty of manslaughter. He was thereupon sentenced to a term of five years in the state prison. He prosecutes this appeal from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and we have carefully examined the same, and in our opinion find it sufficient.

The evidence of the witness Lloyd is to the effect that the defendant upon meeting deceased, with whom he was not on good terms, called him a vile name, and about the same instant aimed his umbrella at him, hitting him in the eye with it, thus inflicting the wound that caused his death; that at the time of the assault the deceased had not made any hostile demonstration or any attempt to injure defendant. Defendant's counsel in his brief claims that the version of the matter as given by Lloyd was improbable and in contradiction of the other testimony in the record. This was a question solely for the jury, and it is not our province to pass upon the evidence where it is conflicting, and where it is sufficient in substance to support the verdict.

The evidence as to the venue is sufficient. The witnesses referred to the restaurant near which the difficulty occurred as being next to Laib's saloon on the west side of Fillmore street in the city and county of San Francisco. The deceased was taken to the Scobie Hospital in the city and county of San Francisco, where he died. It is sufficient if it is shown by the evidence taken all together that the crime was committed in the county where the venue is laid.

One Bell was called as a witness for the prosecution, and testified that he was a police officer, and that on the evening of the difficulty and after he had heard of it he saw the defendant. He was then cross-examined, and at near the conclusion of the cross-examination he was asked by defendant's counsel: "Q. Did McCarthy make any statement about he did not want to prosecute anybody—about it being his own fault?" The question was objected to as being irrelevant and incompetent and not proper cross-examination, and the court sustained the objection. The ruling was correct. The question was not proper cross-examination as the witness had not even mentioned the name of McCarthy in his direct examination. If the deceased had made a dying statement, or a statement which was part of the res gestæ, the defendant no doubt would have been allowed to prove it, but he could not prove such a statement by a cross-examination entirely outside of any statement made by the witness in direct examination. The witness was not called by the defendant as his own witness, nor questioned in any way or manner in regard to the matter.

One Mitchell was called by the defendant as his own witness, and testified that he was a police officer; that he was present shortly after McCarthy, the deceased, had been placed under arrest by Officer Bell. He was then asked if he heard deceased make any statement at the time about the encounter. The witness answered: "Yes, sir." The district attorney then, after the answer had been given and was of record, objected to the question upon the ground that it was immaterial and irrelevant, and the court sustained the objection. No motion was made to strike out the answer, and it was not stricken out. No further question was asked as to the particular time of the statement, or whether it was a dying statement, or was so closely connected in time with the difficulty as to be part of the res gestæ. The question as asked was too indefinite, and was not pointed to any fact which would show that the ruling was prejudicial. It should have been asked with sufficient statement of particulars to show that defendant was entitled to the statement. The mere fact that the witness heard deceased make a statement after the trouble is too indefinite to show that the statement was admissible, or that it would throw any light upon the case. It is perfectly consistent with the question asked to conclude that the statement was a mere narrative of a past transaction. It was not shown by the question that the statement desired was contemporaneous with the transaction or within so short a time afterwards as to preclude the idea of deliberate design.

It is argued that the court erred in instructing the jury as follows: "Manslaughter is not murder. It is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice. It is of two kinds—voluntary (that is, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion); involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection." The instruction is a literal copy of section 192 of the Penal Code. The portion of the section defining involuntary manslaughter might well have been omitted, but it could not have misled the jury as they were fully instructed in other portions of the charge as to the right of self-defense, and the right of a defendant to act upon appearances.

The case of People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 Pac. 435, is not in point. In that case the defendant's requested instruction related to the right of defendant to defend himself when in apparent danger of death or great bodily harm, and that, "if defendant acted in self-defense from real and honest convictions as to the character of the danger induced by the existence of reasonable circumstances, he should be acquitted, even though he was mistaken as to the extent of the danger." The trial court refused to give the requested instruction, but after giving it in substance added to it: "But the killing must be done with due caution and circumspection, and not in a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. For, if the killing, under such circumstances, was done with due caution and circumspection, or was done in a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, then the defendant is guilty of manslaughter." The court very properly held that the effect of the instruction was to tell the jury that a defendant could not kill his adversary in self-defense unless the killing was done with due caution and circumspection, and that the giving of such instruction under the facts of that case was prejudicial error. Further, it clearly appears that the instruction was erroneous in that case, where the jury was told that if the killing was done with due caution and circumspection, or was done in a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, "then the defendant is guilty of manslaughter." In the case at bar, the definition of involuntary manslaughter was not given in connection with any particular instruction or with the right of self-defense. The jury were not told that the defendant in the killing must have acted with due caution and circumspection even if acting in self-defense.

Other instructions are criticized, but the objections to them are not sufficiently plausible to merit further discussion. The court fully and fairly instructed the jury upon every phase of the case. Their verdict was for the least offense included within the information, and recommended the defendant to the mercy of the court. The court accordingly sentenced defendant to one-half the term to which he might have been sentenced under the verdict.

1. Sales (§ 447*)—Special Findings—Conflicting Findings.

In an action for damages by breach of an oral warranty that barley sold was of a certain kind, the jury found in answer to special interrogatories that defendant's agent, S., was absent in another city when the oral sale was made, but that the sale was made by him, and that J., another agent, did not make the sale, but received the price, but did not warrant the barley. Held, that the findings were conflicting.

2. Trial (§ 350*)—Special Interrogatories—Questions Submitted.

Where, in an action for damages by breach of an oral warranty made when barley was sold, that it was of a certain kind, the pleadings admitted the sale, but did not contain an admission as to which of defendant's agents made it, a special interrogatory as to who made it was proper, and the finding thereon is binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

3. Sales (§ 447*)—Action—Findings—Findings Inconsistent with General Verdict.

In an action for damages by breach of an oral warranty on the sale of barley that it was of a certain kind, a finding, implied from a general verdict for plaintiff, that a warranty was made, was overcome by special findings that the person whom plaintiff claimed made the warranty was not at the place of sale when it was made.

Percy R. Wilson and W. W. Middlecoff, for appellant. J. L. Murphey and Horace C. Head, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by plaintiff, claiming in his own right and as the assignee of two others, against the defendant corporation for damages for breach of warranty which plaintiff claims defendant made to the effect that certain seed barley purchased by plaintiff and his assignors from defendant was bearded barley, when, in fact, it was beardless barley. It is alleged that plaintiff planted the seed, but had no crop, and that the sole reason for the failure of the crop was that the seed was of the beardless variety, instead of the bearded variety, which latter would have yielded good returns. Defendant for answer admitted the sale of the barley, but denied the warranty. The only evidence of warranty was the testimony of plaintiff and his son that Harry Spencer, defendant's warehouse foreman, in a conversation represented and stated to plaintiff that the seed barley was bearded barley; that this conversation took place on December 7, 1906, at defendant's warehouse at Irvine at the time when the grain was bought and paid for. The case was tried before a jury, which rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for $2,000. It also returned certain special verdicts and findings of fact. By reason of the irreconcilable conflict and inconsistency between these special verdicts and findings and the general verdict, the judgment must be reversed.

The evidence of the Chormicles, father and son, was to the effect that they with Elmer Porter rented the land which was to be sowed to barley; that on December 7, 1906, they bought 15 tons of barley for which a check was given to Mr. Spencer whom they identified in the courtroom. The receipt for their payment was made out by J. C. Jenkins, who was present at the time, but their conversation was with the foreman, Spencer, who made warranty as to the kind and quality of the seed grain. Elmer Porter, who accompanied the Chormicles, testified that he took no part in the conversation, but saw the plaintiff talking with Jenkins and probably with some other person, upon December 7th, the day when the sale was made, the check in payment dated, and the receipt signed by Jenkins given. Spencer and Jenkins testified that Spencer was not at the warehouse upon that day, and, in answer to special interrogatories, the jury found that Spencer was absent from defendant's warehouse and in the city of Santa Ana on December 7, 1906, "when plaintiff and his associates were at said warehouse and purchased said seed barley"; that Jenkins did not make the sale of the seed barley, but took the check and gave the receipt for the same; that the sale of the barley was made by Spencer; that Jenkins did not warrant that the seed barley was bearded barley.

The result of these special findings is inextricable confusion. The jury finds that Jenkins made no warranty and did not sell the barley. It finds that Spencer sold the barley, but it finds that Spencer was not at the warehouse where the sale took place upon the day when it finds that the sale did take place. There is no suggestion in the evidence that the sale was upon any other day or that representations were made at any time prior to the time of the sale. If Spencer was in Santa Ana, miles away from the warehouse on the day of the sale and at the time of the sale which, it will be remembered was orally effected (according to the testimony of the plaintiff) with Spencer at the warehouse, certainly Spencer could not have made the sale, though the special verdict upon this point by the jury is that he did. Saving for these special findings in support of the judgment, it would be permissible to conclude that the plaintiff mistook Jenkins for Spencer, and that the sale was actually consummated with Jenkins who took the check and gave the receipt, but we are forbidden to indulge in this construction, not because plaintiff's testimony positively identifies Spencer as the person with whom the sale was made, but because the jury itself specifically finds in accordance with that testimony that Jenkins did not make the sale and that Spencer did. The pleadings admit the sale, but we cannot for this reason disregard the special finding that defendant's sale was made by Spencer, since the admissions of the pleadings do not declare who the particular agent of the defendant was through whom the sale was effected, and a special finding upon this matter was therefore pertinent and proper. Moreover, there is no special verdict to the effect that the warranty was ever made by any one. A finding to this effect is embraced in the general verdict, but the special verdicts are destructive of this finding, in that from them it appears that no such warranty could have been given, since Jenkins did not give it, and Spencer, who plaintiff says gave it, was not present at the time of the sale, which was the time when the warranty was given. By reason of this conflict and inconsistency between the general verdict and the special verdicts, it is impossible for this court upon the record to do other than decree that the judgment appealed from be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

STANTON v. HOTCHKISS. (S. F. 5,296.)

1. Taxation (§ 788*)—Tax Deeds—Effect as Evidence.

Tax deeds, if valid, are primary evidence of the regularity of the assessment upon which they are founded, equalization as required by law, levy of tax in accordance with law, nonpayment of tax, regular sales for such nonpayment, nonredemption from such sales, and that the person who executed the deed was the proper officer, under the express provisions of Pol. Code, § 3786, and conclusive evidence (except as against actual fraud) of the regularity of all other proceedings under the express provisions of section 3787.

2. Taxation (§ 779*)—Tax Deeds—Effect.

Valid tax deeds made to the state after failure to redeem, convey the absolute title to the property described therein, under the express provisions of Pol. Code, § 3787.

3. Evidence (§ 23*)—Judicial Notice—Government Surveys—Meridians.

Courts will take judicial notice of government surveys of the public lands, and that the meridian of Mt. Diablo is the only meridian for the townships and ranges in Fresno county.

4. Taxation (§ 764*)—Tax Deeds—Sufficiency of Description of Property.

A description of land in a tax deed as "lying and being within said county of Fresno, state of California, and described thus: "E. $\underline{2}$ of N. W. $\underline{4}$, Sec. 23, Twp. 16 S. R., 15 E.," is sufficient in view of the fact that there is only one meridian in that county, the description being clearly one by government subdivision, "E. $\underline{2}$" and "N. W. $\underline{4}$" plainly meaning "E. ½" and "N. W. ¼."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 764.*]

5. Taxation (§ 764*)—Tax Deeds—Sufficiency of Description of Property.

A description in a tax deed of land "situate, lying and being within the said County of Fresno, State of California, and described thus W. ½ of N. W. ¼ of Sec. 23–16–15," was sufficient, being a description by government subdivision, the term "16" denoting township and "15" range, it appearing that in the county named there is only one meridian for the townships and ranges, and that all townships are "south" and all ranges "east" of the base and meridian.

6. Taxation (§ 688*)—Certificate of Sale—Incorrect Date—Curative Act.

St. 1903, c. 59, declaring that all certificates of tax sales which failed to recite the correct date, or any date, when the right of redemption shall expire, or had expired, or recited an incorrect date when the state would be entitled to a deed, were thereby confirmed and legalized, cured the error in a previous certificate of sale to the state which incorrectly stated the date of expiration of time for redemption.

7. Taxation (§ 656*)—Certificate of Sale—Time.

Where the first publications of notice of tax sales were made on June 3d, and the sale was had on June 24th, there was a sufficient compliance with Pol. Code, § 3767, providing that a tax sale must not be less that 21 nor more than 28 days from the time of the first publication of the notice required thereby.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial in an action brought to quiet his title to a parcel of land in Fresno county, being, as described in the complaint, the N. W. ¼ of section 23, township 16 S., range 15 E., Mt. Diablo base and meridian. The judgment was in favor of defendant, decreeing that defendant was the owner in fee of all of said land, and that plaintiff has no interest therein.

It was stipulated on the trial that plaintiff was the owner of said property, except in so far as his title thereto had been divested by certain purported sales and conveyances of the same to the state of California by the tax collector of Fresno county for delinquent taxes, and that, if the state had acquired the title by reason of said sales and conveyances, the same had since vested by mesne conveyances in defendant. The case was thus made to depend upon the validity of two purported conveyances by the tax collector of Fresno county to the state of California, one claimed to be for the W. ½ of said N. W. ¼, and the other claimed to be for the E. ½ of said N. W. ¼. These conveyances were received in evidence over the objection of plaintiff, and except for the stipulation already referred to, constituted all of the evidence given on the trial. If valid, these deeds constituted primary evidence of the regularity of the assessment upon which they were founded, equalization as required by law, levy of tax in accordance with law, nonpayment of tax, regular sales for such nonpayment, nonredemption from such sales, and that the person who executed the deed was the proper officer (Pol. Code, § 3786), and conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings, and conveyed to the state the absolute title to the property described therein (Pol. Code, § 3787).

The principal objection by plaintiff to these deeds is that they do not sufficiently describe the property attempted to be conveyed. As to the deed of the E. ½ of said N. W. ¼ this objection does not appear to be insisted upon in the briefs. The description was: "lying and being within said county of Fresno, state of California, and described thus: E. $\underline{2}$ of N. W. $\underline{4}$ Sec. 23, Twp. 16 S. R., 15 E." Our courts take judicial notice of government surveys of the public lands (Rogers v. Cady, 104 Cal. 288, 291, 38 Pac. 81, 43 Am. St. Rep. 100), and also that the meridian of Mt. Diablo is the only meridian for the townships and ranges in the county named in the description, Fresno county (Harrington v. Goldsmith, 136 Cal. 168, 68 Pac. 594. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 238, 90 Pac. 936). The description set forth in this deed was plainly one by government subdivision. "E. $\underline{2}$" and "N. W. $\underline{4}$" plainly meant "east one-half" and "northwest one-quarter," and the other abbreviations were abbreviations in common use susceptible of but one meaning. Thus we have clearly designated the east one-half of the parcel described in the complaint.

The description in the deed of the west one-half is somewhat more meager, but under the circumstances we think sufficient. It was "situate, lying and being within the said county of Fresno, State of California, and described thus W. ½ of N. W. ¼ of Sec. 23–16–15." If this denotes a description by government subdivision, it is clearly sufficient. We know that it is an invariable rule to immediately follow the number of the section with the description of the township, and the description of the township with the description of the range. As said in regard to the former description, we must take judicial notice that the meridian of Mt. Diablo is the only meridian for townships and ranges in Fresno county. It is not denied by plaintiff that in Fresno county all townships are "south" and all ranges "east" of Mt. Diablo base and meridian. If that be the fact, we must likewise take judicial notice thereof. If it can be held that "16" denotes the township and "15" the range, we would thus have a sufficient description. We are of the opinion that the description can reasonably be taken in no other way than as one by government subdivision, and that the terms "16" and "15" clearly indicate respectively township and range. A case in point is that of McChesney v. City of Chicago, 173 Ill. 75, 50 N. E. 191, involving the question of the sufficiency of a description in an assessment proceeding, exactly like the one under consideration. It was "Sec. 23, 38, 14." The claim was that it could not be told what the figures "38, 14" mean or refer to. The court said: "There can be no doubt that the abbreviation 'Sec.' means 'section.' This being so, the figures which follow the designation of the section clearly refer to the township and range, as if the word 'township' was inserted before '38,' and the word 'range' before '14.' The court will take judicial notice of the meaning of such abbreviations as are here used." While we are not to be understood as commending such strenuous efforts at abbreviations in descriptions as were apparently made in this matter, we believe that the description sufficiently identified the property, and that the deed cannot be held ineffectual on the ground of want of proper description. The cases cited by learned counsel for plaintiff are not in point, for, as we view the description, it was, in the light of facts of which the courts must take judicial notice, certain and definite and sufficient in itself to identify the land.

It is claimed that the certificates of sale to the state specified the wrong date on which the state would be entitled to a deed; section 3776 of the Political Code prescribing that such certificate shall specify, among other things, when the state will be entitled to a deed, and that the deeds to the state failed to state the correct time when the right of redemption had expired as required by section 3785 of the Political Code. The certificate as to the W. ½ of the N. W. ¼, as recited in the deed, stated the day of sale, June 24, 1898, and that, unless the property was redeemed within five years from the date of sale, the purchaser would be entitled to a deed thereof on the 24th day of June, 1903. The deed recited that the time for redeeming said property expired on the 24th day of June, 1903. It is conceded by counsel for defendant that the date when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed was incorrectly stated by one day in the certificate. So assuming, the error in the certificate in this regard was cured by the curative act thereafter enacted. St. 1903, p. 63. See Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 239, 90 Pac. 936; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352. The recital in the deed made June 25, 1903, which was subsequent to the enactment of the curative act, was correct. June 24, 1903, was certainly the last day on which redemption could be effected within five years from the date of sale. While in the matter of the certificate and deed of the E. ½ of the N. W. ¼ the dates are different, the difference is not such as to affect the question and what we have said in regard to the other deed is equally applicable.

We do not think that it is established by allegations of the complaint undenied by the answer that the first installment of taxes for the year 1898 on the E. ½ of said N. W. ¼ was paid, or that the sale by the tax collector was for the second installment only. The record shows no evidence or stipulation to this effect. Hence it cannot be held that it has been shown that there was any error in the deed in its statement regarding nonpayment of the taxes. Both deeds sufficiently recite that the property was sold for delinquent taxes.

Section 3767 of the Political Code provides that the tax sale "must not be less than twenty-one nor more than twenty-eight days from the time of the first publication" of the notice required thereby. In the case of the W. ½ of such N. W. ¼, the first publication was on June 3, 1898, and the day fixed in the notice for the sale was June 24, 1898, the sale being made at that time. So, in the case of the E. ½, the first publication was on June 3, 1899, and the day fixed for the sale June 24, 1899. This was a sufficient compliance with the statute in each case. Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 238, 90 Pac. 936.

There is no other point requiring notice. The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

DAVIS et al. v. MARTIN et al. (Sac. 1,724.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—PRESUMPTIONS.

The court on appeal must reconcile the findings, if possible, and must, if reasonable, give them such an interpretation as will support the judgment.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 40*)—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—RIGHTS OF APPROPRIATOR.

Riparian rights which attach to land abutting on a stream are paramount to the rights of any appropriator.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 138*)—APPROPRIATION OF WATER—PRESCRIPTION.

Defendant owned a ranch bordering on a stream and used the waters thereof for irrigation by a ditch to carry the waters to portions of the ranch adjoining the ranch of a third person, who by the consent of defendant extended the ditch to his ranch and used a part of the water. Plaintiff, owning an adjacent ranch, extended the ditch to his lands, and used the waters with the consent of defendant. Defendant had complete control of the waters and of the ditch so far as it extended over his ranch, and plaintiff never used the waters under a claim of right. Held, that plaintiff did not acquire any right to the waters by prescription, notwithstanding a special finding that the waters were used by the interference of plaintiff.

SHAW, J. The controversy in this action involves the respective rights of the parties to the use of the waters of a stream known as "Martin Creek," which rises in the eastern part of the lands of the defendants Ann Martin and Brice M. Martin known as the "Martin Ranch," and flows westerly through said ranch to the Little Shasta river, having a maximum flow, during the irrigating season, of 300 miner's inches measured under a 4-inch pressure.

The plaintiff H. L. Davis is the owner of a tract of land containing something over 700 acres, situated about a mile south of the Martin ranch. The plaintiffs J. E. Beaudroit, Jennie Beaudroit, and Louisa Beaudroit own a tract of land adjoining that of Davis, containing about 380 acres. The defendants Churchill Company and Milton F. Martin own a large tract of land immediately south of and adjoining the Martin ranch aforesaid, and known as the "Walbridge Ranch." In 1852 R. M. Martin, the predecessor in interest of Ann Martin and Brice M. Martin, settled upon the lands known as the Martin ranch, and from and after the year 1856 he and his successors used the waters of the stream for the irrigation of said lands. For that purpose they constructed a ditch to carry the waters of the stream southerly therefrom to portions of the Martin ranch adjoining the said Walbridge ranch. Prior to 1859, by consent of the owners of the Martin ranch, the owners of the Walbridge ranch extended the ditch to said Walbridge ranch, and thereafter, with the consent and permission of the owners of the Martin ranch, they used a portion of the waters of said stream for the irrigation of portions of the said Walbridge ranch. In 1859, the owners of the Davis and Beaudroit ranches aforesaid extended the ditch from its termination on the Walbridge ranch southerly to the lands owned by them, and thereafter, at times when it was not used on either the Martin ranch or Walbridge ranch, they used some of the waters of said stream, usually one-fourth thereof, for the irrigation of their lands, obtaining it through and by means of said ditch, with the consent and permission of the owners of the Martin ranch. The plaintiffs Davis and the Beaudroits now claim a right by appropriation to a part of the waters of said stream, and the right to maintain the said ditch from the point of diversion upon the stream to their lands for the purpose of carrying to said land their portion of the waters of said stream. Defendants Ann Martin and Brice M. Martin deny this right and assert that Davis and the Beaudroits have no right or interest in the water. The owners of the Walbridge ranch seem to stand indifferent between the other two parties. Whatever claim they may have in and to the waters of the stream is derived from the owners of the Martin ranch, and between these two there is no controversy.

Although the action was equitable in its nature, the court called a jury, and submitted certain issues of fact, in the form of questions, which were answered by the jury, and adopted as part of the findings of the court. It was found that the ditch leading from the stream was extended from the Walbridge ranch to the lands of the plaintiffs about the year 1860, with the knowledge and consent of the owners of the Martin ranch, and that thereafter until the present action was begun, whenever the water could be obtained from the Martins, the ditch was used by the plaintiffs in common with the owners of the Walbridge ranch, but that the plaintiffs did not purchase or otherwise obtain any right from the defendants or their predecessors to enter upon the ditch, or to extend the same. It was further found that the use of the water of the said stream by the plaintiffs was with the consent and permission of the owners of the Martin ranch, and that during all this time the defendants Ann Martin and Brice M. Martin, and their predecessors in interest, owners of the Martin ranch, had complete control of the ranch, of the water of the stream, and of the ditch so far as it extended over said ranch, and used the same in common with plaintiffs, but that the plaintiffs did not make use of the waters of the stream under a claim of right. On these findings, judgment was given in favor of the defendants.

In addition to the facts above found, the court adopted a question put to the jury and an answer thereto, which are as follows: "32. To what extent, if any, have the plaintiffs, or their successors in interest, by act or word or otherwise, recognized or conceded the right of R. M. Martin and his successor in interest to use the waters of said Martin creek, in excess of 90 inches thereof, measured under a 4-inch pressure, on the Martin premises, and about 80 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, on the Walbridge premises? Answer. It was used by the consent of the Martins and by the interference of the plaintiffs." Plaintiffs claim that by this answer an adverse use was established sufficient to give them title to the waters in excess of the amounts mentioned. We do not think it has this effect. Findings are to be reconciled if possible, and they are to be given that interpretation which will support the judgment if such interpretation is reasonable. It is somewhat difficult to understand exactly what was meant by this question and answer. But it is clear that it cannot be construed as a contradiction of the other findings to the effect that the use of the water was by the consent and permission of the owners of the Martin ranch.

Upon these facts judgment was rightfully given against the plaintiffs. The Martin ranch abutted upon the stream and the riparian rights attaching to said lands by reason of this contiguity were paramount to the rights of any appropriator. Being the owners of the land bordering its banks, they could control its flow and prevent others from diverting it at any point on their lands. There was no evidence or finding that the plaintiffs ever obtained by purchase or grant from the owners of the Martin ranch any right whatever either to maintain the ditch over that ranch, or to use the water of the stream. They could not obtain it in any other way except by prescription or possibly by way of estoppel. No length of time of use by permission will gain a title or right by prescription. The facts are insufficient to constitute an estoppel, either as to the ditch or the water. In Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, Zucker's right to the water was not disputed. He had constructed a ditch to carry it through the land of Stoner, under a parol license from Stoner, at an expense of more than $7,000. The revocation of the license would cause Zucker to lose the use of the ditch. It was held that, after such expenditure upon the faith of a license which from its very nature was to be continuous in use it could not be revoked by the owner of the land over which the ditch passed. In this case the plaintiffs did not construct any ditch over the lands of the defendants. There was no license to make such ditch, and no license to use the water that was of a continuing nature. The finding is that the water was used by permission. The evidence tends to show that R. M. Martin, the owner of the Martin ranch, was a man of generous nature, and that at times when he did not find it necessary or convenient to use the water of the stream, he freely allowed it to run through his ditch across his land and permitted his neighbors, including the plaintiffs, to make use of it as they desired. There is no evidence that he ever promised that he would continue to allow this use, or that he would allow them to use it at all when the water was required on his own land. It does not appear that the plaintiffs were, by any act of the owners of the Martin ranch, given reason to believe that this permission was to be permanently continued, or to believe that it was or would be recognized as a right. There was some evidence tending to show that the plaintiffs and their predecessors always succeeded in obtaining some water from the creek whenever they desired it. It appears however, that application therefor was always made to the owners of the Martin ranch when they were using the water at the time, that sometimes the plaintiffs were refused any part of the water, and from all the evidence it is a fair inference that the plaintiffs and their predecessor always recognized the superior right of the Martins to the water and yielded to their wishes. In addition to this there is direct evidence that for many years immediately preceding the action the owners of the Martin ranch had exercised complete control over the diversion of the water from the stream, and that the only part thereof which the plaintiffs succeeded in obtaining for use on their land was such waste waters as the owners of the Martin ranch allowed to pass through the ditch beyond their boundaries.

The plaintiffs complain that the court refused to put to the jury certain interrogatories requested by the plaintiffs. No error can be predicated upon such a ruling in a case of this character. It was a suit in equity, and the jury was merely advisory. It was within the sound discretion of the court to put to the jury such questions as it saw fit. It was neither compelled to call a jury at the demand of the plaintiffs, nor to put to them any questions of fact for their determination. We find no prejudicial error in the record.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. BARTLEY. (Cr. 147.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1023*)—APPEAL—JUDGMENTS APPEALABLE—ORDER DENYING PROBATION.

The granting or denial of a petition for probation by one convicted of crime is entirely within the trial court's discretion, and an order denying probation is not appealable.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 111*)—ALLEGATIONS—PLEADING EXCEPTIONS—CAPACITY TO COMMIT CRIME—NECESSITY OF SHOWING.

The information need not negative the exception contained in Pen. Code, § 26, excepting children under 14 years old from the class of persons capable of committing crimes; the information on its face not preventing the application of the presumption that one intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 295–298; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS—DISCHARGE OF FINAL DUTY.

The presumption that the trial court did its duty in sentencing one convicted of burglary to state's prison would negative any inference in the record, which referred to accused both as a "boy" and a "man," that accused was not over 14 years old, so as to be incapable of committing crime.

4. BURGLARY (§ 19*)—INFORMATION—ALLEGATIONS—INTENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An information, alleging that accused feloniously and burglariously entered a building, with the intent then and there to commit the crime of larceny, sufficiently alleged the intent of accused to commit the offense charged.

7. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—FOUNDATION.

The rule that a witness must be shown a particular thing or statement of his claimed to be in the record, before acquiring his assent thereto, is not applicable, where the witness is asked whether he made a certain statement during a long examination by a question assuming that he did not make it, as a negative answer would avoid the necessity of producing the record; but, where the question assumes that the language stated therein was the testimony of the witness at the preliminary examination for the purpose of having him assent thereto, the witness should be permitted to see the transcript, or have his testimony on the preliminary examination read him from the record, and that course was properly pursued where the question to the witness was, "I believe you said in your direct examination before the committing magistrate that you went out and looked around?"

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 698*)—TRIAL—DUTY OF COURT.

It is the trial court's duty to see that the trial is conducted according to the rules of evidence and law, whether an objection is taken or not; so that the trial court properly called counsel's attention to the fact that certain questions evaded a former ruling of the court, though no objection was made to such question.

Charles Bartley was convicted of burglary, and, from the judgment of conviction and an order denying a petition for probation, he appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse P. Osborne, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Information for burglary. Verdict of guilty and sentence of five years in the state prison. There is an appeal from the judgment and also from an order denying defendant's petition for probation. The latter order rests entirely within the discretion of the trial court and is not made appealable by the statute.

The information, after stating the name, place, and date of the offense, charges that defendant did "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and burglariously enter a building located at No. 15 East Haley street in the city of Santa Barbara, which said building then and there belonged to one Frank Loustalot, and was then and there used by the said Frank Loustalot as a saloon and barroom, with the intent then and there to commit the crime of larceny," etc. In support of the demurrer to this information, it is urged that it is insufficient, in that it nowhere alleges that the person charged was a competent person or one capable of committing a crime; and that the intent alleged by the information is the intent of the owner of the building, and not the intent of the person charged with the offense. The first objection appears to be based upon the theory that, the defendant having been characterized as "a boy" by some of the witnesses at the trial, the information should have contained some allegation negativing the inference that he lacked capacity to commit crime. Section 26 of the Penal Code says: "All persons are capable of committing crimes, except" certain enumerated classes, among which are: "(1) Children under the age of fourteen," etc. It is not necessary to negative this exception in the information any more than it is each of the other seven classes of persons mentioned who, upon their want of capacity being shown, would be held not responsible for offenses committed by them. It is always presumed that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963), and upon the face of this information there is nothing to prevent the application of this presumption.

If the evidence could be considered in this connection, we would still be called upon to say that there is nothing in the record to show that the "boy" is a child under the age of 14 years. His age does not appear, and, while some witnesses speak of him as a boy, he is also mentioned as a man. And the presumption that the trial court did its duty in sending him to state's prison would negative any inference from the record that he was not over 14 years of age.

There is nothing in the other point raised on the demurrer to the complaint; the intent is sufficiently clear.

The record gives no support to appellant's objection to the trial court's ruling denying his motion for a continuance. No showing by affidavit was made, and upon the statement by the district attorney that the witness, to procure whose attendance the continuance was sought, was a fugitive from justice, counsel for defendant expressed his willingness to proceed without the witness. The record does not sustain the contention of appellant that the court would not permit him to file an affidavit making a showing in this regard.

The verdict is fully supported by the evidence in the record. It is unnecessary to state either the facts or a summary of them. Every element of burglary in the first degree was established. If the use of the term "boy" by counsel and some of the witnesses could be considered as evidence tending to show that defendant had not reached the age at which he could be held legally responsible for crime, the use of the term "man" would be equally available to show the contrary, and thus there would be a substantial conflict upon this issue, which the verdict of the jury has settled, against appellant's contention, beyond disturbance by this court.

The rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence which are complained of were not erroneous. The proper practice when cross-examining a witness by asking him what his testimony was upon a former trial of the cause, or at the preliminary examination upon a felony charge, is well established. Where an attempt is made to put into the witness' mouth language which is stated to be his testimony given at the preliminary examination for the purpose of having him assent thereto, it is only fair and just to the witness that he should be permitted to see the transcript, or have the testimony read to him from the record, if there be such a record at hand, and the court properly required this to be done in this case. The distinction between the question presented here and that passed upon by the Supreme Court in People v. Hart, 153 Cal. 261, 94 Pac. 1042, is clear and evident. The questions to which objections of the people were sustained in that case were distinguished by the court as merely preliminary, but they were also of such a character that they could not have been effectively and conveniently asked by reading the record of the testimony of the witness given at the preliminary examination. In the case before us the question is: "Now, Mr. Brusatori, I believe you said in your direct examination before the committing magistrate that you went out and looked around?" In the Hart Case, after the witness had testified on direct examination that a certain statement had been made, he was asked on cross-examination: "You did not make this statement on the preliminary examination, did you?" An objection to this being sustained, he was asked: "Why did you not make this statement on the preliminary examination?" And again: "In your testimony on the preliminary examination did you then and there tell all you knew about the case?" The rule requiring that a witness must be shown a particular thing claimed to be in the record before assenting to its presence cannot, for reasons of convenience, be applied where the witness is called upon to remember whether or not he made a particular statement during the course of a lengthy examination, which makes a voluminous record, which statement the question assumes not to be in the record. In the latter instance a negative answer, that desired and expected by the cross-examiner, would avoid the necessity of introducing the entire record for the purpose of showing that no such testimony had been given by the witness on the former occasion. This rule in relation to the establishing of a negative is well recognized. The ruling of the court upon this matter might well have been assumed to be acquiesced in by appellant, were it not for the preservation of the objection by the amendment to section 647, Code Civ. Proc., made in 1909 (St. 1909, c. 355). This view is strengthened by the pursuit of the information sought to be elicited by the question by the adoption of the course suggested by the court, which rendered the ruling without prejudice.

It was not improper for the trial judge to call the attention of counsel for defendant to the fact that his questions were an evasion of a former ruling of the court where the district attorney made no objection. It is the duty of a judge to see that a trial is conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence and law as these appear to him, whether counsel object or not. The trial of a cause is not to be conducted as if it were the playing of a game by the parties and their attorneys, at which the judge sits to arbitrate disputed questions of law or practice only when called upon by one or the other or both of the parties, but as an administration of the law for the purpose of securing a hearing on the merits of the cause, and it is the duty of the judge trying the cause to assume the directing hand whenever this end is not being accomplished, assuming to act, however, only within his constitutional province of stating the testimony and declaring the law. There was no intimation in the conduct of the judge in this cause that could in any manner have conveyed to the jury that he had an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant.

We see nothing in the other assignments of error, in relation to the admission and rejection of evidence, prejudicial to the defendant. The examination of the witnesses by the district attorney assigned as misconduct was within the scope of proper examination in the case of the sheriff, and of proper cross-examination in the case of the witness McCaughey. A witness who testifies to the general reputation of a defendant may be asked on cross-examination as to his or her knowledge of particular instances and statements made by the witness relating to particular acts of the defendant tending to discredit the opinion given. Where such questions are asked in good faith by a district attorney, there is no misconduct, and such was the case here.

There being no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 10, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 4, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court, May 9, 1910.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 76*) — STOCKHOLDERS — CONTRACT—ACCEPTANCE.

Any agreement showing an intention to become a stockholder in a corporation is sufficient, though there is no formal agreement; and, where a number of persons already stockholders agree among themselves in writing to take up the unissued stock of a corporation, pursuant to a proposal of the board of directors to issue the stock to them on certain terms, the delivery of the agreement to the secretary of the corporation constituted an acceptance of the proposal of the board, so as to make such persons stockholders as to the unissued stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 76*)—SUBSCRIPTION FOR STOCK—MODIFICATION.

Where certain stockholders agreed to take up the unissued stock of a corporation, under an agreement by which they were to receive corporate bonds as a bonus, a subsequent resolution of such stockholders to receive corporate notes instead of the bonds was a modification of the subscription agreement by consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 94*)—STOCKHOLDERS—EXISTENCE OF RELATION.

Payment for corporate stock and the voluntary acceptance of bonus notes of the corporation, which were given to induce the subscription, made the persons paying therefor and accepting the notes stockholders, though no stock certificates were issued.

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 81*)—SUBSCRIPTION FOR STOCK—WAIVER OF PROVISIONS.

Even if an agreement between the directors of a corporation and certain persons for the issuance of bonus bonds to induce such persons to purchase stock was a condition precedent to the enforcement of the agreement to take the stock, the voluntary acceptance of corporate notes in lieu of the bonds waived such condition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 243*) — LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS — STATUTORY LIABILITY — "OWNER"—"STOCKHOLDER."

Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, make each stockholder of a corporation individually liable for such proportion of its debts incurred while he was a stockholder as the shares owned by him bear to the whole of the subscribed shares of the corporation, and the Code section also provides that the term "stockholder" as used therein applies, not only to such as appear by the corporate books to be such, but to every equitable owner of stock though it is on the books in another's name. Const. art. 12, § 14, requires books to be kept by the corporation wherein shall be recorded the amount of the capital stock subscribed, the names of the owners, and the amount of stock owned by each. Held, that the stockholders were not bound to see that not only their own names, but also the names of all other stockholders, were entered on the books as such, and that it would not be presumed that the corporation had entered the names of all stockholders on its books, so as to prevent a stockholder from showing other subscriptions than those shown by the corporate books, when sued on his statutory liability under section 322, so as to reduce the amount of such liability; the terms "owner" and "stockholder" in the statute including the real owner, though his name does not appear on the corporate books as owner.

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 243*)—STATUTORY LIABILITY—LIABILITY OF ONE NOT OWNER—GROUNDS OF LIABILITY—ESTOPPEL.

The statutory liability of one not the real owner of stock, but who appears on the corporate books as an owner, is based upon his estoppel to deny ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 157*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — CORPORATE RECORDS — PROCEEDINGS — ABSENCE OF MINUTES.

W. G. Van Pelt and Gray, Barker, Bowen, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, for appellant. W. S. Wright, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to enforce defendant's statutory liability as a stockholder of the Brand Manufacturing Company, a corporation, for the value of certain lumber and building materials sold and delivered to said corporation by plaintiff. The only point in controversy is the extent of defendant's liability. Plaintiff contends that at the time of the transaction had with the Brand Manufacturing Company only 530 shares of its authorized capital stock of $100,000 had been issued or sold, of which number defendant was the owner of 105 shares of the par value of $100 each, thus fixing the defendant's statutory liability at $^{105}/_{530}$ of the amount due plaintiff from the corporation. On the other hand, defendant contends that at the time the corporation became indebted to plaintiff the outstanding and subscribed capital stock consisted of 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, of which he owned 135 shares, thus making the amount for which he was liable $^{135}/_{1000}$ of such indebtedness, instead of $^{105}/_{530}$, as contended for by plaintiff. The court rendered judgment in accordance with the contention of defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, from which it appears the authorized capital of the corporation was $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, and that at the time the indebtedness was created, to wit, January 1, 1907, the journal, ledger, and stock book of the corporation showed that certificates for 530 shares of such stock, and no more, had been issued, and that defendant, as shown by said books, was the owner and holder of 105 shares thereof, and no more; that the minute book of the Brand Manufacturing Company disclosed that during the summer of 1906 the board of directors discussed plans for disposing of the unissued stock of the corporation, and at a meeting of the board held on August 29, 1906, decided that all the treasury stock should be sold, and offered the same for sale to its stockholders. On December 5, 1906, at a meeting of the board of directors, it was proposed to create a bonded indebtedness of $50,000, out of which there should be issued to the subscribers for the 470 shares of the unissued stock of the corporation bonds in an amount equal to the par value of the stock for which they subscribed; that thereupon, on December 8, 1906, defendant and others agreed among themselves in writing to take the entire amount of unissued treasury stock of 470 shares upon the terms and conditions of said proposal, each subscribing for the number of shares set opposite his respective name; defendant subscribing for 30 shares of the stock. This agreement was delivered to the secretary of the company, and at a meeting held on December 8th the board of directors agreed that the subscribers, on paying the money under their subscriptions, should receive interim notes from the company to hold until the bonds could be finally printed and delivered, but no minute entry of this agreement appears in the minute book. Defendant subscribed for 30 shares of the stock, and he and the other signers of the agreement in due course paid the amount of their respective subscriptions, covering the entire 470 shares of stock, and part of them, including defendant, received the interim notes referred to covering the amount of their respective subscriptions, but no certificates of stock were ever issued. On May 14, 1907, at a meeting of the board of directors, it was resolved that the company go into liquidation, and at a subsequent meeting of the stockholders of the company, held on May 24, 1907, at which all of the subscribers of the 470 shares of stock, together with two-thirds of the old stockholders, were present, it was resolved by said stockholders that, instead of issuing the bonds authorized by the board of directors at the meeting held on December 5, 1906, the president and secretary be authorized and directed to issue the company's notes payable on demand to such stockholders as had not already received notes to cover cash advanced by them to the company upon subscriptions for stock for which they had expected the company's bonds, the said notes to be dated as of even date with the dates on which such subscribers had paid in the amounts of their subscriptions to the stock of said company, which notes were issued and delivered in accordance with such resolution; and it was further unanimously resolved that said meeting ratify and confirm all the acts of the board of directors done subsequent to the last stockholders' meeting. Subsequently, the company was by its creditors thrown into bankruptcy, which proceedings are still pending.

Appellant contends that the corporation was not a party to the agreement signed by defendant and others, who "agreed together to join in taking up the treasury stock of the corporation," upon the understanding that they should have a bonus in 7 per cent. bonds of the corporation. Delivery to the secretary of the company of the agreement whereby the subscribers agreed to take the 470 shares of stock constituted an acceptance of the proposal made by the board of directors. The substitution of notes of the corporation, which the subscribers accepted in lieu of bonds, was to such extent a modification of the agreement by consent. As thus modified, the contract was fully executed. No formal contract is required to constitute one a stockholder in a corporation. "Any agreement by which a person shows an intention to become a stockholder is sufficient." Cook on Corporations, § 52. In this case, disregarding the agreement, payment for the stock and voluntary acceptance of the bonus agreed upon in the form of notes executed and delivered by the corporation was clearly sufficient, in the absence of other objection, to constitute defendant and his associates owners of the shares of stock to the extent of their respective subscriptions. Conceding the subscription to have been conditional upon the issuance of the bonds, as claimed by appellant, and that without complying with the condition the corporation could not have enforced the contract, nevertheless, this condition was waived by the voluntary acceptance of the notes in lieu of the proposed bonds.

No entry appears in the books of the corporation showing defendant to be the holder of these 30 shares of stock, for which he had subscribed and paid the purchase price thereof. Appellant contends that by reason of this fact defendant cannot as regards these shares be deemed a stockholder in the company; in other words, that we must indulge in the conclusive presumption that the corporation complied with the provisions of section 14, art. 12, of the Constitution, which requires that books be kept by the corporation wherein "shall be recorded the amount of capital stock subscribed and by whom," together with "the names of the owners of its capital stock and the amount owned by them respectively," and that the statutory liability of a stockholder must be based upon the ownership and amount of capital stock subscribed as appears from the entries in the books. We find no authority in support of this position. It is contrary to section 3, art. 12, of the Constitution, and in direct conflict with the provisions of section 322, Civ. Code, which provides: "Each stockholder of a corporation is individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation. * * * The term stockholder, as used in this section, applies not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, although the same appears on the books in the name of another." Neither section 3, art. 12, nor said section 322, limits the ownership of shares of stock to one whose name appears upon the books of the corporation as the owner thereof. The Constitution (section 14, art. 12) imposes upon a corporation the duty of entering in books kept for that purpose the amount of its subscribed capital stock, by whom subscribed, the names of the owners of its stock, and number of shares owned by them, respectively. Failure to perform such duty by the corporation, however, cannot be imputed to the owner of the stock, who has a right to assume that the proper book entries are made. No duty devolves upon the purchaser of stock to see that, not only his name, but the names of all other purchasers, together with the number of shares owned by them, respectively, are entered in the corporate books. Hence, in the absence of facts constituting an estoppel—and none appears here—his liability is unaffected by such neglect of duty on the part of the corporation. The term "stockholder" or "owner," as used in the statute, is not confined to one who appears upon the books of the corporation as such, but to the real owner, notwithstanding the fact that the stock as shown by the books appears in the name of another. While the latter, though not the owner may be required to respond to a creditor of the corporation, such liability is based, not upon ownership, but upon grounds of estoppel to deny ownership. O'Connor v. Witherly, 111 Cal. 523, 44 Pac. 227; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158; Abbott v. Jack, 136 Cal. 510, 69 Pac. 257; Hurlburt v. Arthur, 140 Cal. 103, 73 Pac. 734, 98 Am. St. Rep. 17. To hold that a creditor of a corporation cannot recover from an owner of stock upon a statutory liability because the corporation has neglected to make the proper book entries of his holdings, showing him to be a stockholder, would nullify the provisions of both the Constitution and statute. This being true, then, in the absence of acts constituting an estoppel, the converse of the rule must likewise be true, namely, that where the corporate books fail to disclose an increased subscription of stock, by reason of which increase (whether his own subscription or that of another, or both) the stockholder's liability, as in the case at bar, is less than it would otherwise be, he is entitled to establish such fact and insist upon his statutory liability being fixed upon such basis.

Appellant has cited a number of cases in support of its contention. An examination of these cases will disclose the fact that the creditor was pursuing one whose name appeared upon the books of the corporation as a stockholder, but who denied liability upon the ground that he was not the owner of the stock, and where recovery was had it was based upon grounds of estoppel. See cases above cited. And where recovery was denied against one who was not in fact the owner, but appeared upon the books to be a stockholder, it was due to a finding that he was not guilty of acts, either of omission or commission, which would, as against the creditor of the corporation, estop him from denying ownership. Welch v. Gillelen, 147 Cal. 571, 82 Pac. 248; Shattuck v. Gillelen, 154 Cal. 779, 99 Pac. 348.

The fact that no stock was issued to defendant and the other subscribers is immaterial. Issuance of the certificates of stock is not necessary to constitute one a stockholder or owner of shares in a corporation. Garretson v. Crude Oil Co., 146 Cal. 188, 79 Pac. 838; California S. Hotel Co. v. Callender, 94 Cal. 120, 29 Pac. 859, 28 Am. St. Rep. 99; Pacific Fruit Co. v. Coon, 107 Cal. 447, 452, 40 Pac. 542. It is likewise immaterial that the minutes failed to disclose the action of the board taken in regard to certain matters. At most, the minutes of the proceedings of the board of directors are prima facie evidence only of its acts. In the absence of minute entry of its proceedings they may be proved by parol evidence. The agreed statement of facts upon which the case was submitted shows the amount of the subscribed capital stock of the corporation to have been $100,000 divided into 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, of which defendant was the owner of 135 shares.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. Judgment (§ 279*)—Judgment Roll—Contents—Notice of Appearance.

The notice of appearance which defendant may give to plaintiff or which his attorney may give, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, is no part of the judgment roll defined by section 670.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 664*) — Record — Judgment Roll.

The failure to serve a defendant with a summons and the absence of an answer, demurrer, or other appearance on his part, all of which appears from the judgment roll, is not inconsistent with the recital in the judgment that he appeared in one of the other modes authorized by law, evidence of which is no part of the judgment roll, and on appeal by defendant on the judgment roll alone the recital in the judgment must be taken as at least prima facie true, so that the judgment will not be reversed for want of jurisdiction over the person of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 664.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 934*) — Record — Presumptions.

All presumptions on appeal are in favor of the correctness of the judgment, and, where a recital in the judgment on appeal on the judgment roll alone finds support in other portions of the record which under any condition of facts could exist, it will be presumed, in the absence of any contradictory showing, that such condition of facts existed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3777–3781; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 907*) — Record — Presumptions.

Where the trial court found that defendant appeared by attorney, the court on appeal on the judgment roll alone must presume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the evidence supported the finding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2911–2916, 3673, 3674, 3676, 3678; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

5. Judgment (§ 120*)—Default Judgment—Appearance of Defendant.

Where the court obtained jurisdiction of the person of defendant by reason of his appearance, no formal entry of his default was necessary to enable it to render judgment against him.

6. Judgment (§ 118*)—Default Judgment—Extent of Relief.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, providing that the relief granted to plaintiff, where there is no answer, cannot exceed that which he shall have demanded in his complaint, a recovery against a defendant who appears by attorney, but who does not answer, cannot exceed the sum prayed for in the complaint.

7. Judgment (§ 118*)—Default Judgment—Extent of Relief.

Where a defendant by his answer raises no issue as to the sum claimed to be due and unpaid in an action on a note, the recovery cannot exceed the sum prayed for in the complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Watkins & Blodget, for appellants. T. M. Stewart and Hester, Merrill & Craig, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover from defendants on their joint and several promissory note. The appeal is from a judgment rendered against both defendants, and is prosecuted upon the judgment roll alone.

On behalf of appellant Tungate, it is contended that the judgment as to him should be reversed for the reason that it does not appear that any summons was ever issued or served upon him; nor does the judgment roll disclose any answer, demurrer, or other appearance filed on his part. The judgment, however, recites that defendant Tungate appeared by Watkins & Blodget, as attorneys for himself and his codefendant, Caldwell. Section 1014, Code Civ. Proc., provides that "a defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." While under the provisions of section 670, Code Civ. Proc., his answer or demurrer is made a part of the judgment roll, the notice of appearance which he may give to plaintiff, or which his attorney is authorized to give under the provisions of section 1014, supra, constitutes no part of such roll; hence, failure to serve Tungate with a summons, and the absence of an answer, demurrer, or other appearance on his part, all of which appears from the judgment roll, is not inconsistent with the fact recited in the judgment that he did appear in one of the other modes authorized by law, evidence of which, under the statute, constitutes no part of the judgment roll. "The Code does not require such appearance to be made part of the judgment roll; and as appellant appeals upon the judgment roll alone, which shows nothing contradictory of or inconsistent with said recital (which was that defendant regularly appeared in said action by ——— an attorney of the court), it must be taken as at least prima facie true." Lyons v. Roach, 84 Cal. 29, 23 Pac. 1026. In the case of Sichler v.

Look, 93 Cal. 606, 29 Pac. 221, the court, in discussing a like question, says: "The recitals in a judgment are the court's record of its own acts, and although upon a direct appeal the jurisdiction of the court is not to be established by its mere assertion in the judgment that it had acquired jurisdiction, yet if such recital finds support in other portions of the record, which under any condition of facts could exist, it will be presumed, in the absence of any contradictory showing, that such condition of facts existed." All presumptions are in favor of the correctness of the judgment. Parker v. Altschul, 60 Cal. 380. While defendant claims the recital of appearance is not sustained by the facts, he offers nothing in contradiction of the fact so recited, other than the judgment roll, which, as we have seen, is insufficient for the reason that the Code does not require the fact of defendant's appearance to be shown in such roll. Since the court has found that he did appear by attorney, we must presume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the evidence presented to the court fully supports such finding. See, also, In re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 600, 36 Pac. 11. In the case of Weeks v. Gold Mining Co., 73 Cal. 599, 15 Pac. 302, and other cases cited by appellant, the judgment attacked did not contain a recital of appearance by defendant, but recitals of facts required to be shown by the judgment roll, which recitals were contradicted by the facts thus shown.

If the judgment against Tungate was in fact rendered without jurisdiction of the person, he is, of course, entitled to relief therefrom, but not in this proceeding nor upon the record before us.

The court having obtained jurisdiction of the person of defendant by reason of his appearance, no formal entry of his default was necessary to enable it to render judgment against him. Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 455; Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Matthai, 116 Cal. 424, 48 Pac. 370.

On behalf of appellant Caldwell, it is claimed that, as the judgment is against both himself and Tungate, it must, if reversed as to the latter, fail also as to him. The foregoing views render it unnecessary to discuss his rights from such standpoint.

The note sued upon was for the sum of $1,000, bearing interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from date, payable semiannually, and dated February 1, 1907. The complaint alleges: "That said promissory note has not been paid, nor any part thereof, or the interest thereon, save and excepting the sum of $50; that there is now due, owing, and unpaid to the said plaintiff on said promissory note the whole of the principal sum of $1,000, United States gold coin, together with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1908." The prayer of the complaint follows this allegation, praying for judgment for $1,000 and interest at 10 per cent. per annum from April 1, 1908. No issue was raised by either defendant as to the amount alleged to be due. In no event could recovery against Tungate exceed the sum prayed for in the complaint. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc. The allegation of the complaint as to the amount unpaid on the note is somewhat ambiguous. Construing it most strongly against the pleader, the sum alleged to be unpaid upon the note is $1,000, with interest from April 1, 1908, for which plaintiff prays judgment. Since defendant by his answer raised no issue as to the sum claimed to be due and unpaid, we think the rule applicable to one not answering is likewise applicable to one admitting such allegation. The court, however, in rendering judgment, computed interest from August 1, 1907, instead of from April 1, 1908. To the extent of the interest accruing prior to April 1, 1908, amounting to $73.55, the judgment is erroneous.

It is therefore ordered that upon the going down of the remittitur the trial court modify the judgment by deducting therefrom as of the date of its rendition, the sum of $73.55, and as thus modified the judgment is affirmed. It is further ordered that appellants recover costs of this appeal.

FOSTER v. BEAU DE ZART. (Civ. 766.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1010*)—Review—Findings.

2. Bills and Notes (§ 92*)—Consideration—Gaming Contracts.

Plaintiff having in good faith advanced money to defendant with which to complete a contract for purchase of stock with a third person, his recovery on a note given for the loan secured by the stock could not be defeated on the ground that the consideration therefor was a gaming contract simply because plaintiff had a general knowledge that the contract between defendant and the third person was for a sale upon margin.

3. Bills and Notes (§ 397*)—Demand Notes—Necessity for Demand Before Bringing Suit.

Demand of payment of a note payable on demand before suing thereon is not required where it appears that it would have been unavailing, and hence would not be required where the maker before suit refused payment and demanded return of the stock deposited as collateral with the note, together with payments made.

Action by E. K. Foster against Fred W. Beau de Zart. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. H. C. Millsap, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The action was one to recover the unpaid balance upon a promissory note executed by defendant to plaintiff. Defendant, admitting the execution of the note, alleged that there was no consideration therefor, and that the same was executed by defendant to plaintiff to secure certain margins on stocks. By way of cross-complaint defendant set up the purchase from plaintiff by defendant of 34,000 shares of mining stock on a margin, and that, pursuant to an agreement that it would be necessary for defendant to pay additional margins from time to time, the note set out in the complaint was executed and 63,500 shares of mining stock were deposited with plaintiff as collateral thereto, that plaintiff keeps and retains said stock, notwithstanding the invalidity of the note and of the transaction and refuses to surrender the same upon demand, and he prays judgment for the value of such stock. In various other separate counts of the cross-complaint defendant sets up the payment by him to plaintiff of various sums by way of margins upon the stock transaction between them, and asks for judgment for the amount of such margin payments. Issue is tendered by the plaintiff on all the matters set out in the cross-complaint.

Upon the trial the court found that the note was executed for a valuable consideration; that it was not executed or delivered to secure the payment of any margin or margins on stock, but, on the contrary, was executed in consideration of money loaned; that no sums by way of margin or margins were ever paid by defendant to plaintiff; that no stock or stocks were deposited as security by defendant for any margin or margins; that, while the stock set forth was delivered by defendant to plaintiff as collateral security for the note, plaintiff under the terms of the note, before commencement of the action, sold the stock so hypothecated as security; and that the sum remaining as the proceeds of said sale after payment of costs of sale was $1,365.25 and no more, which amount was duly credited upon said note; that the price at which such stock was sold was the highest market value of said stock on said date; that the stock mentioned in the cross-complaint had not been converted by plaintiff; and that a balance of $1,771.30 remained unpaid upon said note, for which sum, with attorney's fees amounting to $171.80, judgment was rendered. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is prosecuted from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

It appears from the statement that defendant had bought from one Blagge, a broker, on margin certain shares of stock and had paid to Blagge certain sums by way of margin upon such purchase, and that the amount of $2,957.55 remained unpaid on account of the stock purchased. Plaintiff testifies that he knew nothing of the details of the purchase, but did know in a general way that the stock had been purchased upon margins and had seen a memorandum showing the various amounts paid to Blagge; that defendant represented to plaintiff that it would be necessary for him to have the amount mentioned in the note, which was then owing to Blagge, in order to take up the stock. Plaintiff agreed with defendant that if he would deposit the stock so purchased, with certain other stock as collateral, he would advance the amount of money necessary to take up the stock from Blagge. Pursuant to this, plaintiff did advance the amount of money mentioned in the promissory note, the stock was taken up, and the transaction with Blagge closed. Plaintiff actually paid out the sum mentioned in the note on account of the delivery of the stock to him; plaintiff testifying that the whole transaction was in good faith and a bona fide loan of the amount mentioned in the promissory note to defendant to enable him thus to complete the purchase of the stock so originally purchased upon margin. From this it is claimed by appellant that the contract between plaintiff and defendant was founded on an illegal consideration, that it was a gambling contract, and no recovery can be had under it, and in this connection he attacks the testimony of plaintiff, which is uncontradicted, as being insufficient to support the finding of the court. As to this last proposition, it is sufficient to say that there is some testimony in the record warranting the finding of the court, and the same will therefore be sustained. We are not of the opinion that, under the facts disclosed, the transaction between plaintiff and defendant is prohibited by statute, or that the same may be regarded as a gambling contract. Plaintiff having in good faith advanced to defendant money with which to complete the contract for the purchase of the stock, recovery of such advancement could not be defeated simply for the reason that plaintiff had a general knowledge of the marginal character of the contract as between defendant and the broker. There is nothing in the record indicating any irregularity or invalidity of the contract entered into between plaintiff and defendant.

The note set out in the complaint was payable on demand, and it is claimed that there is no evidence in the record showing a demand before suit was brought. There is evidence in the record, however, tending to show that, before the suit was brought, Beau de Zart refused payment of the note and demanded a return of the stock with the money he had paid on it. Demand is not required when it appears that it would have been unavailing. In addition to this, plaintiff testifies that he did make a demand.

There is in the record a point sought to be made with relation to the regularity of an assignment of the note by plaintiff to one Wagy and by Wagy back to plaintiff. There is sufficient in the record to warrant the finding of the court that such assignments were made, and that plaintiff was the holder and owner of the note at the time suit was brought.

There was no error in the court rendering judgment for interest. O'Neil v. Magner, 81 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 876, 15 Am. St. Rep. 88.

We see no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Action by William M. Aydelotte against I. T. Bloom. From a judgment denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh R. Ostrom, for appellant. Wm. M. Aydelotte, in pro. per. (A. H. Jarman, of counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered as an attorney at law. The case was tried with a jury, and in accordance with its verdict a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the sum of $600. This appeal is from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The evidence upon both sides presented has been read and considered. Very briefly, the facts are as follows: The plaintiff testified that he rendered the defendant certain services as an attorney at law; that the reasonable compensation for such services was $1,000. He rendered a bill, however, for $750, and sued for this amount. His testimony as to the services rendered and as to their value was corroborated. The defendant did not dispute that the plaintiff had rendered the services, but claimed that they were performed, not as an attorney at law, but as an expert bookkeeper, and that they were not so extensive as claimed by plaintiff, and that the reasonable value of the same was $265, and introduced evidence to that effect.

It thus appears that there is a conflict in the evidence; and, as there is evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury, this court, as has been repeatedly held, will not interfere. Berger v. Horlock, 10 Cal. App. 352, 101 Pac. 918; Ernest v. McCauley, 155 Cal. 739, 102 Pac. 924. In the case of Long v. Saufley, 89 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 902, it was said: "This court has repeatedly held that the decision of the trial court upon conflicting evidence is conclusive, and that, when that court upon a motion for a new trial has refused to set aside such decision, this court will not reverse or even review its action."

One of plaintiff's witnesses, an attorney at law, in testifying as to what in his opinion plaintiff's services were reasonably worth, said: "I should say he should be entitled to a retainer of $500, and his services should be worth in addition to that from $700 or $750 to $1,000. I should say that he should have $1,250 for those services including the retainer." Defendant objected to that part of the answer referring to the retainer, and now claims that, as the plaintiff did not sue for or demand a retainer, the testimony was erroneously admitted. It is true that the plaintiff does not in his complaint in terms mention a retaining fee, but merely alleges that the amount sought to be recovered is the reasonable value of the services rendered; but it has been decided that upon such an allegation an attorney may in proving such value include therein the amount of a reasonable retaining fee. Knight v. Russ, 77 Cal. 410, 19 Pac. 698; Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 186, 76 Pac. 956. In the former case the court said: "When an action is brought to recover the value of an attorney's services, the retainer, it not having been paid, constitutes a part of the plaintiff's cause of action; but it is not necessary to set forth the items of the account in the complaint. It is sufficient to state the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language, and if the defendant desires further particulars he may call for them, and they must be given to him within a reasonable time. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 426, 454. At the trial, if an issue has been tendered as to the value of the services, their value must be proved, and that will include the value of the retainer." In the case at bar, on the demand of defendant, a bill of particulars was furnished, which included various items of disbursements, and one item detailing the various services rendered, and making one lumping charge for the whole of those services. No further bill of particulars was called for. It was in proving the value of the services detailed in this last-mentioned item that the testimony was received as to the amount of a reasonable retaining fee; and we think, under the authority of the two cases last cited, that the evidence was properly received.

FRANK CO. v. LEOPOLD & FERRON CO.

(Civ. 750.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—PRESUMPTIONS—VALIDITY OF ORDER OF COURT.

Where the record on appeal does not disclose when a default judgment was entered, it will be assumed as against appellant, on whom the burden of showing error lies, and who contends that a motion to vacate the judgment came too late to permit the use of proof aliunde, the judgment roll to show its invalidity for want of jurisdiction over defendant, in that the motion was made more than six months after the judgment was taken, and in support of the order of the court granting the motion, that the entry was within six months preceding the notice of motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3778; Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 153*) — VACATION — VOID JUDGMENT—TIME.

The right to have a void judgment vacated exists independent of statute, and, while a motion to vacate a void judgment, the invalidity of which must be shown by extrinsic proof, must be made within a reasonable time, a judgment appearing to be void upon its face—that is, by inspection of the judgment roll—may be vacated upon motion at any time.

3. JUDGMENT (§ 153*)—VACATION—REASONABLE TIME.

A motion to vacate a default judgment, void in fact, but not so appearing on the record, made six months and one day after rendition of the judgment, was made within a reasonable time.

Will M. Beggs, for appellant. Campbell, Metson, Drew, Oatman & Mackenzie, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from an order vacating and setting aside a default judgment entered against defendant as damages for an unlawful and malicious attachment.

The action is purely a personal one, and was brought in October, 1906. The defendant is a foreign corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois. It had never filed in the office of the Secretary of State of this state a copy of its articles of incorporation, or a designation of an agent upon whom process might be served, as is required by the statute of this state of all foreign corporations doing business in the state. Civ. Code, §§ 408, 405. Service of summons was made upon defendant by serving a copy of the summons and complaint upon the Secretary of State.

Upon the 16th day of November, 1906, a judgment upon default against defendant for the sum of $25,000 was signed by the judge of the court and filed with the clerk. On the 17th day of May, 1907, just six months and one day after the rendition of the judgment, the defendant specially appeared in the action for the purpose of its motion only, and gave and filed a notice of motion to vacate and set aside said judgment upon the ground that the court never obtained jurisdiction of the defendant, in that no service of summons, as required by law, had been made on defendant, and that it had never appeared in said action or submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court. Upon the hearing the court granted the motion, and it is from this order that the plaintiff has appealed. At the hearing the court allowed defendant to read in evidence an affidavit served with the notice and other affidavits replying to affidavits read by plaintiff. From the affidavits read by defendant it appears that defendant was not at the time of bringing the action, and had not for over a year prior thereto, or since, been engaged in business in the state of California, nor had it at that time, nor for over a year prior thereto, nor since, any officer, managing or business agent, cashier, or secretary, officer, representative, or agent in said state of California. In other words, the facts disclosed by these affidavits show that service of summons on this defendant could not be had in this action by service of such summons on the Secretary of State, and in consequence the judgment is void. We do not understand that this is disputed by appellant. Its contention is that the motion came too late to permit the use of proof aliunde the judgment roll to show its invalidity for want of jurisdiction over the defendant, in that the motion was made more than six months after the judgment was taken. The record does not disclose when the judgment was entered other than the notice of the motion recited that the judgment was entered on the 17th day of November, 1906; but, if the date of its entry be important, we would assume as against an appellant, upon whom the burden of showing error lies, and in support of the order of the trial court, that the entry was within six months preceding the notice of motion.

The fallacy of appellant's position lies in the assumption that the time within which a motion to set aside a judgment void in fact, but not so appearing upon the judgment roll, is limited by section 473, Code Civ. Proc. This motion is not made under this section at all. The right to have a void judgment vacated and set aside exists independent of and outside of any statutory provision. Waller v. Weston, 125 Cal. 201, 57 Pac. 892; Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, 32 Pac. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198; Mott Iron Works v. West Coast Plumbing Co., 113 Cal. 341, 45 Pac. 683. Where the judgment appears to be void upon its face—that is, by inspection of the judgment roll—it may be vacated upon motion at any time; but, where its invalidity must be shown by extrinsic proof, it is well settled that such motion can only be entertained when made within a reasonable time. In this connection appellant insists that it has been settled in this state by authoritative decisions that such reasonable time cannot exceed the maximum time allowed for the motions authorized by section 473, Code Civ. Proc., and that the time allowed by that section cannot exceed six months from the rendition of the judgment as contradistinguished from the entry thereof.

We have examined all the cases cited by appellant as well as all those cited by respondent upon this point, and we are of the opinion that the result of the decisions is that a motion to vacate a void judgment, not appearing to be such upon its face, must be made within a reasonable time. So much has been authoritatively settled. But in none of the cases has it been decided whether the time shall run from the rendition of the judgment or from the entry thereof. In none of the cases has it been necessary to fix precisely what is a reasonable time. It being established that the motion may be made within a reasonable time, it would seem to follow on principle that what is a reasonable time, in the absence of a statutory limitation, should be largely left to the determination of the trial court. We have just said that in none of these cases has it been necessary to fix precisely what is a reasonable time for such a motion as this. Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 388, 30 Pac. 585, 32 Pac. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198, may be considered a leading case in this state upon the right to vacate a judgment, void in fact, but not so appearing upon the record by motion. The right to vacate such a judgment upon motion at all was attacked, and it was held that the right existed, but must be exercised within a reasonable time. It was there said: "Under our present system, terms of court are abolished, and a motion to set aside a judgment would have to be made within a reasonable time, and perhaps, following the analogy of section 473, six months might be considered the extent of a reasonable time for the motion; but, however that may be, there is no question in the case at bar as to reasonable time because the motion was made within 10 days after the judgment. * * * We hold, therefore, that, when a nonresident has not been personally served within the state, the court has power, within a reasonable time, when it finds that it has been deceived by a false return of such service within the state, to quash the service of summons and vacate the judgment. This is as broad a statement of the rule as the facts of this case require." It is thus apparent that it was only decided in that case as to the time of such motion that it must be made within a reasonable time, and that 10 days was such reasonable time. The suggestion that the time fixed by section 473, Code Civ. Proc., should be adopted, cannot mean anything more than that approximately such time should not be exceeded, in view of the fact that it is laid down authoritatively that such motion may be made within a reasonable time, and in view of the rule that what is a reasonable time, in the absence of a statutory limitation, is a question largely within the discretion of the trial court.

In People v. Temple, 103 Cal. 453, 37 Pac. 415, cited by appellant, the motion was made more than 12 years after the judgment was entered, and it was held that it came too late. It was there said "that a judgment which is in fact void for want of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant, but where its invalidity does not appear from the judgment roll, may be set aside upon motion within a reasonable time after its entry." (Italics are ours.) The court further said: "And what is a reasonable time within which a motion may be made to set aside a judgment, not void upon its face, must depend somewhat upon the circumstances of each particular case, and is not definitely determined further than that it will not extend beyond the limit fixed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure." This reference to what has been "determined," so far as we are advised has no greater justification than the suggestion concerning the effect of section 473 in Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., supra. No such point was there definitely determined or determined at all. Whether or not the exact time limited for motions under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., was the maximum limit for a motion to vacate a judgment void dehors the record, was not involved in the Temple Case. The gist of the decision is contained in the concluding paragraph, which is: "The judgment was not void upon its face, and could not, upon that ground, be set aside on motion. The motion was made more than 12 years after the judgment was entered, and was not within a reasonable time. The court had no power, therefore, to grant the motion, and its action in doing so must be held void and of no effect." (Italics are ours.) When this case is carefully read in the light of its facts, it will be seen to only authoritatively decide that such a motion as was there involved must be made within a reasonable time, and that 12 years after the entry of judgment is not a reasonable time.

People v. Harrison, 107 Cal. 541, 40 Pac. 956, cited by appellant, involved rights of conflicting purchasers of state lands. Incidental reference is made to an order vacating a judgment not void upon the record, made three years after the rendition of the judgment, and the Temple Case is cited as determining that such a motion must be made within six months after the rendition of the judgment. But all that was said on this subject is obiter, as the case was decided upon another point and in favor of the party relying on the order. People v. Norris, 144 Cal. 422, 77 Pac. 998, also cited by appellant, decides that on a motion made six years after judgment evidence dehors the record cannot be used to prove the invalidity of the judgment. On the other hand, there are expressions in cases to the effect that the time runs from the entry of the judgment. But in none of the cases was any point being made as to whether or not the time should be counted from the rendition or entry of the judgment. So, too, in none of the cases cited on either side was it important for the court to fix accurately what should be the maximum limit for a reasonable time within which a motion to vacate a judgment, void in fact, but not so appearing on the record, must be made. In no case did the time involved approximate near to six months, either from the rendition or entry of the judgment. The fundamental rule recognized in all the cases is that such motion must be made within a reasonable time. That is as much as has been authoritatively decided. The section of the Code relied on by appellant does not deal with the matter of vacating void judgments at all. In the state of the authorities on the subject we are not prepared to say that a motion made six months and one day after the rendition of a judgment, void in fact, is not made within a reasonable time, or that the court had no power under such circumstances to vacate such judgment upon proof dehors the record that the court never obtained jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

The order is affirmed.

LOUD v. COLLINS et al. (Civ. 747.)

1. Limitation of Actions (§ 197*)—Action on Note—Findings—Evidence—Sufficiency.

In an action upon a note, evidence held to support a finding that the note was executed out of the state, so that the cause of action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1, which provides that actions upon written instruments executed out of the state must be begun within two years.

2. Contracts (§ 145*)—Delivery—Execution.

Under Civ. Code, § 1626, providing that a contract in writing takes effect upon its delivery to the party in whose favor it is made, or to his agent, the place where a contract was written, signed, or dated does not necessarily fix or determine the place where it was executed; delivery being the final act essential to its consummation as an obligation.

Under Civ. Where a note was sent by mail to another state by two of the signers in order to obtain the signature of a third person whom the payee insisted should also sign, and the third person signed the note and mailed it to the payee, who received it in due course, the payee is presumed to have knowledge that the place of execution of the note was in the other state.

Action by A. S. Loud against James R. Collins and John W. Kemp and another. Judgment for plaintiff against Collins and for defendants, Kemp and another, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Rollins, for appellant. Frank G. Finlayson, Elon G. Galusha, and W. A. Alderson, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover $1,300 and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month, compounded monthly, alleged to be due and unpaid upon a promissory note dated, "Los Angeles, Cal., January 17, 1903," made payable generally to Watson & Co., by whom it was transferred for collection to plaintiff. Judgment went against defendant Collins by default. Defendants Kemp and Alderson answered, alleging, among other defenses, that the action was barred by section 339, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc. Among other things, the court found: "The note sued on in this case and set out in the complaint was not executed until it was deposited by the defendant Alderson in the post office in Chicago, in an envelope directed to John W. Watson, and was therefore executed out of the state of California, and in the state of Illinois, and is barred by section 339, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California." Judgment followed in favor of defendants Kemp and Alderson. From this judgment, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

Appellant's contention for a reversal is based solely upon the ground that this finding of the court is unsupported by the evidence; his claim being that the note was executed in this state. Section 339, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc., prescribes the time for the commencement of actions founded upon instruments of writing executed out of the state to be within two years. The complaint herein was filed a few days prior to the expiration of four years after the note matured. If, therefore, it was executed out of the state, as claimed by respondents, then, clearly, the cause of action thereon was barred. Higgins v. Graham, 143 Cal. 131, 76 Pac. 898.

While there is some conflict in the evidence, it clearly tends to show the following facts: Collins desired to borrow $1,100, and he and Kemp went to the office of Watson & Co., whose calling was that of lending money, and applied for the loan. As security for the payment of same, Collins proposed to assign to Watson an interest in a certain oil venture, which he held with Alderson, and also have Alderson, who resided in Chicago, sign the note. Watson declined to make the loan upon the security then offered, but during the negotiations proposed to loan the money upon a note signed by all three of the defendants, provided he received an assignment of an interest equal to the sum of $500 in the oil venture, and, in addition to this and the interest reserved in the note, received also a bonus of $200. Collins and Kemp assented to this proposition, and in accordance with this agreement Collins and Kemp, at Los Angeles, Cal., signed and delivered to Watson a note identical in form with the one set out in the complaint, and Collins attached his signature to an instrument whereby he assigned to Watson the said interest in the oil venture, which, however, it seems, had to be approved or accepted by Alderson. At the same time with the making and delivery of this note so executed by Collins and Kemp, they also signed the note upon which this action is based, and this last-mentioned note, together with the assignment of the oil interest, and letters written by Collins and Kemp to Alderson, requesting him to sign the note and return same to Watson, were, with an envelope addressed, "John W. Watson, 322 Los Angeles Trust Building, Los Angeles, Cal.," all inclosed in an envelope which was addressed to Alderson at Chicago and by Watson deposited in the United States post office at Los Angeles. At the same time Watson paid to Kemp for Collins the sum of $1,100, the amount agreed to be advanced on the $1,300 note. Alderson received the note and other papers so forwarded to him through the United States mail, and, after signing his name to the note, inclosed it in the self-addressed envelope to John W. Watson, which had been sent to him for such purpose, and deposited it in the post office at Chicago, all in accordance with the understanding and agreement had between Collins, Kemp, and Watson. Watson received it in due course of mail, and thereupon delivered to Collins and Kemp the note which they alone had signed, as above stated. Says Mr. Kemp in his testimony: "The agreement with Mr. Watson and Mr. Collins was that Mr. Collins should sign the note, that I should sign the note, and that it should be sent to Mr. Alderson in Chicago to be signed by him and then returned to Mr. Watson." In our opinion, this evidence fully sustains the finding.

The place where the contract was written, signed, or dated does not necessarily fix or determine the place where it was executed. Delivery of the instrument is the final act essential to its consummation as an obligation. Civ. Code, § 1626; Barrett v. Dodge, 16 R. I. 740, 19 Atl. 530, 27 Am. St. Rep. 777. The place of delivery is the place of execution, and, in the absence of matters constituting an estoppel, this fact may be established by parol evidence, notwithstanding a venue other than that shown to exist is designated in the date line of the instrument. Such designation is prima facie evidence only of the fact when disputed. Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Vansickle (C. C.) 64 Fed. 944. It is, therefore, immaterial that Kemp and Collins signed the note in this state.

The general rule is that depositing a note in the post office addressed to the payee with his assent is a sufficient delivery thereof. Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 67; Barrett v. Dodge, 16 R. I. 740, 19 Atl. 530, 27 Am. St. Rep. 777; Ivey v. Kern County Land Co., 115 Cal. 196, 46 Pac. 926; Bank of Yolo v. Sperry Flour Co., 141 Cal. 314, 74 Pac. 855, 65 L. R. A. 90. Appellant concedes this proposition, but insists that it should be limited to those transactions directly conducted by the parties through the medium of the post office; that is, where one party makes the proposal, and the other accepts by signing and transmitting the contract. Accepting his view, the facts do not bring this case within the exception for which he contends. Watson proposed to lend the money in consideration that each of the parties should obligate himself by written contract to repay the same with the agreed interest. The fact that he did not directly communicate this proposal to Alderson is immaterial. It was sufficient that it was communicated to him, as intended by Watson, through Kemp and Collins, as a proposition made by Watson to all three defendants, and which, in order to constitute a contract, must be accepted by all three. While Watson himself did not write the letters to Alderson, submitting his proposal, the action taken by Kemp and Collins in submitting it was with his knowledge and consent. It was clearly his intention, implied from his acts, that if his offer, which had been agreed to by Collins and Kemp, was accepted by their codefendant Alderson, the latter, at Chicago, Ill., should attach his signature to the note theretefore signed by Kemp and Collins, but not delivered, and inclose the same in the self-addressed envelope sent with the note for such purpose, and deposit it in the United States post office at Chicago, Ill. Upon receipt of the note Alderson signed it—however reluctantly, or by what inducements prompted so to do, is immaterial—and inclosed it in the envelope and mailed it to Watson, by whom it was received in due course. With full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances connected with the signing and delivery of the note, Watson accepted it in lieu of the note of Kemp and Collins which he held pending the action of Alderson in joining with his codefendants in accepting the offer made by him. Under these circumstances, the deposit of the note in the post office at Chicago, Ill., constituted the delivery thereof to Watson in the state of Illinois. The note was executed out of this state, of which fact plaintiff's assignor must be deemed to have had full knowledge.

Judgment and order affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 17, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 18, 1910.)

1. APPEARANCE (§ 24*) — GENERAL APPEARANCE—WAIVER.

A general appearance by a defendant waives all question as to service of process and is equivalent to personal service.

2. APPEARANCE (§ 8*) — ACTS CONSTITUTING "APPEARANCE."

An "appearance" is generally defined as the formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, a defendant appears when he answers, demurs, or gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him.

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 669*)—FOREIGN CORPORATION — GENERAL APPEARANCE — ACTS CONSTITUTING.

A summons, in an action against a foreign corporation having no place of business in the state or agent therein, was served on its president temporarily in the state. Thereafter an attorney wrote to plaintiff's attorney inclosing a stipulation extending the time to answer. Plaintiff's attorney signed and returned the stipulation. Subsequently the attorney made an affidavit entitled in the court and cause to procure an order of court giving the corporation further time in which to answer. The court granted further time. Held, that the corporation appeared generally in the action.

4. MANDAMUS (§ 28*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—MATTERS OF DISCRETION.

Where the facts are undisputed, and the law establishes the right of a party to an order or to relief which the court refuses, mandamus lies to compel action, and while in many cases the discretion exercised by the trial court is conclusive, especially where the evidence is conflicting, mandamus lies to control judicial action involving discretion when the discretion has been abused.

5. MANDAMUS (§ 51*)—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF —MATTERS OF DISCRETION.

Where the time within which a defendant, appearing generally in an action, may answer or demur, has expired, and no answer or demurrer has been interposed, the trial court must enter his default, and the refusal so to do is a refusal to perform a duty, and mandamus lies to compel performance thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 98; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

6. MANDAMUS (§ 51*)—ADEQUACY OF OTHER REMEDY.

Where the court set aside the service of summons after defendant had appeared generally and then refused to enter the default of defendant, who did not answer or demur within the time fixed therefor, plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and mandamus lies to compel the trial court to enter the default of defendant.

Application for a writ of mandate by the California Pine Box & Lumber Company against E. P. Mogan, Judge of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Department 7 Thereof, to compel the making of an order directing the clerk of the court to enter a default in an action. Writ issued.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, for petitioner. W. T. Phipps and Percy E. Towne, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco and Hon. E. P. Mogan, one of the judges thereof, to make an order, directing the clerk of said court in the department presided over by such judge to enter the default of the defendant in an action pending in said court, entitled "California Pine Box & Lumber Co., a Corporation, Plaintiff, v. Des Moines Casket Company, a Corporation, Defendant."

The facts of the case are substantially as follows: In October, 1909, the petitioner commenced an action in said court against said Des Moines Casket Company, as defendant, to recover upon an alleged express contract for goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff therein to said defendant. The defendant was a foreign corporation, existing and doing business under the laws of the state of Iowa, and had no place of business in the state of California, and no agent upon whom summons could be served. A summons was duly issued and attempted to be served by personally delivering the same to one Antes, the president of said defendant, who was then temporarily in the state of California on business, but not engaged in any business in connection with the said corporation. After the summons had been left with said Antes, and on November 1, 1909, W. T. Phipps, an attorney at law, wrote to the plaintiff's attorneys in said action inclosing a stipulation, and requesting that it be signed, which letter is as follows: "In the two cases, one of the California Pine Box & Lumber Company v. Des Moines Casket Company, and the other California Pine Box & Lumber Company v. Wichita Casket Company, in which you are attorneys for plaintiff, I wish you to give me the inclosed stipulation extending time for answer. The president of these two companies has not yet got back from his recent trip to this coast, and I want a report from him before I can put in an answer. If this extension is granted I hope to avoid the necessity of putting in any demurrer, and I think time will be saved by granting it. Yours respectfully, W. T. Phipps." In answer to this letter, the attorneys for the plaintiff signed and inclosed a stipulation in said cause, which is as follows: "It is hereby stipulated that the time for answering in the above case shall be and is hereby extended to and including the 20th day of November, 1909. This stipulation shall be effective without being filed. J. C. Meyerstein and J. V. B. Filippini, Attorneys for plaintiff." Afterwards, on the 17th day of November, 1909, said Phipps made an affidavit, in which he stated and set forth that he was attorney for the defendant in said action; that the summons was served upon the president of the defendant while he was temporarily traveling in the state of California; that said president had returned to the state of Iowa, and was the only person in position to furnish affiant "with the necessary data from which to prepare and file the answer in the above-entitled matter." The affidavit further stated: "That said president of said defendant has not as yet had sufficient time in which to furnish affiant with said data, and it is therefore necessary that affiant, for the benefit of said defendant, get an extension of time herein for answering or demurring to said complaint. That defendant's time for answering or demurring will, unless extended, expire on November 20, 1909. Wherefore affiant prays that said court make an order extending the time for answer or demurrer herein, to and including December 20, 1909." Upon the above affidavit being so filed in said court by said attorney for the defendant, and at his request, the court and the said judge thereof made an order extending the time for said defendant to demur or answer to and including the 20th day of December, 1909, and no other or further extension of time has been granted by stipulation or otherwise. After the attorney for said defendant had so procured the stipulation as aforesaid, and filed the affidavit as hereinbefore stated, on which he procured the order of court giving him to and including December 20, 1909, in which to answer or demur, and on December 3, 1909, he made a motion in said court in said cause for an order setting aside the attempting service of summons therein, upon the ground that it had not been served upon any person upon whom service could be legally made under the laws of California. The said court thereafter, on the 7th day of December, 1909, made an order granting said motion and setting aside and quashing the said service of summons. The defendant in said action has filed no pleading or demurrer therein. Thereafter upon due notice petitioner, on the 7th day of January, 1910, made a motion for an order directing the clerk of the said court to enter the default of the said defendant, and the court thereupon made an order denying said motion, and refusing to order the clerk of said court to enter the default of said defendant, holding that it had no jurisdiction of defendant. Thereafter, on the 10th day of February, 1910, the petitioner applied to the clerk of said court for entry of default against defendant, and the clerk, in view of the order so made by the court, refused to enter the same.

The first question for determination here is as to whether or not the defendant, by reason of the facts above set forth, appeared in the action. The judge of the superior court concluded that the defendant had not appeared, and that the court had no jurisdiction of it, and no doubt based its order denying the motion for entry of default upon this ground. The question as to the service of the summons and the order setting aside the same may be eliminated, for the reason that, if the facts appearing of record show an appearance as a matter of law, it was the duty of the court to order the entry of default. It is elementary that a general appearance by a defendant waives all question as to the service of process, and is equivalent to personal service. An "appearance" is generally defined as the formal proceeding by which a defendant submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court. Our Code provides (Code Civ. Proc. § 1014) that a "defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him." In this case the question is: Did Phipps give petitioner notice of appearance for the defendant? In our opinion he did. When he wrote to plaintiff's attorneys and procured a stipulation giving more time to answer or demur, he gave written notice of his appearance. He stated that he hoped to avoid the necessity of putting in a demurrer, and that time would be saved by the stipulation. This was written information to the plaintiff's attorneys giving them notice that Phipps was the attorney for the defendant. Plaintiff's attorneys acted upon the notice when they signed and returned the desired stipulation. Defendant's attorney then made an affidavit, entitled in the court and cause, for the purpose of procuring the affirmative action of the court in giving it further time. This affidavit was filed, and the court made an order granting the further time. There was nothing in the letter, stipulation, affidavit, or order made by the court as to a special appearance. The court could not have granted the defendant an extension of time in which to plead unless the defendant was before the court. In our opinion the defendant appeared in said action, and comes within the reason and principle of the ruling in Cooper v. Gordon, 125 Cal. 296, 57 Pac. 1006, and Roth v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 604, 82 Pac. 246.

The next question is as to whether or not the writ of mandate will lie to compel the court to make a particular order. It is conceded that the writ will not lie to control the discretion of the court where the facts are such that the court may use its discretion. In many cases the discretion exercised by the trial court is conclusive, particularly where the evidence is conflicting; but the rule is now more liberally extended in regard to the writ of mandate and its use to control judicial action, and even judicial discretion when such discretion has been abused. Where the facts are undisputed, and the law establishes the right of a party to an order or to the relief which the court has refused, the writ will lie. Now in this case it is the law that when defendant's time for answering or demurring expired, plaintiff was entitled to have its default entered. It was the duty of the court under the law to order the entry of such default, and the denial of the order is a refusal to perform a duty.

In Wood on Mandamus, p. 48, it is stated: "The rule is that a mandamus will issue to an inferior court to compel the performance of an official duty, to which a party is clearly entitled and which is refused to him, when no other effectual remedy exists, and to compel a judicial officer to perform an act which it is his imperative duty to perform, and with reference to the manner of the performance of which he has no reasonable discretion."

In Temple v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699, the petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to hear a contempt proceeding which it had refused to do, and the Supreme Court said: "Under such circumstances the court cannot, by holding without reason that it has no jurisdiction of the proceeding, divest itself of jurisdiction, and avoid the duty of hearing and determining it."

In Johnston v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 666, 39 Pac. 36, the superior court, being satisfied that due notice to creditors had not been given, ordered additional notice to be given, and refused to make an order that due notice to creditors had been given. Upon application for a writ of mandate to compel the court to make its decree, showing that due notice had been given, the facts were reviewed, and a writ of mandate was issued, directing the court to make such decree.

In Hensley v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 541, 44 Pac. 232, it appeared that the court had refused to make an order or decree of due notice to creditors upon the ground that the order of notice to creditors was not in conformity with the law. The Supreme Court held that it was, and directed the writ to issue, and in the opinion said: "Where as here the law affixes a right to specific relief from certain facts, and there is no question made as to the existence of such facts, the court has no discretion to refuse the relief. In such a case the limit of the discretionary power of the court has been reached, and nothing but a clear duty remains; and if the relief is refused, and there is, as in this instance, no appeal or other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, mandamus will lie to compel it."

For a very clear discussion of the law on this subject, see the opinion of the Supreme Court in the late case of Inglin v. Hoppin et al., 105 Pac. 582 (November 19, 1909). It was there said by Mr. Justice Henshaw in his usual clear style: "While of course it is the general rule that mandamus will not lie to control the discretion of a court or officer, meaning by that that it will not lie to force the exercise of discretion in a particular manner, the above cases abundantly show that mandamus will lie to correct abuses of discretion, and will lie to force a particular action by the inferior tribunal or officer, when the law clearly establishes the petitioner's right to such action."

It cannot be said that petitioner in this case has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. He cannot appeal, as there is no judgment or order from which an appeal will lie. Under the ruling of the superior court he cannot proceed, although the defendant has appeared and submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court. The court, having jurisdiction, holds that it has not, and refuses further relief in the cause.

What we have said in this opinion is not to be understood as precluding the court from hearing an application by the defendant to be relieved of the default upon a proper showing.

Let the writ issue as prayed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 332*)—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action by a tenant for injury to the demised premises caused by the obstruction of a stream, the question whether the operator of a quarry on the bank of the stream and a person engaged in removing a log jam from the stream, both of whom were employed by defendant, were independent contractors so as to relieve defendant from liability for their acts in obstructing the stream, held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 318*)—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—SUPERVISION OF WORK BY MASTER.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 171*)—INJURIES FROM OVERFLOW OF LAND—PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY.

Where a jam had existed in a stream for a number of years, but had not obstructed the flow of the water, and a lumber company removed logs from the jam to obtain material for shingle bolts, as a result of which portions of the jam floated down the stream and made a jam at a lower point causing plaintiff's land to overflow, the lumber company's act in loosening the jam was the proximate cause of the injury.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 842*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

In an action by a tenant against a lumber company for injury to the demised premises by an overflow caused by the obstruction of a stream, whether the act of the lumber company in loosening a log jam so that portions of it floated down the stream and formed the obstruction was the proximate cause of the injury was a question of fact, the determination of which by the jury was conclusive on appeal.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—INJURY TO DEMISED PREMISES — DAMAGES — EVIDENCE.

In an action by a tenant engaged in the dairy business, for injury to the demised premises, caused by the overflow of a stream, evidence as to what the land produced the year previous to the year in which the damage was sustained, was admissible as tending to show the adaptability of the land to cultivation of the crops customarily grown thereon, and its capacity for producing such crops in such quantity as was essential to the dairy business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 514, 515; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

8. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 142*)—INJURY TO DEMISED PREMISES — DAMAGES — EVIDENCE.

In such case, it was proper to show the diminished value of the leasehold during the remainder of the term, and, to that end, prove the rental value of the damaged land per acre and the cost of restoring it to the condition in which it was at the time it was submerged.

9. Landlord and Tenant (§ 142*)—Injury to Demised Premises — Damages — Evidence.

In such case, evidence as to the number of dairy cows kept by plaintiff, and the quantity of butter fat produced the same year, and the cost of maintaining his cows on other land which he was compelled to rent for that purpose after the flood was admissible.

10. Waters and Water Courses (§ 179*)—Injury from Flowage—Instructions.

In an action against a lumber company for injury to land resulting from an overflow caused by the act of defendant in loosening a jam of refuse which had existed for years, but had not interfered with the flow of the water, such loosening causing débris to float down the stream and obstruct it at a point opposite plaintiff's land, it was not error to refuse an instruction requested by defendant on the theory that the injury was caused by an act of God.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 257; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

11. Landlord and Tenant (§ 142*) — Injuries to Demised Premises — Elements of Damage.

In an action by a tenant against a lumber company for injuries to the demised premises, caused by an overflow of a stream, plaintiff was entitled to recover, as an element of his damage, for the destruction of bridges built across a slough to permit his cattle to pass from one field to another, though the bridges were imbedded in the soil, and he testified that he intended to leave them there at the termination of his lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 515; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

12. Waters and Water Courses (§ 179*) — Injury from Flowage—Instructions.

An instruction requested by defendant that if the jam endangered a trestle of a bridge owned by defendant, defendant had the right to remove the jam, was properly refused as too general and indefinite, since it omitted the necessary qualification that defendant, in removing the jam, was bound to do so with reference to the rights of lower riparian owners.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Sacchi against the Bayside Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Denver Sevier, for appellant. Geo. D. Murray and Gregor & Connick, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon the leasehold of plaintiff through the negligence of the defendant. The complaint asked for damages in the sum of $5,200, but the jury by whom the cause was tried assessed the damages at the sum of $3,500, for which amount the court subsequently caused judgment to be entered in favor of plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment so entered and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The injuries alleged to have been sustained to plaintiff's property were the result of the overflow upon his land of the water from Jacoby creek, in Humboldt county, and it is charged that said overflow and the consequent submerging and damaging of plaintiff's land was caused by the negligent acts of the defendant.

The defendant is a corporation, and the purpose for which it was organized as such was to carry on and conduct the logging and lumbering business, in which, for many years prior to the institution of this action, it and its predecessor, the Bayside Mill & Lumber Company, were engaged on Jacoby creek, in Humboldt county.

The plaintiff, at the time the injuries complained of were sustained, and for some years prior thereto, was the lessee and in the possession of something over 300 acres of land bordering on said Jacoby creek, and through and over the southwesterly portion of which the channel of said creek passed. Said creek is described in the complaint as "a natural water course in said Humboldt county, about 12 miles in length, and flowing in a northwesterly direction and emptying into the northern portion of Humboldt Bay * * *; that said Jacoby creek is a stream amply sufficient in width, size, and flow of water to carry and bear along and float in its waters to said Humboldt Bay, while flowing along from its source to said Humboldt Bay, all natural débris, refuse, and drift, if unrestrained, which would naturally float or fall into and be carried along by the waters thereof and the natural current of said Jacoby creek." The complaint further states that, for more than a year prior to the time at which the alleged injuries were inflicted upon plaintiff's leasehold, the said land of plaintiff was "protected by a good and substantial dike and embankment theretofore constructed and built on and along said bank by said plaintiff and his said lessors, and that, at the said time of said hereinafter mentioned overflow of said Jacoby creek, and for a year or more prior thereto, said dike and embankment was of sufficient width, height, and strength to fully protect, and the same would have fully protected and did fully protect, said land leased to said plaintiff as aforesaid from and against any encroachment of or overflow by the salt tidewaters of said Humboldt Bay and the waters of said Jacoby creek in the natural rise and fall and flow of said waters of said Humboldt Bay and of said Jacoby creek." Said land so under lease to plaintiff, it is alleged, was prior to and at the time of the infliction of the damage complained of, improved and valuable farming and dairy land "and prior thereto had been properly seeded to tame grasses by said plaintiff, and was then valuable grazing land and producing an abundant stand of tame grasses for pasturing purposes and was then used by said plaintiff as dairy and grazing land."

It is averred that, for more than six years prior to the 27th day of January, 1905, the predecessor of defendant, Bayside Mill & Lumber Company, a corporation, was the owner and in the possession of a large tract of land situated on both sides of Jacoby creek, "and lying along said creek up said creek from and above" the land leased to plaintiff; that said corporation was for many years engaged in cutting and logging the timber standing on its said tract of land and removing the same therefrom; that, "while said timber was being so cut and removed from said tract of land and by reason thereof, great quantities of débris and refuse logs, timber, and material were worked up from said timber so cut, logged, and removed as aforesaid, and remained and were left upon said tract of land and thereby accumulated thereon and were placed in and left upon, along and adjacent to the banks of said Jacoby creek and in such manner that said débris and refuse logs, timber, and material, placed in and left upon, along, and adjacent to said banks of Jacoby creek as aforesaid, would be and were, prior to the 2d day of January, 1905, in large and excessive quantities carried and floated by the elements and the natural flow and current of said Jacoby creek into the waters of said Jacoby creek."

It is further shown by the complaint that said corporation, in order to restrain and keep said débris, drift, refuse logs and timber, etc., from being carried further down said creek, and to thereby prevent the bed of said creek from being filled therewith, and the water therein from running over and inundating the lands of lower riparian owners, caused to be formed out of said natural débris, drift, logs, etc., "an immense and compact jam and obstruction in and across said Jacoby creek and which extended up, in and along said Jacoby creek for a distance of 400 yards or thereabouts and completely filled and obstructed said Jacoby creek for said distance from bank to bank, and, as so detained and restrained by said Bayside Mill & Lumber Company, * * * said jam and obstruction was then and there so compact in character and so fastened and secured by said Bayside Mill & Lumber Company, * * * that said débris and refuse logs, timber, and material and natural débris contributing and forming the same would not be, and no part thereof would be, thereafter carried downstream by the current and waters of said Jacoby creek, and that said jam and obstruction, if not disturbed or interfered with or loosened or opened up by any person, would thereafter permanently remain intact and in the same place and condition as the same was then in." The complaint discloses that, on the 27th day of January, 1905, the defendant became the owner of all the property and rights of the Bayside Mill & Lumber Company heretofore mentioned, and thereafter, as stated, continued to carry on and conduct the logging and lumbering business on said Jacoby creek.

It is charged that the defendant, after succeeding to the business of said Bayside Mill & Lumber Company, negligently caused the "big jam" to be so disturbed and loosened as that the drift, débris, refuse logs, and other materials of which it was composed floated lower down the creek and formed other jams at different points, one of which being opposite the dike erected on plaintiff's land for its protection against overflow from said creek. It is declared that these latter jams became compact in form, and in that condition would not have interfered with the natural capacity of the creek to carry to the Humboldt Bay all the waters, débris, etc., naturally flowing therein, but that defendant carelessly and negligently caused said jams to be loosened, with the result that said débris and refuse logs, timber, and material and drift were forced further down the stream, forming, at a point where said creek passes through the southwesterly portion of plaintiff's land, an immense jam and an obstruction to the free and natural passage of the waters of said creek. This last-mentioned jam, it is averred, caused the waters of said creek to be restrained from their natural flow and impounded, so that when the winter rains of 1906–07 came, said obstruction or jam caused the waters of said creek to "back up in great and unnatural volume and rise to a great and unnatural height and break through and destroy said dike and embankment and overflow the banks of said Jacoby creek," and overflow and submerge a large portion of plaintiff's land, thereby destroying said land for pasturage and dairy business purposes for which plaintiff had leased and to which he had put the use of said land. The complaint further charges that the defendant had maintained railroad trestles at several different points across Jacoby creek and that "said trestles obstructed the otherwise free passage of all kinds of drift while being carried downstream in said Jacoby creek by the current thereof." The answer specifically denies all the important and essential averments of the complaint. The appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and that the court erred in its rulings receiving and excluding certain evidence and in giving, refusing and modifying certain instructions.

1. That the evidence conclusively shows that in the month of January, 1907, the high waters of Jacoby creek "backed up" and broke through the embankment or dike which had been constructed and maintained on plaintiff's leasehold, and that by reason thereof a large portion of plaintiff's land was inundated and seriously damaged, is not, and, manifestly, could not be, confuted by the defendant. It is the contention of the appellant, however, that the defendant was in no manner or degree responsible for the breaking of the plaintiff's dike by the high waters of Jacoby creek and the consequent submerging and damaging of plaintiff's land. The facts developed by the evidence may be epitomized as follows:

The plaintiff, by an instrument in writing, leased the land involved here for the term of six years, beginning with the 1st day of November, 1904. By the terms of said lease, he agreed to pay for the use of said land the sum of $1,800 per year for the first two years of said term and $2,000 per year for the remaining four years. It was stipulated that said rent should be paid to the lessors in monthly installments equal to one-twelfth of the annual rent on the first of each and every month during the term. It was further covenanted on the part of the plaintiff that he would "keep all buildings, fences, dikes, floodgates, etc., in good repair during the continuance of said lease." The land leased by plaintiff was reclaimed tide and marsh lands, and on it were a number of sloughs across which small bridges had been erected and maintained by plaintiff to enable the dairy stock to pass from one part of the land to another. The plaintiff conducted a dairy business on said land, having leased it expressly for that purpose. The evidence shows that the land damaged was capable of feeding and accommodating about 30 head of cows. This number of cows, it was shown, was in fact kept on the land up to the time that it was overflowed by the waters from the creek. The "big jam," to which reference has been made, was the result of the gradual accumulation for many years of logs, timber, débris, drift, etc., and was in existence before and at the time the defendant acquired the property and rights of the Bayside Mill & Lumber Company. In the years 1895 and 1896, one Monahan caused a boom to be placed across the creek at the point where said "big jam" was located, for the purpose of restraining said jam, or preventing it from becoming loosened and floating down the stream. The boom was fastened by a wire rope. The jam remained in this condition for many years and until after the defendant became the owner of the logging and lumbering business of its predecessor. According to the testimony, had said jam remained in this condition—that is, in compact form and so restrained as to have prevented it from floating down with the current during the high waters of the winter—it could have produced no harm. In the year 1905 the defendant entered into a contract with one De Lucca, by the terms of which the latter agreed to, and in pursuance of said contract did, cut up and convert into shingle bolts the timber suitable for that purpose of which said "big jam" was largely constituted. The result of thus handling said timber was to so loosen the jam as to cause the remaining materials of which it was partly formed to float down the stream. The complaint charges and the proof shows that other jams were formed in the creek from the materials which came from the "big jam" and floated down the creek. In January, 1906, the plaintiff served upon the superintendent of defendant a written notice, calling his attention to the probable damage which would result to plaintiff's land if the defendant did not take proper care of the tree tops and timber refuse from its logging operations and prevent the same from being carried into Jacoby creek.

As alleged in the complaint, the evidence discloses that an immense jam was formed near plaintiff's land from the refuse and other materials of which the "big jam" was originally in part formed, and, additionally, as the result generally of the logging operations of defendant. There was also formed a jam around one of the railroad trestles of defendant. It was these last-mentioned jams which finally, through the rise of the waters of Jacoby creek from the rains of the winter of 1906–1907, which were directly responsible for the gathering of the water in said creek opposite plaintiff's dike in such a large and unusual volume as that said creek was incapable of accommodating and carrying off the same in and through its natural channel. The result was, as the complaint alleges, that said water "backed up" and broke through plaintiff's dike, flooding approximately 80 acres of his land, forming a new channel of said creek through a portion of said land, and practically destroying for the purposes for which plaintiff had leased it that portion so flooded and inundated.

The immediate effect of the submergence of plaintiff's land in the manner thus described was, according to the testimony, to leave a large portion thereof covered with refuse, débris, drift, gravel, sediment, and salt tidewater. Some of the witnesses testified that about seven acres were covered with gravel, from 3 inches, in some places, to over 2 feet deep, in other places; that about 16 acres were covered with sediment of sufficient depth to kill the vegetation growing thereon at the time, and that approximately 60 acres were covered with salt tidewater, the effect of which was to destroy the grass then growing thereon. It was shown that the land inundated could not be restored to its original condition, or to a condition in which it could be utilized for dairying purposes under two years. There were remaining, at the time of the flood, two years of the term stipulated for in the lease, so that that portion of the leasehold affected by the overflow was completely destroyed, so far as plaintiff's rights under the lease were concerned. The evidence shows that De Lucca cut the timber of which the "big jam" was largely formed and transformed the same into shingle bolts under a contract with defendant.

On behalf of the defense, one Newell testified that for many years prior to the flooding of plaintiff's land, he was engaged in the logging business on Jacoby creek. It appears that he had a contract with the defendant by which he did all the logging for that corporation. He testified that the bank of said creek was very steep at the points where he carried on the logging and that refuse from the logging operations was naturally carried and precipitated into the bed of the creek by the winter rains and high water. The object of this testimony was, undoubtedly, to show that the overflow of plaintiff's land was caused primarily by the refuse from the logging operations prosecuted by Newell under his contract with defendant as an independent contractor, and not, as alleged and contended by plaintiff, by the formation and disturbance of the jams in the manner described in the complaint.

It further appears, from evidence produced by the defendant, that, for many years, a large rock quarry was operated by certain parties on land bordering upon Jacoby creek. The obvious purpose of this testimony was to show, if it could be done to the satisfaction of the jury, that the bed of the creek was filled with débris or rocks and other refuse as the result of the operation of said quarry, and that thus the channel of the creek was so filled up as to interrupt and greatly interfere with the natural flow or passage of the waters of said creek; that the "backing up" of the water and the consequent flooding of plaintiff's land was primarily and proximately occasioned by the operations of said rock quarry, and not due to any act or acts of the defendant. We have thus briefly stated the facts brought out by the evidence introduced by the plaintiff, and have referred to some of the evidence presented by the defendant involving the defenses upon which it appeared to have relied against the claims of the complaint.

Appellant points out a large number of particulars in which it insists that the verdict is not justified by the evidence. These we shall not give specific examination. We have satisfied ourselves, from a painstaking examination of the whole record, that the jury were fully warranted in returning the verdict upon which the judgment is founded. The questions whether the damage was caused by the operations of the rock quarry or by the logging operations conducted by Newell were for the jury to determine. The verdict is, of course, indubitable evidence that the jury were satisfied from the proofs that the damage was the direct result of the negligence of the defendant.

So it is true as to the question whether De Lucca and Newell were independent contractors. While it is true that both De Lucca and Newell performed the work assigned to them under contracts by which they were to receive a certain specific compensation for such services, not in the nature of wages, each, nevertheless, prosecuted his work in conformity with the general directions of the defendant. The work in which De Lucca engaged was, in fact, done under the direct superintendence of one Monahan, an employé of defendant. Moreover, the court submitted for the jury's decision the questions whether Newell and De Lucca were independent contractors, and, if so, whether the performance of the work done by them for defendant in the ordinary mode of doing such work would and did necessarily and naturally result in producing the defect or condition which caused the injury. The jury, therefore, passed upon these questions, and, as the the verdict shows, against the theory advanced and contended for by the defendant.

It is scarcely necessary to remark that it is plainly manifest that the necessary and natural result of the removal from the "big jam" of the large quantity of timber out of which from 140 to 150 cords of shingle bolts were manufactured by De Lucca would be the disturbance of said jam so that the remainder of the materials of which it consisted would not remain in their original position, but would, upon the first heavy rains and consequent rising of the waters of the creek, naturally flow down the stream with the current. And, in this connection, it may well be observed that such result must necessarily have been known to and anticipated by defendant or its officers.

Appellant advances the further proposition that, in removing the jam which had formed about one of its railroad trestles, it only did what was absolutely necessary to be done in order to protect its property from destruction. This question, too, was submitted to the jury by the court, and upon that as well as upon all the questions of fact submitted for determination the jury's verdict is conclusive.

2. Many errors are imputed to the rulings of the court in admitting and rejecting certain evidence. Most of these involve questions bearing upon the elements which the court permitted to be shown as forming the basis upon which the amount of damages should be determined. The following may be given as examples of the rulings to which we refer: Permitting proof of the kind and character of the crop grown on the damaged land in the year immediately preceding that in which the damage was sustained; proof of the number of cows plaintiff had and which grazed on said land the previous year; proof of what plaintiff did with his cows after the flood—that is, that he was compelled by reason of the flood to rent other land on which to keep and feed said cows; proof of the cost of floodgates destroyed; proof of steps taken and work necessary to divert the waters of the creek to its old or original channel; that plaintiff had to buy feed for his cows subsequently to the flood; the number of pounds of butter fat obtained from said cows in the years 1906 and 1907; the number of cows he had on the land in 1907; the amount of rent he was required to pay for the use of other lands after the flood; the effect of the gravel left on the ground by the flood; the rental value of the flooded land; the cost per acre "to place the land back into the same condition it was before the sediment was on, and to seed it to clover or rye grass"; the value of the crop raised on the land in 1906, the year immediately preceding that of the flood, etc., etc. The testimony shows, as the complaint alleges, that the flooded and damaged land was under a state of cultivation at the time of the overflow, and that it had formerly produced a sufficient quantity of grasses for the proper sustenance of the dairy cattle kept by plaintiff on said land. We perceive nothing in the testimony upon the question of damages allowed by the court over the objections of the defendant which was not competent and relevant.

Evidence of what the land produced the year previous to the year in which the damage was sustained was proper as tending to show the adaptability of the land to the cultivation of the crops customarily grown thereon and its capacity for producing such crops in such quantity as was essential to the dairy business. It will not be denied, we suppose, that it was proper to show the diminished value of the leasehold during the remainder of the term by reason of the damage to the land, and to that end prove the rental value of the damaged land per acre and likewise the cost of restoring the land to the condition in which it was at the time it was submerged. In short, all this testimony, as well as that relating to the number of dairy cows kept by plaintiff and the quantity of butter fat produced the previous year and the cost of maintaining his cows on other land which he was compelled to rent for that purpose after the flood, competently furnished as fair a foundation as can be shown or approximately laid in such cases upon which the jury might be enabled to reach an intelligent, just, and satisfactory conclusion as to the probable extent of the actual damage suffered by the plaintiff and thus to arrive at a just and reasonable assessment of damages.

Appellant declares that much of this testimony is too remote and speculative; but it is always permissible, in cases of alleged tortious injury to land, in order to reach a reasonably fair and equitable estimation of damages, to prove that it is peculiarly adapted to the production of a particular kind of crop, and what it is capable, under ordinary circumstances, of growing, both as to quality and quantity. Therefore, it is proper to show what the land has ordinarily produced within a reasonable time in the past as bearing upon what it might reasonably be expected to have produced when destroyed, when, as here, such destruction has taken place before the maturity of the crop and what it is probable that it might yield (in this case) during the remainder of the unexpired term of the lease. This, too, together with evidence of what has been the ordinary yield of butter and other products from the dairy, would serve as a reasonable criterion by which the future profits might reasonably be expected to be. And it is always permissible to prove and recover "prospective profits," where it is shown that such profits would naturally and directly flow from a business which had been damaged had such business not been destroyed or impaired by the damage so as to obstruct its prosecution in the usual and ordinary way in which it had always been conducted. Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 Pac. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Giacomini v. Bulkeley, 51 Cal. 260; Shoemaker v. Aker, 116 Cal. 240, 48 Pac. 62; Barnes v. Berendes, 139 Cal. 32, 69 Pac. 491, 72 Pac. 406. In other words, the damages which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result from a wrongful or tortious injury to property, must be taken as the basis or measure of the compensation to which the complaining party would be entitled for the injury so inflicted. Civ. Code, § 3300.

That evidence of the diminished value of the leasehold by reason of the injury thereto was competent, is a proposition so obvious that authorities need not be cited in its support, although many may be found in which the doctrine is asserted and applied. Ellis v. Tone, 58 Cal. 289; Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Wallace, 74 Tex. 581, 12 S. W. 227; Ridley v. Seaboard & R. R. Co., 118 N. C. 996, 24 S. E. 730, 32 L. R. A. 708; Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Hogsett, 67 Tex. 685, 4 S. W. 365; Pennsylvania Co. v. Hunsley, 23 Ind. App. 37, 54 N. E. 1071; Fremont Ry. Co. v. Harlin, 50 Neb. 698, 70 N. W. 263, 36 L. R. A. 417, 61 Am. St. Rep. 578; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. et al. v. Quillen, 34 Ind. App. 330, 72 N. E. 661, 107 Am. St. Rep. 183; Wichita Gas & Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Wright, 9 Kan. App. 730, 59 Pac. 1085. Some other rulings than those to which we have devoted some special attention are complained of, but they were, in our opinion, without prejudice, assuming that they were erroneous.

3. Appellant challenges the correctness of the action of the court in refusing to give certain instructions requested by it, and in modifying certain other instructions proposed by it, and, as so modified, submitting the same to the jury. We shall notice only a few of these assignments in detail. But we may here say that we have given the entire charge of the court careful consideration, and that therein, in our judgment, every principle applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings and developed by the proofs was correctly declared and explained to the jury by the court in singularly clear language. It may be added that in all instances where instructions, containing correct and pertinent declarations of principles of law, were proposed by defendant and disallowed, the court in other instructions submitted to the jury such principles; and where instructions proposed by defendant were modified, it was either because the principle involved in the part modified was not applicable or not correctly stated, or was announced in some other of the given instructions.

There was no evidence justifying the giving of instruction No. 6, requested by defendant, wherein it was proposed to tell the jury that if they found that the injuries to plaintiff's property were caused by the "act of God" the defendant would not be liable.

Instruction 15, requested by defendant and disallowed by the court, was properly refused. It would have declared to the jury that, if the bridges referred to in the complaint as spanning some small sloughs on plaintiff's leasehold were "imbedded in the real estate and was considered by plaintiff as a part thereof not to be removed," then such bridges must be considered by them as part of the realty, and that plaintiff could not recover for their destruction. As we have seen, the plaintiff built these bridges for the purpose of permitting his cattle to pass from one field to another, and, while he testified that they were built with the intention that they should remain permanently on the land, it is no defense to a recovery for their loss or destruction to say that they became and were a permanent part of the realty. By the terms of his lease it was his duty to keep the bridges and other fixtures on the premises in repair. But the bridges were an essential and necessary part of plaintiff's leasehold, and as well could it be maintained that he could not recover for the crops growing on the land and destroyed by the water.

The several instructions expounding the principle that a person may take such steps as may be reasonably necessary to protect his own property from injury or destruction, where he exercised ordinary care in so doing, were properly refused. There was, as seen, some evidence that the defendant had removed a jam which had formed around one of its railroad trestles, and, as to this jam and the act of the defendant in removing it, the court instructed the jury that, in order to protect said trestle or any other of its property from destruction or injury, the defendant had the right to remove said jam, if it did so in view of "the rights of others below" and by the exercise of ordinary care. The rejected instructions were entirely too general and indefinite and would perhaps have tended to mislead the jury into the belief that the defendant caused the "big jam" to be disturbed in order to protect its property, when the truth is the disturbance of the "big jam" was for the sole purpose, as seen, of enabling the defendant to profitably utilize a quantity of the timber of which said jam was composed. Had said jam been allowed to remain intact, it is probable that the high waters of Jacoby creek brought about by the rains of the winter of 1906–1907 could have been easily carried through its natural channel to Humboldt Bay and thus the injury to plaintiff's leasehold avoided.

Some complaint is made of the verdict, the claim being that it is so excessive or far beyond a reasonable admeasurement of damages under the circumstances as revealed by the evidence, that the same must have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. Section 657, subd. 5, Code Civ. Proc. We cannot say, from the face of the record, that this contention has any merit. It appears to us that the evidence amply justifies the amount of damages awarded. In any event, there is nothing in the record which would warrant this court in substituting its judgment upon that proposition for that of the jury and of the trial judge, to whom the question was no doubt fully presented on the motion for a new trial.

2. Appeal and Error (§ 911*)—Presumptions—Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

Where the record on appeal discloses a recital in the judgment or judgment roll that jurisdiction has been acquired or of facts from which jurisdiction may be inferred, the presumption of jurisdiction of the trial court of the subject-matter and of the person of defendant need not be invoked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 911.*]

3. Appeal and Error (§ 911*)—Presumptions—Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

The court on appeal never presumes that a court of record heard a controversy before determining that it had jurisdiction of the cause and the parties, for to do so would involve the presumption that the court failed to do its duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 911.*]

4. Appeal and Error (§ 911*)—Presumptions—Jurisdiction of Trial Court.

On appeal from a domestic judgment, the party seeking to sustain it must show by the record that the court had jurisdiction of defendant, for on a direct attack there is no presumption in favor of the existence of any fact essential to the jurisdiction over defendant, but in all matters of which the judgment contains a record, its verity, in the absence of contradictory evidence, will be presumed, and defendant may, by bill of exceptions, present evidence outside the record to show that the court did not have jurisdiction over him, and the recitals in the record may be aided by facts on which, if they appeared in the judgment roll, a finding of jurisdiction might be predicated.

5. JUDGMENT (§ 495*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JURISDICTION—PRESUMPTIONS.

On a collateral attack of a domestic judgment, the entry of the judgment is itself conclusive of the jurisdiction of defendant, and, in all matters in which the judgment contains a record, its verity is presumed, and the objection of want of jurisdiction over defendant is available only when it appears from the record itself.

6. JUDGMENT (§ 279*)—JUDGMENT ROLL.

An appearance made by a defendant in either of the manners authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, need not be made a part of the judgment roll.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 911*)—PRESUMPTIONS—JURISDICTION.

Where there is a recital in the judgment roll that a defendant appeared in the action, and uncontradicted evidence in the bill of exceptions sustains the recital, the contention that the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendant cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 911.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 193*)—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—OBJECTIONS TO COMPLAINT.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the court found that the contract was to erect a building for a price exceeding $1,000, and that the contract was not recorded, and the issue was tried without objection by the parties or limitation by the court, objection on appeal to the complaint based on its failure to allege that there was anything due from the owner to the contractor at the time the lien was filed, or that the contract was for an amount exceeding $1,000 and not recorded, came too late.

9. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 78*)—NOTICES—STATUTES.

Where an owner used a lessee as an agent to construct a building, and he had knowledge of the intention to build as early as there was such an intention, and the lease was given for the purposes of the lessee erecting the building, the finding that the owner did not post notices under Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, within three days after he obtained knowledge of the intended construction of the building was immaterial, for the owner was not entitled to give such notices.

10. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 78*)—NOTICES—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1192, providing for the giving of notice by the owner after obtaining knowledge of the construction of a building on his land that he will not be responsible therefor, does not give to the owner two periods at which he may give the notice, and where he has knowledge of the intention to build, he must act on that knowledge, and at once post the notice, and where he has no knowledge of the intention, he must move with like promptness on learning of the fact of construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

11. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 290*)—ENFORCEMENT—FINDINGS—CONFORMITY TO ISSUES.

A pleading in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien which alleges that defendant was the owner of the premises, and that a codefendant was the lessee, and a finding that the lessee was the mere agent of the owner in the construction of the building, are not inconsistent, because neither the ownership of defendant nor the holding of the lease by codefendant prevented the latter from acting as agent of the former in constructing the building.

Consolidated actions by the Western Lumber & Mill Company and by the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company against the Merchants' Amusement Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs in each action, defendant, J. R. Gager, in each action appeals. Affirmed.

Elon G. Galusha and Gray, Barker & Bowen, for appellant. Scarborough & Bowen, for respondent Western Lumber & Mill Co. Lloyd W. Moultrie, for respondent E. G. Judah. Borden & Carhart, for respondents City Mill & Mfg. Co., Whittier-Coburn Co., and L. J. Smith. G. P. Adams, for respondent Howe Bros. Hickcox & Crenshaw, for respondent United Casting Co. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent Pacific Ornamental Decorating Co. John W. Kemp and Kemp & Collier, for respondents J. B. Dawson and Merchants' Amusement Co.

TAGGART, J. Consolidated action to foreclose mechanics' liens. Complaints were filed by Western Lumber & Mill Company and Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company. In the former action, the owner of the land, Gager, the lessee in whose name the building was constructed, Merchants' Amusement Company, the contractor, J. B. Dawson, and all persons claiming liens, including the plaintiff in the other action, the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company, were named as defendants. In the action last entitled only the owner, lessee, and contractor and two fictitious persons were made defendants. Of the defendant lienors, in the first action, Whittier-Coburn Company, E. G. Judah, City Mill & Manufacturing Company, Mutual (United) Casting Company, Howe Bros., and L. J. Smith filed answers and cross-complaints. The defendants owner, lessee, and contractor answered to each of the cross-complaints, except that of Howe Bros., and to the complaint of the Western Lumber & Mill Company, but did not answer the complaint of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company, and no answers or cross-complaints were filed by any one in the action instituted by the last-named plaintiff. Neither did the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company file an answer or cross-complaint in the other action. Judgment was given for both plaintiffs and all the lien claimants who appeared, and a sale of the premises to satisfy the liens ordered.

This appeal is by Gager, the owner of the land upon which the building was constructed. It is contended that as to the action of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company the record fails to show that jurisdiction was ever acquired of the person of the appellant, and that as to him the complaint filed by that corporation states no cause of action. A reversal of the entire judgment is also asked upon the grounds that the evidence does not sustain the finding of the trial court that appellant's attempt to post a notice of nonliability under section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure was ineffective because not posted in accordance with the provisions of the section, or the finding that the Merchants' Amusement Company was merely the agent of appellant in the construction of the building on his premises, and that therefore appellant was not entitled to give the notice provided by that section.

The copy of the judgment roll in the transcript, which is certified to be full, true, and correct, contains no evidence of any service of summons or of the complaint of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company upon any of the defendants therein named, of any appearance by either or any of them, or of any issue joined upon any of the allegations of the complaint, and the only finding or recital in this respect is found in the findings of fact, that "the plaintiffs and cross-complainants, and the various defendants appearing by their respective attorneys," etc. The bill of exceptions recites that upon the trial of the consolidated actions the attorneys for the Western Lumber & Mill Company appeared for the plaintiff, while the names of the attorneys signing the complaint in the other action appear as attorneys "for the defendant the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company." Appellant was represented at the trial by counsel, and it was stipulated by the parties, and ordered by the court, that "any testimony introduced in the case will be introduced for the benefit of all the parties to the suit represented upon the trial"; and also, "that it may be deemed that the defendants Gager and Dawson and Merchants' Amusement Company specifically deny each of the allegations in each of the cross-complaints, except the allegation that Gager is the owner of the property, * * * except also where answers are filed to such cross-complaints the case will stand on such answers." Unless the complaint of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company is assumed to have been treated the same as a cross-complaint in the other action, the latter stipulation would affect only the defendant Howe Bros. It is apparent from the stipulation as to the evidence, and the introduction of the notice and lien of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company without objection, that all parties assumed that corporation to be properly before the court to present its lien and obtain a judgment, if otherwise entitled. The question of jurisdiction was not raised at the trial, and seems to hinge upon whether or not the recital in the findings that there was such an appearance by Gager is sufficient to sustain the judgment against the attack here made.

The fact that a judgment was rendered against Gager in favor of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company implies that the court ascertained that it had jurisdiction of both the subject-matter of the complaint and the person of appellant before rendering such judgment. It will be presumed in support of the judgment of a court of record that the court acted upon evidence of some kind. If the record discloses a recital in the judgment or judgment roll that jurisdiction has been acquired, or facts from which jurisdiction may be inferred, there is no occasion to invoke the presumption; it is only when the record is silent that the necessity for the presumption arises. To assume that a court has proceeded to hear a controversy before determining that it had jurisdiction of the cause and the parties to the controversy would involve the presumption that the court had failed to do its duty, and such a presumption is never indulged. In re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 600, 36 Pac. 11. While the attack upon the judgment in the case cited was a collateral one, it was said by the Supreme Court in another case in which the jurisdiction of the trial court to enter a judgment was questioned on a direct appeal: The presumption of verity which attaches to the record of a domestic judgment is the same upon a direct appeal therefrom as exists in the collateral attack, the only difference being that upon a direct appeal it is essential for the party seeking to sustain the judgment to show by the record itself that the court had jurisdiction of the defendant, whereas in a collateral attack the entry of the judgment is itself conclusive of such jurisdiction. Upon a direct attack there is no presumption in favor of the existence of any fact essential to the jurisdiction of the court over the defendant; but in all matters of which the judgment contains a record, its verity, in the absence of any contradictory evidence, will be presumed as fully as upon collateral attack. The defendant may, upon a direct appeal, by bill of exceptions, present evidence outside of the record for the purpose of showing that the court did not have jurisdiction over him, while in a collateral attack such objection is available only when it appears from the record itself. In both cases the record is conclusive as to all matters as to which it speaks, unless impeached in the foregoing manner. Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 606, 29 Pac. 220. No effort was made to impeach the recital of the trial court that the appellant appeared by attorney at the trial of the issues raised by the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company's complaint. The same rule which permits the record to be impeached also allows a showing to be made in support of the recitals in the record, and the latter may be aided by the presentation of any facts upon which, if they appeared in the judgment roll, a finding of jurisdiction might be predicated. The recital in the judgment roll that appellant appeared by attorney, impliedly to contest the claim of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company, is supported by the record of the proceedings at the trial, while, on the other hand, no attempt is made to impeach either the recital or the evidence tending to establish its truth. The voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of summons and complaint. Code Civ. Proc. § 416. A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of an appearance for him (Code Civ. Proc. § 1014). The Code does not require such an appearance to be made a part of the judgment roll (Lyons v. Roach, 84 Cal. 27, 29, 23 Pac. 1026); and if the judgment roll were silent, the presumption that the court had some evidence to sustain it in assuming jurisdiction would be supported by the facts in the bill of exceptions above mentioned, and there is no evidence in conflict with this. There being, however, a recital in the judgment roll that appellant appeared in both actions, and uncontradicted evidence tending to sustain the recital in the bill of exceptions, the contention that the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment in favor of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company cannot be sustained.

It is contended that the complaint of the Pacific Ornamental Decorating Company does not state a cause of action because it neither alleges that there was anything due from the owner to the contractor at the time the lien was filed, nor that the contract was for an amount exceeding one thousand dollars and not recorded. No demurrer to the complaint was filed, and the evidence at the trial disclosed, and the court found, that the contract was to erect a building for a price exceeding one thousand dollars, and that the contract was not recorded. This issue having been tried and a general finding made thereon as to all the parties to both actions, without objection by appellant or limitation by the court, it must be presumed that the trial was had and the finding made in support of the claim of the decorating company. It is, therefore, too late to object to the absence of this allegation, if necessary (which we are not to be understood as holding) at this time. It is conceded that, if it had been alleged that there was a contract for an amount exceeding $1,000, which was not recorded, it would have been unnecessary to allege there was anything due on the contract in order to bind the owner.

The finding of the trial court that appellant did not post notices under section 1192 within three days after he had obtained knowledge of the intended construction of the building thereon, and not within three days after he obtained knowledge of the actual work of construction, etc., is rendered immaterial by the other finding that the corporation lessee was the mere agent of the owner of the land in the erection and construction of the building, and that such an owner was not entitled to give the notice under section 1192, Code Civ. Proc. No other inference could well be drawn from the evidence than that Gager had full knowledge of, and participated in, all the acts of the corporation, either in person or by representative. He had knowledge of the intention to build as early as there was such an intention, and the lease was given to the defendant corporation, and the corporation was formed for the purpose of erecting the building in question. We do not understand that the law gives to an owner two periods at which he may give the notice provided by section 1192. If he has knowledge of the intention to build, he must act on that knowledge and at once (within three days) post the notice that all materialmen, artisans, and laborers may know that he will not be responsible. If he has no knowledge of the intention upon which to act, he must move with like promptness upon obtaining knowledge of the construction. As above said, however, this is rendered immaterial, as the evidence justifies the finding that Gager was himself merely using the corporation as an instrument to carry out the venture in which that body was engaged.

We do not think the latter finding is inconsistent with the pleadings. It is true that it was both alleged and stipulated that Gager was the owner of the premises, and that the amusement company was the lessee, but neither the ownership of the former nor the holding of the lease by the latter prevented the latter from acting as the agent of the former in constructing the building. If it were alleged that Gager was the owner, and the evidence disclosed that the work was done in the name of a corporation which he organized and controlled and through which he acted, a finding that he acted through such corporation as his agent would be sustained. SULLIVAN v. MORTON DRAYING & WAREHOUSE CO. et al.

(Civ. 755, 757.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1910. Rehearing Denied April 8, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1910.)

1. Master and Servant (§ 304*) — Injuries to Third Persons—Negligence of Servant—Liability of Master—Violation of Ordinance.

Where the driver of a dray left his team on a public street without first securing the wheels on the dray, in violation of ordinance, his employer is guilty of statutory negligence, though a suitable chain for locking the wheels was attached to the body of the dray.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 705*)—Use of Streets—Locking Wheels—Leaving Vehicles Without Lock—"Leave."

Defendant's dray driver finished loading his dray from a car, drove away from the car from four to six feet and stopped the team, and was tying the load on the dray without having hold of the lines, when another team frightened his horses and they backed against the car, crushing plaintiff. Held, that the driver was not negligent as having left his team, within an ordinance making it unlawful to leave an animal attached to a dray upon a public street without locking the wheels of the vehicle; to "leave," within the ordinance, meaning to depart or abandon for the time, to go away from the immediate charge and supervision of the animals.

3. Municipal Corporations (§ 703*)—Ordinances—Construction—Use of Streets—Fastening Wheels of Wagon.

An ordinance making it a misdemeanor to leave an animal attached to a dray on a public street without locking the wheels of the vehicle, and to drive a dray, etc., without having attached a suitable chain for locking to the body thereof, is penal in its nature, and cannot be extended beyond the plain meaning of its words.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 703.*]

4. Negligence (§ 121*)—Burden of Proof.

The burden is upon plaintiff to prove negligence, either by direct or circumstantial evidence.

5. Municipal Corporations (§ 706*) — Injuries — Actions — Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action against two defendants, B. and M., for injuries by the team of M. being frightened by B.'s team and backing against a car, crushing plaintiff, evidence was admissible by B. that the space between the horses attached by M.'s dray and the railroad tracks was sufficient for its own team to pass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

6. Appeal and Error (§ 1057*)—Harmless Error—Exclusion of Evidence.

Where, in an action against two defendants, M. and B., for injuries by M.'s team being frightened by B.'s team and backing against a car, crushing plaintiff, ample evidence was admitted as to whether there was room for B.'s team to pass in front of M.'s horses, and the evidence sustained a finding that B.'s team was negligently driven into M.'s team, causing it to back, error in excluding other evidence offered by B. as to the space in front of M.'s horses to show that there was sufficient space for its team to pass between the tracks and the horses, was not reversible.

7. Evidence (§ 507*)—Opinion Evidence—Expert Testimony—Matters of Common Knowledge.

The question of how near the driver of a team can approach the heads of horses of another team without danger, in the exercise of due care, depends on various circumstances which are matters of common knowledge and experience and not of science, so that expert testimony on the question is not admissible.

8. Appeal and Error (§ 1041*)—Harmless Error—Rulings on Pleadings—Amendments.

In an action against two defendants for negligent injuries, one defendant could not complain of an amendment to the complaint tending to show negligence of the other defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4106–4109; Dec. Dig. § 1041.*]

9. Trial (§ 252*)—Instructions—Application to Facts.

In an action against two defendants, M. and B., for injuries by M.'s team backing over plaintiff and crushing him because frightened by B.'s team claimed to have been caused by the violation of an ordinance making it unlawful to leave a dray without locking the wheels, an instruction requested by B. that men in governing their conduct, in absence of contrary knowledge, may assume that others have not violated the law, was properly refused as inapplicable, where M.'s driver did not leave the dray, within the meaning of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 252.*]

10. Municipal Corporations (§ 705*)—Use of Streets—Negligent Driving—Proximate Cause of Injury.

While the driver of M.'s team had gotten down to fasten his load, B.'s team was negligently driven so as to frighten M.'s team, which backed up and crushed plaintiff's intestate. Held, that the fact that the accident would not have happened if the wheels of M.'s dray had been locked was no excuse for the negligent driving of B.'s team, where the act of M.'s driver in getting down did not amount to a leaving of his team within an ordinance requiring wheels to be locked in such cases, the condition and equipment of M.'s dray being immaterial on the question of B.'s liability, unless M.'s driver violated the ordinance and by the fact of so doing was negligent.

Action by Frank J. Sullivan, administrator of the estate of Michael P. Sullivan, against the Morton Draying & Warehouse Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, and an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment, each defendant appeals.

Reversed as to defendant named, and affirmed as to the other defendant.

In No. 757: Jesse Lilienthal and Albert Raymond, for appellant Morton Draying & Warehouse Co. William J. Herrin, for respondent Sullivan. Myrick & Deering, for respondent Bocarde Drayage Co.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought against defendants to recover damages caused by reason of their alleged joint negligence in causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff against both defendants, and judgment was accordingly entered. Each defendant appeals in a separate record from the judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial, and from an order denying its motion to vacate the judgment, but both appeals will be considered together. In this opinion the appellants will be referred to as the Morton Company and the Bocarde Company respectively. Upon an examination of the record we are of the opinion that the motion of the Morton Company for a nonsuit should have been granted, and that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the verdict as to it.

The evidence shows that while deceased was standing at the door of a railroad box car, with his back toward the dray of the Morton Company, in a place of apparent safety, where he was following his usual avocation, the dray, which was from four to six feet from the car, and which had just been loaded with freight, consisting of boxes, tent poles, tents, and government supplies, was backed up by the team jerking backward toward the car, thus catching deceased between the dray and the car, crushing and killing him. The evidence tended to show that while the Morton dray was standing in the street, and about four to six feet from the said car, with two horses attached, a team with the dray attached belonging to the Bocarde Company was carelessly and negligently driven into the Morton Company's team, thereby frightening the team and causing it to back the dray against the car. There is no claim made as to negligence on the part of the Morton Company except that it was guilty of statutory negligence in violating an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, which ordinance is as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person using or having control of any animal to leave the same upon any public street without being securely fastened, unless it be attached to a dray, truck or water-cart; or, if attached to a dray, truck or water-cart, to leave such animal upon the public street without first securely locking the wheels of the vehicle to which it is attached.

"2. It shall be unlawful for any person to drive or use any truck, dray or water-cart without having attached to the body thereof a suitable chain for locking the wheels thereof.

"3. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor."

It is admitted that the Morton Company's dray did not have attached to the body thereof a suitable chain for locking the wheels, and that the wheels were not locked at the time of the accident. In so far as the Morton Company violated the ordinance by not having a suitable chain attached to its dray, that is a matter entirely with the city authorities in a proper proceeding, and in no way applies to the facts here. If the driver of the Morton Company's team left it upon a public street without first securely locking the wheels of the dray the company would be guilty of statutory negligence, and this would be so even if a suitable chain had been attached to the body of the dray. The question then, as to the Morton Company, is narrowed down to the single one as to whether or not its driver left the team upon the public street within the meaning of the ordinance.

The evidence shows, without conflict, that the Morton Company's driver Sorensen, had just finished loading the dray with freight, tent poles and tents in cases; that he then pulled away from the car from four to six feet, stopping the team and heading the horses towards Sixth street; that he then took a rope and was engaged in fastening the load and tying the cases when he heard some one give the alarm and immediately he observed that his team was backing from the fright caused by the approach of the Bocarde team and dray. Sorensen did not then have hold of the lines, but he was right at the dray and engaged in fastening the load. Immediately upon hearing the alarm and seeing the team backing he jumped on the footboard and drove the horses up so as to release deceased. In our opinion the driver had not left the team within the meaning of the ordinance. The meaning of the word "leave" as used in the ordinance is, to depart or go from, to quit. We use the word "leave" in such sense when we say, "He has just left the house," or "He left his plow in the furrow," or "He has left his wife and children." Thus Milton says (P. L. XI, 1, 269):

> "Must I leave thee, Paradise? thus leave
> "Thee, native soil; these happy walks and

The ordinance means, to depart from, to abandon for the time, to go away from the immediate charge and supervision of the animal or animals so left. It is penal in its nature and cannot be extended beyond its plain words and its ordinary common sense meaning. No one in the ordinary walks of life would say that a teamster, while tying up his load, had left his team. If the ordinance had said that no one should let loose of the lines by which his horses are held without first securely locking the wheels the meaning would be very different; but if the respondent's contention is correct the driver who should attach his lines to the seat or lever of the brake, and get down on the ground to lock the wheels, would be guilty of leaving his team, at least while going from his seat to the wheels. Such is not the meaning of the ordinance.

In Wasmer v. Del., Lacka. & W. R. R. Co., 80 N. Y. 212, 36 Am. Rep. 608, the ordinance of the city made it unlawful for any person to leave a horse in the street unless securely tied. The court, in passing upon the meaning of the ordinance, said: "It cannot be supposed that it was intended by this ordinance to require all vendors or peddlers of commodities in the streets to tie their horses or have some one hold them while they are momentarily engaged in delivering the commodities to persons in the streets or at the doors of the houses along the streets. Nor can it be supposed that it was intended to inflict a penalty upon every person who should fail to tie or hold his horses in the streets while standing near them. The ordinance was manifestly intended to reach the cases of persons who might leave their horses in the streets not tied, and go away from them out of sight, or to such a distance as to lose that control which persons may usually exercise over horses when near them."

In Oddie v. Mendenhall, 84 Minn. 58, 86 N. W. 881, the ordinance provided that it should be "unlawful for any person to leave any horse attached to a vehicle in a street without fastening such animal in the manner provided for herein." The court said: "A reasonable construction must be given to this ordinance. Its object was evidently to prevent drivers from leaving horses standing in the streets without control. It cannot be held that this ordinance must be construed to require a person getting out of a wagon or carriage to hitch the horse attached thereto, even though occupants of the carriage remain therein." See, also, Monroe v. Hartford, etc., Co., 76 Conn. 201, 56 Atl. 498; Rowe v. Reneer, 30 Ky. Law Rep. 545, 99 S. W. 250.

It is incumbent upon a party seeking to recover against a defendant by reason of alleged negligence to prove such negligence, and this proof may be either direct, or by the proof of facts and circumstances from which negligence may be inferred. In this case there is no attempt to prove any fact or circumstance, as to the Morton Company, except the fact that its team attached to the dray was standing on one of the public streets of the city and county of San Francisco, and that the driver of the team was not holding the lines, but was with the dray or truck engaged in fastening the load, and near to and within easy access to the team. In such case we cannot hold that the Morton Company is liable under the ordinance. As to the Bocarde Company, other errors are alleged, which we will consider in their order.

The court excluded certain testimony offered by the Bocarde Company for the purpose of showing the space between the horses of the Morton Company and the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the south on King street. It is claimed by the Bocarde Company that the offered testimony was material, and that it should have been permitted in order to show that there was plenty of room for its team to pass between the team of the Morton Company and the railroad track. While, in our opinion, it would have been better for the court to have admitted the testimony and to have allowed the cross-examination more scope in order that the jury might be fully informed upon each and every phase of the case, yet we do not think the rulings of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. The witness Ryan testified to this point, and when asked by counsel what was the space, answered "I think the width of this room." The question as to the space was fully covered by the evidence of the witnesses Rich, Free, and Archibold. Not only this, but there is testimony in the record amply sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that the Bocarde Company's team was negligently driven into the team of the Morton Company, thus causing it to back, and in such case it is not very material as to whether the space was 8 feet or 15 feet in width. If the driver of the Bocarde team had plenty of space and yet drove into or against the horses of the Morton team, it would tend to show a still greater degree of negligence.

The court did not err in excluding the testimony of experts as to how near in the exercise of care and skill the driver of a team can approach the heads of the horses of another team and drive past without danger, or as to the custom or peculiarities of horses in settling back in their breeching. The question was not one relating to science, art, or trade. As to how near the driver of one team can approach the horses' heads of another team without danger necessarily depends upon a variety of circumstances, such as the location, the kind of team being driven, and the kind of team being approached, and the kind of vehicle to which the team is attached. These were matters of general, every day knowledge, observation, and experience, and the jurors hearing the evidence and all the facts were as capable of forming correct conclusions as any so-called experts could be. We all know that most animals will shrink or retire from approaching danger, and that a team of horses upon being run into or struck by the harness or wagon of an approaching team would be very likely to pull back or retire so as to avert the danger.

It was not error for the court to allow the plaintiff to amend his complaint by alleging, as an act of negligence on the part of the Morton Company, that it drove its truck without having attached thereto a suitable chain for locking the wheels. Ryan v. Oakland Gas Light, etc., Co., 10 Cal. App. 484, 102 Pac. 558. Not only this, but the Bocarde Company has no right to complain of an amendment tending to show negligence on the part of the Morton Company.

The Bocarde Company was not injured by the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that "men in governing their conduct, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, are entitled to assume that others have not violated the law." The proposition as stated in the abstract may be correct, but it has no application to the facts here. It was evidently intended to be considered in connection with the claim that the driver of the Morton team had left his dray without locking the wheels; but, as has been before stated, the driver had not left his team within the meaning of the ordinance. The court gave other instructions fully and fairly covering every material phase of the case, and as favorable to the Bocarde Company as it was entitled to under the law.

The instruction numbered 36, requested by the Bocarde Company, was properly refused. The evidence did not warrant it, as it did not show that the Morton Company had omitted to perform any duty imposed by ordinance.

The findings of the jury in regard to the special issues submitted to it are not inconsistent with each other or with the general verdict. It was found upon sufficient evidence that the driver of the Bocarde team carelessly and negligently drove his team in front of the horses of the Morton Company; that this caused the horses of the Morton Company to back, and that this was the proximate cause of the injury to deceased. The finding to the effect that if the Morton Company had supplied its dray with a suitable chain, and that if the chain had been used, and the wheels of the Morton truck locked, the accident would not have occurred is not material, nor does it in any way tend to excuse the negligence of the Bocarde Company. Unless the Morton Company was guilty of negligence by reason of the violation of the ordinance, the condition and equipment of its dray was wholly immaterial.

We conclude that the judgment and orders as to the Morton Company must be reversed, and as to the Bocarde Company affirmed, and it is so ordered.

3. Executors and Administrators (§ 197*)—Allowance to Widow.

Under Code Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; John E. Gray, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Agrippa L. Overton, deceased. From an order discontinuing her allowance, the widow of decedent appeals. Appeal dismissed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. On June 1, 1908, the superior court made an order allowing the surviving widow $50 per month from the date of the death of decedent for her maintenance and support, "and to continue until the further order of this court." On November 28, 1908, H. L. Overton, on behalf of himself and certain other children and heirs at law of deceased, devisees, and legatees of the will of decedent, filed a petition praying for the discontinuance of said allowance. On December 1, 1908, the petition came on to be heard, and the court on that day made an order granting the petition "discontinuing any family allowance to the said widow in said estate." The widow appeals from this order on the ground, as stated in her brief, that under section 1466, Code Civ. Proc., the court "must make such reasonable allowance out of the estate for the widow," etc., and that, when so made, the order "becomes a final judgment in her favor for that amount"; that, no appeal having been taken from that order and the time for appeal having passed, the power of the court over its order was at an end and "the superior court was without jurisdiction to review the order."

Respondent makes the point that the order is not appealable, which we think is well taken. Subdivision 3, § 963, Code Civ. Proc., gives an appeal from an order "against or in favor of setting apart property, or making an allowance for a widow or child." No appeal is given from an order discontinuing an allowance. If the court was without jurisdiction to make the order complained of, its power could be tested by certiorari, but not by appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. Appellant attempts to meet the point by the suggestion that, as the effect of the order is to deprive her of the allowance, it is equivalent to an order refusing to grant an allowance. We cannot so understand the Code section. It refers to the original order granting or refusing the allowance prayed for. In analogous cases the Supreme Court has denied the appealability of such orders as the one here. In Estate of Smith, 51 Cal. 563, an appeal from an order refusing to set aside an order of sale (an appealable order) was dismissed. Like action was taken in Estate of Dunne, 53 Cal. 631, where the order appealed from was an order setting aside a former order allowing an account. So, also, in Estate of Hickey, 121 Cal. 378, 53 Pac. 818, where the order appealed from vacated a prior order settling a final account. Likewise, so held in Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 Pac. 383, where the order appealed from was an order refusing to vacate an order setting apart a homestead.

It is not a sufficient answer to the motion to dismiss the appeal that the lower court had no authority to make the order appealed from. The right to appeal comes from the statute, and not from any unauthorized action of the court. Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103.

The court retained its power over the order by the provision "until the further order of this court." Upon proper showing it became its duty, and it was within its power, to reduce or discontinue the allowance. Estate of Montgomery, 60 Cal. 648; In re Stevens, 83 Cal. 322, 326, 23 Pac. 379, 17 Am. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $300, rental for certain premises leased by plaintiff to defendants by a written lease. The lease was executed in September, 1906, and the defendants entered into possession of the demised premises, and have ever since continued in possession, but refuse to pay the agreed rental falling due March 12, 1908, solely upon the ground that the building which they leased and the possession of which they have enjoyed, and apparently still retain, was erected in violation of the provision of the ordinance establishing fire limits and regulating the construction of buildings.

It is contended by appellant that, because the erection of the building was a violation of such ordinance punishable by a fine, the consideration for the contract of lease between plaintiff and defendants was illegal, and the contract in consequence void. That a contract founded upon an illegal consideration, or having for its purpose a violation of the law, is void and may not be enforced cannot be denied. Such are the cases cited by appellant. But to the proposition that the leasing and giving possession of a building, originally illegally constructed, for an agreed rental involves any violation of law, we cannot agree. The ordinance does not in terms prohibit the leasing of such a building, and the lease in this case was for no illegal purpose.

This case is analogous to Sharp v. Taylor, 41 Eng. Rep. 1153, 22 Eng. Ch. 801. The action was for an accounting between joint owners of an American vessel. The owners were British subjects, and, in violation of an act of Parliament, had caused the vessel to be registered in the name of an American owner in order that she could be used in commerce between American and British ports. The Lord Chancellor said: "The next point is that plaintiff's claim is in violation of the English ship registry acts. * * * But the answer to the objection appears to me this: That the plaintiff does not ask to enforce any agreement adverse to the provision of the act of Parliament. He is not seeking compensation and payment for any illegal voyage; that matter was disposed of when Taylor received the money; and the plaintiff is now only seeking for payment of his share of realized profits. The violation of the law suggested was not any fraud upon the revenue, or omission to pay what might be due, but, at most, an evasion of a parliamentary provision supposed to be beneficial to the shipowners of this country, an evil, if any, which must remain the same whether the freight be divided between Sharp and Taylor, according to their shares, or remain altogether in the hands of Taylor."

So in the case at bar the violation of the ordinance had been accomplished. The evil had been done before the lease was executed. It was perhaps within the power of the municipality to cause the building to be removed. But until this was done it remained the property of plaintiff, and defendants certainly had no right to take and enjoy the possession thereof under a lease and not be bound by the terms thereof. A different question would be presented if the action was by the builder to recover for having constructed the building; but to permit the defendants in this case to take and enjoy the possession of plaintiff's building without paying therefor as they agreed would be to encourage the grossest breach of fair dealing in the business world. McDonald v. Lund, 13 Wash. 412, 43 Pac. 348. The mere fact that certain property has been acquired in violation of some law does not rob it of its character of property, nor prevent it from being the subject of legitimate contracts which may be enforced in courts of law. Roselle v. Beckemeir, 134 Mo. 380, 35 S. W. 1132; Andrews v. New Orleans, etc., Ass'n, 74 Miss. 362, 20 South. 837, 60 Am. St. Rep. 509; Minnesota, etc., Co. v. Whitebreast, etc., Co., 56 Ill. App. 248; Brooks v. Martin, 69 U. S. 70, 17 L. Ed. 732; Planters' Bank v. Union, 83 U. S. 483, 21 L. Ed. 473. "Although there may be some illegal features indirectly connected with a transaction involved in a suit, yet the plaintiff may recover if his cause of action is otherwise legitimate, and he can make out his case without calling to his aid the illegal agreement. The test of whether the demand can be enforced at law is whether the plaintiff requires the aid of the illegal contract to establish his case." Minnesota Lumber Co. v. Whitebreast Coal Co., supra.

The contract relied upon by the plaintiff in this case was entirely independent of and had no connection with the violation of the ordinance involved in the construction of the building. It is a matter of the history of San Francisco that after the great fire of April, 1906, by tacit consent of the public authorities property owners were allowed to construct buildings within the fire limits without regard to the fire ordinance. It was the only practicable method of providing facilities whereby thousands of citizens might resume useful and necessary business and callings. These defendants having availed themselves of one of such buildings to conduct their legitimate business, it would be a perversion of justice for a court of law to sanction their evasion of the payment of the agreed rent. We do not think the law requires it.

PAYMENT (§ 85*)—OVERPAYMENT—RECOVERY.

Within a territory, the retail lumber business of which, as between defendant, a wholesale lumber company, and N., a retail lumber company, was allotted to N., a sale to a third person was made by one who was president of N. and sales agent of defendant. The transaction was treated between N. and defendant as a retail sale, and, while the shipment was direct to the customer, the charge was made to N. The sale to the customer was made at less than the regular rate, and, in ignorance of this fact, the N. Company paid defendant's bill which was at the regular rate. Held, that N. was entitled to reimbursement from defendant for the excess thus paid to defendant through its error in making out the bill; the contract of sale being really a sale to N. by defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

W. W. Middlecoff, H. M. Willis, and Percy R. Wilson, for appellant. E. C. Campbell, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The facts as found by the court are these: Defendant, a corporation, was engaged in the wholesale lumber business at Los Angeles. The Newport Lumber Company, a corporation, was engaged in the retail lumber business at Redlands in San Bernardino county. The principal amount of the capital stock of the latter company was owned by the former. The defendant company sold to the Newport Company a bill of lumber which was by the defendant shipped directly to the consumer, but charged, under a business arrangement existing between the two corporations, to the Newport Company. In billing the lumber to the Newport Company, a charge of $446.29 in excess of the contract price at which the lumber was sold appeared. The Newport Company, without discovering such error, paid to defendant the amount of the bill as rendered to defendant. Thereafter, the Newport Company sold and assigned to plaintiff its claim on account of such excess payment so made by mistake, no part of which has ever been repaid. The court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, from which judgment and an order denying a new trial defendant appeals.

The issues presented by the pleadings involve not only the fact of sale and delivery of the lumber as found by the court, but the payment of the sum through mistake, as well as the assignment of the claim, if any existed. An affirmative defense was presented by defendant's answer, to the effect that any claim on account of overcharge in the transaction was not included in the sale and assignment of the assets of such company to plaintiff. The court found against defendant as to each and all of the allegations of its answer. The specifications of error all relate to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the various findings.

Considering the findings with reference to the sale and the fact that an error existed in the billing of the lumber, we find evidence in the record tending to show that one Nofziger, the active agent in the contract of sale on behalf of the lumber company, was the president of the Newport Company, as well as the sales agent of the defendant, but the retail lumber business in Redlands and vicinity as between the two corporations had been allotted as territory in which the Newport Company was to carry on its retail business; that the material connected with the controversy had been contracted by Nofziger at a fixed price less than the listed retail price at which lumber was billed to the Newport Company, and, notwithstanding the direct shipment to the consumer, the transaction was treated between the two corporations as a retail sale in the territory of the Newport Company, and, in keeping with their business transactions, the charge by defendant was made directly to the Newport Company and the Newport Company, in ignorance of the contract made with the consumer, credited the defendant with the list price, and charged the consumer therewith. After payment by the Newport Company to defendant, the Newport Company undertook to collect the amount of the bill, when the error was discovered, and Nofziger, admitting the mistake, directed the Newport Company to credit the consumer with the excess above the contract price and charge back to the Consolidated Company the amount of such error, and a settlement was made by the Newport Company with the consumer accordingly.

We think, under the circumstances narrated, the Newport Company, being in a sense a collection agency for the defendant, could only be held chargeable with the actual contract price of the material shipped to the consumer, and having no knowledge of the error, and being restricted in the amount of its collection from the consumer to the actual contract price, was entitled to reimbursement from the defendant of the amount of such error occasioned by defendant's act. The contract, under the circumstances, was correctly interpreted by the trial court as a sale to the Newport Company. The written bill of sale subsequently made by the Newport Company to the plaintiff comprehended a transfer of all of its assets, including this claim against defendant.

Treating the amendment to defendant's answer, in which is alleged the mistake in the bill of sale, as a pleading sufficient to raise an issue entitling defendant to a correction thereof, the court determined that it was not satisfied that such mistake existed, and found against the defendant in relation thereto, and from the evidence the court was warranted in such finding.

The record presents a case which, in our opinion, demands upon the part of defendant that it reimburse the assignee of the Newport Company, plaintiff herein, to the extent of the error so occasioned by the Consolidated Company; and we find no error in the record warranting a reversal of the judgment or of the order, and the same are affirmed.

ROSS v. FRANK. (Civ. 649.)

1. Sales (§ 72*)—Contract—Construction—"Orchard Run"—"Test Accepted at 53."

Plaintiff contracted to sell all the prunes on his trees, estimated at 35 tons, more or less, the contract reciting: "For prunes running orchard run (60 to the pound) when dried, $95 per ton (with variations of $1.00 per point up or down). All prunes to be good merchantable quality. Test accepted at 53." The words in parentheses were erased when the contract was executed. Held, that by the words "orchard run" was meant all the prunes in the orchard, without reference to size in grading, and the phrase "Test accepted at 53" meant that the prunes had been tested and accepted, and that the result was 53 to the pound, and did not mean that defendant should be liable only for such prunes as conformed to the test.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by J. W. Ross against George Frank, doing business under the firm name of Frank & Co. Judgment for defendant, and, from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

Walter G. Fitzgerald and John P. Fitzgerald, for appellant. Will M. Beggs, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover a balance claimed to be due for his crop of prunes for the year 1905 sold and delivered to defendant. The defendant recovered judgment, and this appeal is by plaintiff from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is conceded that the findings of the court and the judgment are the result of the construction given by the trial court to the written contract for the sale of the prunes which, with the erasures and interlineations, is as follows:

"H. C. Newby, Purchasing Agent. Gilroy, R. D. 26, and Coyote, Cal. Prune Purchasing Contract. Made in Duplicate. No. 70. Gilroy, Rural 25 Cal., Sept. 7, 19—. This contract made and entered into the above date by and between J. G. Ross and H. C. Newby of Santa Clara County, Cal. Witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the sum of One (1.00) dollars in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said Ross has sold to the said H. C. Newby, and said H. C. Newby has bought of the said Ross all of the French prunes now on the trees or being picked and dried from the Ross Orchard on the Soap Lake Road at Prunedale, estimated at about 35 tons more or less when dried, on the following terms and conditions: Terms, cash on delivery at the Geo. Frank & Co. Packing House at San Jose, Cal. For prunes running Orchard Run (60 to the pound) when dried, ninety-five $95 dollars per ton (with variations of one $1.00 dollar per point up or down), sacks to be furnished by the purchaser. All prunes to be of good merchantable quality, well dried, and delivered on or before Nov. 1st, 1905, and jointly scaled, according to the above terms, when ready to ship. Test Accepted at 53. J. George Ross, Seller. H. C. Newby, Purchaser. Remarks: Purchaser to pay freight charges."

"San Jose, Cal., Sept. 9, 1905. We hereby agree and contract to receive and pay for all the prunes mentioned and named in the purchaser's contract on receipt of the same at our packing house at San Jose, Cal., according to the terms, prices and conditions herein set forth, and to furnish the sack for shipping the prunes to our packing house. Geo. Frank & Co., by Geo. Frank."

The contract was prepared upon a printed form used by defendant in making contracts for the purchase of prunes, and the words in italics were written in the contract at the time it was executed, and at the same time the words in parentheses were erased by running a pen through them, so that they were intentionally taken from the printed contract. It is said that 60 to the pound, or a test of 60, means 60 dried prunes to the pound as a basis; that "with variations of one dollar per point up or down" means $1 per ton more when the prunes run less than the basis of 60 to the pound, and $1 per ton less when they run more than 60 to the pound; so that prunes that would run 65 to the pound would be worth $5 less per ton, and if they ran 55 to the pound they would be worth $5 more per ton, with 60 as a basis. This, however, is not material except in aiding us to arrive at the meaning of the contract.

The trial court held that the phrase, "Test accepted at 53" was as matter of law a warranty that the defendant was not liable at the rate of $95 per ton except for such portion of the plaintiff's crop as would test 53 according to the tests as herein stated. We do not so construe the contract. The contract was a sale of all plaintiff's French prunes on the trees, or being picked and dried from the Ross orchard. The words "orchard run" were ex industria written in the contract. The provisions as to the basis of 60 to the pound and as to variations of $1 per point up and down were intentionally erased from the contract. By the words "orchard run" was meant all the French prunes in the orchard without any references to size in grading. It was intended that the entire crop of prunes, whether above or below the test of 53, was to be paid for at the rate of $95 per ton. The only warranty in the contract was that the prunes were to "be of good merchantable quality well dried." It is not claimed that they did not comply with the contract in this regard. The phrase "Test accepted at 53" meant that the prunes had been tested and accepted, and that the result of the test was 53 to the pound. The agent of defendant examined the prunes, tested them, and stated the result of his test, but he purchased for defendant all the prunes of good merchantable quality well dried. The whole crop, whether 35 tons more or less, was purchased by the ton. The whole crop, whether 53 to the pound more or less, was purchased, and it was so intended. No provision was made as to a greater price for superior prunes, or prunes that would run less than 53, nor for a less price for prunes that should run more. One price for all sizes is the express provision of the contract. The words in the contract, "and jointly scaled, according to the above terms, when ready to ship," were in the printed contract, and would apply provided the prunes had been sold on the basis of 60, "variation of one dollar per point up and down"; but, as the provision to which the words would apply was erased, the provision is without meaning as to the contract which the parties really made.

Respondent's counsel says in his brief that about the only question in the case is as to whether or not the trial court properly construed the contract, and it was proper for the court to, and the court did, admit evidence of the circumstances under which the contract was made, and the preliminary oral conversation leading up to it. We have examined the evidence so admitted, and it confirms the views so expressed as to the intentions of the parties set forth in the contract. The plaintiff testified that he went with Newby, the defendant's purchasing agent, who came to his ranch a number of times, and that he assisted Newby in making tests of the prunes; that they examined the prunes thoroughly, and, after such examination, he sold the entire crop at $95 per ton; that the part of the contract as to a basis and as to a variation from the basis was by agreement stricken out; and that the prunes were sold for "$95 per ton orchard run; that is, just as they came from the orchard without any grading." Newby, the agent, who was defendant's own witness, testified that, when he went to see plaintiff, he told plaintiff that he "would pay 3½ base; that is $95 a ton for 55"—that plaintiff replied that "he would like to sell the fruit, but wanted $95 a ton straight for it;" that he told plaintiff that, if the prunes would test 55, he would give him $95 per ton for it; that he had his scales with him and went over the lot, digging down in the bins, taking about 35 tests; that the plaintiff had also taken about a similar number of tests which he had written down in a book; that he took all the tests so made by himself and all the tests made by plaintiff and averaged them; that they averaged 53; that plaintiff said he thought the prunes would hold up to the test, and that he (witness) thought so, too. The witness further said: "'Test accepted' means that you had already tested the fruit, and this fruit we did test, as it did run 53. I scratched out the part 'variation' as we had made the test because the part I did test ran fifty-three, and I am a good tester. * * * 'Orchard run' means all the fruit in the orchard and that it is an ungraded lot of fruit. Sometimes in buying we don't take tests. I was to take the entire crop of merchantable fruit."

The defendant testified that the reason he did not receive the prunes was because they did not run 53, but ran about 63, and that, when plaintiff came to the packing house, he told plaintiff that the prunes were not running 53, and plaintiff replied, "It did not make any difference, as they were all bought at the flat rate of $95 per ton."

It may be further remarked that some allowance was evidently made in making the test, because Newby testified that he was willing to pay $95 per ton for prunes that would test 55; and as he only agreed to pay $95, according to his own testimony, they would have been worth $97 per ton if they had held up to the test of 53, being two points up.

The order is reversed.

EVANS DITCH CO. et al. v. LAKESIDE DITCH CO. et al. (Civ. 649.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 1, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 28, 1910.)

1. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*)—Appropriation of Waters for Irrigation Purposes—Evidence—Sufficiency.

Evidence held to justify a finding that the use of the waters of a stream for irrigation purposes by one and his predecessors in title was open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

2. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*) — Adverse User of Waters.

The question whether the use of the waters of a stream is adverse or with implied license of the owner of the servient estate is one of fact, to be determined in the light of surrounding circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

3. Waters and Water Courses (§ 133*)—Adverse User of Water.

One appropriating the waters of a stream under a claim of right may do so by means of an artificial and a natural channel; and in this respect there is no difference between an appropriation of water under a claim of right for the requisite time to ripen into a title by prescription, and the case of an appropriation specifically provided for in Civ. Code, §§ 1415–1421, providing for the appropriation of water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

4. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*)—Adverse User of Water.

Evidence held to justify a finding that the appropriation of the waters of a stream and the use thereof were in behalf of and for the benefit of a party suing to restrain the diversion of the waters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

5. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*)—Adverse User of Water.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 11, asserting the presumption of ownership from the fact of possession, one in possession of ditches and water rights when another obstructs the flow of water is presumptively the owner of the ditches and water rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

6. Waters and Water Courses (§ 142*)—Adverse User of Water.

A river divided into two channels, K. and S., between which a natural channel, opening into K., existed. An artificial channel was dug connecting S. with the natural channel, and, by means thereof, the waters of S. were diverted to K. for use below the mouth of the natural channel. The person who so used the waters owned the ditches connecting with K., together with the water rights belonging thereto. Held, that the right to the use of the water flowing through the natural channel into K. was an appurtenance to the ditches, and the water right followed the ownership of the ditches.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

7. Waters and Water Courses (§ 140*)—Prior Appropriators.

A river divided into two branches, K. and S., between which a natural channel opening into K. existed. An artificial channel was dug, connecting S. with the natural channel, and, by means thereof, the waters of S. were diverted to K. for use below the mouth of the natural channel. When the water was low in S. river at the point of diversion, it would not reach the point of an attempted diversion by another. Held, that the upper appropriator of the waters was a prior appropriator as against the one who attempted to divert the waters of S.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

8. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*)—Appropriation of Water—Extent.

Where the evidence of the amount of water appropriated by a party was admitted without objection, and a competent hydraulic engineer testified to making measurements and calculations, and he reached a conclusion as to the amount of water, and there was no conflicting testimony, the court properly acted on the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

9. Evidence (§ 546*)—Opinion Evidence—Competency of Experts.

10. Evidence (§ 545*)—Opinion Evidence—Competency of Experts.

Where a question asked an expert is objected to on the ground that he has not shown himself qualified, the party producing the expert should go into the facts disclosing the ability of the expert to testify as such.

11. Evidence (§ 471*)—Opinion Evidence—Conclusion of Witness.

12. Trial (§ 89*)—Striking Evidence—Testimony Not Responsive to Questions.

13. Witnesses (§ 245*)—Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence.

14. Waters and Water Courses (§ 152*) — Appropriation—Prescriptive Rights.

To establish by prescription title to water appropriated for irrigation purposes, it is necessary to show that the use of the water was under a claim of right, and this may be shown by the acts, declarations, and relation of the parties to the controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

15. Evidence (§ 273*) — Declarations — Intent — Appropriation — Prescriptive Rights—Claim of Right.

Where a party claimed title by prescription to water appropriated for irrigation purposes, under a claim of right, a witness with knowledge of the facts could testify that the party, during the time he used the water, had openly declared that he claimed a right to the use of it.

16. Appeal and Error (§ 1051*)—Harmless Error — Erroneous Admission of Evidence.

Where only one conclusion could be drawn from the facts to which a witness testified, the error, if any, in permitting the witness to state such conclusion as his opinion, was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Lamberson & Lamberson, Frank H. Short, and C. L. Russell, for appellants. E. O. Larkin and Hannah & Miller, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The Kaweah river, as stated by appellants, has its source in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the eastern portion of Tulare county, and flows in a generally western direction to Tulare Lake. At a point known as "McKay Point," where the stream emerges from the foothills, it divides into two branches, the southern one of which retains the name Kaweah and the northern one taking the name of the "St. Johns river." Between these two streams there is also a natural channel called "Lane slough" emptying into said Kaweah river. About the year 1877 an artificial channel or ditch was dug connecting St. Johns river with said slough and by means thereof water was diverted from said St. Johns to the said Kaweah river. The plaintiffs are appropriators from the latter stream below the mouth of said slough, and the defendants are appropriators from the St. Johns below the point where it was tapped by said ditch. In February, 1906, the plaintiffs brought this action to secure a mandatory injunction requiring the defendants to remove all obstructions that prevent the flow of water from the said St. Johns into Lane slough and "to permit the free flow of the waters from said St. Johns river through the same to the said Kaweah river" and for general relief. The defendants admitted that they "dammed up the said canal or ditch where the same was taken out of said St. Johns river and interfered with and prevented the flow of water through the same"; but it is claimed that they were entitled to said water, and that plaintiffs had no interest whatever in the same, and that it had been wrongfully diverted by parties who were "not in privity or acting for or on behalf of plaintiffs or any of them."

The finding of the court upon which the controversy really hinges is: "That in the year 1877 the predecessors in interest of said plaintiffs entered upon the N. E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼ of section 2, township 18 S., range 26 E., M. D. M. in said county of Tulare, and excavated and dug and made a canal or ditch leading out of said St. Johns river at said point into the bed or channel of said Lane slough and by means of said canal or ditch and the said slough diverted from said river 99.60 cubic feet per second of the waters thereof, for the irrigation of their lands lying along the line of the respective ditches of plaintiffs; that, at the commencement of this action, plaintiffs claimed the right to use and divert 60 cubic feet per second of said waters of said river for said purposes, and plaintiffs or their grantors or predecessors in interest did each and every year after the year 1877, up to the 23d day of March, 1902 (when defendants filled up said ditch), divert and use for said purposes, under claim of right so to do, openly, notoriously, continuously, peaceably, exclusively, hostile to, and with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendants and each and all of them, and adversely to them, and each of them, 60 cubic feet per second of said waters of said St. Johns river, through and by means of said ditch or canal, and the channel of said Lane slough, at all times when there was not more than 200 cubic feet per second of water flowing in the channel of said St. Johns river at the head of said canal or ditch on said section 2."

It is contended by appellants that this finding is utterly unsupported, in that the evidence fails to show: (1) That the plaintiffs are the successors in interest of the persons who dug the ditch in question; (2) that the use of said water by plaintiffs or their predecessors was such as the statute requires in order to ripen into a title by prescription; (3) that there was any transfer of the title to the Lane slough, or the ditch or water rights connected therewith, from the original owners to plaintiffs or any of them.

Some of the other findings are assailed also; but it is recognized that said finding 5 is the vital one in controversy, and as to this finding the principal point of attack upon which appellants rely is shown in the following quotation from their brief: "Upon the issues made by these allegations of the complaint and the denial thereof by the defendants, the principal portion of the evidence in this case was introduced. The whole subject of the statute of limitations as applied to an adverse diversion of water was gone into, and it seems that the plaintiffs did not make a case which would comply with any of the rules laid down by this and other courts of last resort, under the statute of limitations. The actions of the plaintiffs and defendants resulted in producing nothing more than a scrambling possessession which fluctuated from day to day during the irrigation season and was not limited to any particular time, except that some of the witnesses testified that when there was plenty of water for everybody they did not interfere with the running of the water through this ditch, and of course that kind of use by the plaintiffs would not be an invasion of the rights of the defendants."

But in the consideration of this pivotal question and of others less important we are confronted by a stipulation entered into by the parties and filed as a record at the beginning of the trial, as follows: "It is hereby stipulated between the parties to the above-entitled action, and for the purposes of the trial of said action, that the plaintiffs in said action are respectively the owners of the respective ditches mentioned in the complaint herein, and that the said plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest, as alleged in the complaint herein, have each severally diverted, and used, during the times mentioned in said complaint, the respective quantities of water into the said respective ditches, as alleged in said complaint, when there was that much water flowing in the said Kaweah river or Mill creek at the respective heads of the said ditches." It is not disputed that the water diverted from the St. Johns river through the aforesaid ditch dug in 1877 and the said Lane slough flowed into the Kaweah river above the heads of said ditches referred to in said stipulation, and that it continued in said river till it reached said ditches. Attaching, therefore, the ordinary signification to the plain and unambiguous language of the stipulation, it would seem to mean that the plaintiffs and their predecessors have used during the time mentioned in the complaint, to wit, "for more than 20 years last past," the water "turned into said Lane slough at or near its head in the said St. Johns river by means of head gates, dams, and other artificial structures" amounting to "as much as 60 cubic feet per second," and this was "diverted and conducted down the channel of said Kaweah river and Mill creek and turned into the heads of their respective ditches," and it "was used by plaintiffs during said time for the irrigation of agricultural lands lying along the line of said respective ditches, and for watering live stock kept thereon and for other useful and beneficial purposes," and its use "has at all said times been made under claim of right so to do with the knowledge and acquiescence of said defendants and each of them, uninterruptedly, openly, notoriously, and hostile to said defendants and each of them and continuously and adversely to each of them."

Appellants claim, however, that this is extending the scope of said stipulation beyond the intention and construction of the parties. They say that: "If the parties had stipulated to that effect, there would have been nothing in the case to try. That was the whole point in the case; whether or not the plaintiffs had acquired the right to divert any water from the St. Johns river into Lane slough by means of this ditch, and if they had done so for 20 years there could be no doubt of their having acquired the right, but the stipulation does not purport to deal with that question in any manner whatever. That was the contested point in the case." While the language of the stipulation is unmistakable as to the use by plaintiffs and their predecessors of the quantity of water alleged in the complaint for 20 years, there is some plausibility in the contention that it was not intended by defendants to admit that this use was under a claim of right and hostile to the interests of appellants. In other words, when the parties stipulated that the plaintiffs and their predecessors "used, during the times mentioned in said complaint, the respective quantities of water into the said respective ditches, as alleged in said complaint," the expression "as alleged in said complaint" was designed to apply to the quantity of water, and not the manner in which it had been used. This harmonizes with the declaration of one of the counsel for appellants made during the trial that: "The stipulation is that the water claimed to be diverted by the plaintiffs from the Kaweah were diverted by the plaintiffs at the time and in the manner stated when there was that much water in the river. Of course, that don't include anything about authorization or anything of that kind. It includes all that this witness could testify to with reference to the diversion of water from the river because it includes all that there is in the pleadings about the diversion of water from the river." While the foregoing statement is probably not as clear as it would be if made more deliberately, it seems that the point was intended to be emphasized that the authority or right to the use of the water was the question not covered by the stipulation, and therefore a proper subject of inquiry. Respondents must also have so understood the stipulation, as they proceeded to introduce evidence to support their claim of the adverse character of the use. Thi evidence, it is earnestly insisted by appellants, falls far short of meeting the requirement of the law. We feel assured, however, that, giving it the most favorable consideration, from said evidence a rational inference may be drawn that the use of said water by plaintiffs and their predecessors was open, notorious, exclusive, continuous, and under a claim of right and therefore "adverse," as that term is generally used.

The testimony showing these elements of title by prescription is given by a number of witnesses. It may be that no single witness has testified to a sufficient number of facts to warrant the conclusion of the court below, as the opportunities for observation on the part of the various witnesses were somewhat circumscribed; but in the aggregate the testimony is a sufficient foundation to support the finding. Alma Hall testified: "I am acquainted with Lane slough. My first acquaintance with it, I couldn't tell you when, but in 1877 was the first time I was there on any particular occasion. In 1877 I went up there and hauled some lumber and put a headgate in about 100 yards from the St. Johns and stayed there, I guess, about a week, cleaning out the brush and logs and things and grubbing vines. I went up there, I think, on Monday and worked until Saturday afternoon, cleaning and grubbing vines and drift and logs very near down to the Kaweah river. I was back there again in 1879. We went back to turn in some water in Lane slough or to strengthen the wing dam that was turning in the water. * * * When I got up there the wing dam had washed out in spots, so it wasn't turning any water into the slough. There was water running in there without the wing dam. I suppose it was probably a foot deep in the channel of Lane slough, something near that. I think we increased the flow of the water about one-third after we fixed the dam. Frank Duran was there in the interest of the Oakes ditch. John O'Connor was there, I suppose, for the Evans ditch. I was up there again in 1898. I was up and down it different times just passing through that county over Lane slough. I always saw water in Lane slough when there was water in the St. Johns river opposite. Some times it would be pretty small; sometimes quite a stream. The water went into the Kaweah river."

Peter L. Fenwick was intimately acquainted with Lane slough in the years 1882 and 1883 and saw the water running through it during those years. "It came from the St. Johns river. There was a time when a large stream was running through there and there were other times when the stream was very small; just owing to the quantity of water that was in the river how much would come down through the ditch. It emptied into the Kaweah river." He further declared that the headgate was never interfered with. The wasteways were pulled out sometimes, but he did not know who did it. He testified to a conversation he had in 1883 with Mr. Johnson, the president of the Lakeside Ditch Company. He says: "They were there at the head of Lane slough at the same time I was. There was quite a little stream of water in the river, and the slough was as full as could be; they didn't do anything. I heard the parties were coming up, and I met them by Cutler's Bridge. We went up the river together. When we got up to Lane slough, one young fellow jumped down and says, 'Here, boys, is where she is goin',' and went out to pull out my waste boards. I just reached down and tapped him on the shoulder and says, 'What are you going to do?' He says, 'I am going to take out these boards.' I says, 'No, don't you do it.' Says he, 'Why?' I says, 'That's my property.' Mr. Johnson came up then and says, 'Mr. Fenwick, ain't you joking?' I says: 'No, I am not. If this is your water, you go down to Visalia and make me know that this is your water, then you needn't come up here at all. I will come back and turn it to you.'" He further declared that Mr. Johnson told the young man who attempted to move the boards to let them alone, and that they never molested any of the boards while the witness was there.

James Evans testified that he was at Lane slough in 1878 in the summer time. "I think there was about 3½ feet of water in Lane slough and probably 18 or 20 or 30 feet wide. There was a good stiff stream. There was a headgate in at that time. The headgate was 16 feet wide and about 8 feet deep. It was about 20 feet long. In 1883 I was there. I went up there to see about ditch matters, for the Burch ditch, the Watson ditch, the Evans ditch, and the Oakes ditch. There was a small quantity of water running in Lane slough. That was in October during the dry season. There was very little water in the St. Johns or anywhere in there." He testified to being there also in November, 1883, and January, 1884. On the latter date he went for the purpose of closing the headgate, as there was too much water flowing through. "I would go there after that maybe twice or three times in a month for about 12 years off and on. There would be sometimes a month or two, or two or three months, that I wouldn't go there; but I always went there in the fall of the year when the water was low. I was an owner in the Evans ditch until 1891. I was doing work for the Watson and Burch ditches. I was working for another company, the Kaweah & Mill Creek Company. I went back there usually both in the spring and fall. Between 1884 and 1891, when there was water in the river, there was water in Lane slough, and, if there was any water in the St. Johns river, Lane's slough after 1886 would draw the low water of the St. Johns, and all that water run into Kaweah river at the end of Lane Slough. I think I was up there in the year 1885 probably 12 or 15 times. I did not observe that any one had interfered with the flow of the water in the Lane slough in any way that season. I never knew of any such thing taking place. I never heard about it. There was a dam put in above the gate in 1885 across the channel that led down to Lane slough. It cut off part of the water. The dam went clear across the stream, but the water run over the dam. The dam was put in there by consent. Mr. Dodge and Mr. Watson came and asked if they could put an obstruction in there after the gate wouldn't hold, so as to get more water down the St. Johns. They said they were short of water and there was too much water going down the Kaweah. They said the Kaweah river had a good deal more water in it than the St. Johns, and Lane slough was drawing a big stream of water, and they asked if they could put a dam across the head. The headgate wouldn't work, and they said that, if they could put a dam in at the head of Lane slough until the run of water was over, then they would take it out. Sam Evans and myself went up there when the water got down pretty low, and I took a team, and we pulled a portion of the dam out that day, and we didn't get through, so I got one of the Dokes to pull the other part of the dam out."

C. P. Majors testified that for three years from 1894 to 1897 he did work at different times for the Watson ditch and "the other ditches here, the plaintiffs in this action. I was superintendent of the Kaweah and Mill creek at the same time. I was familiar with Lane slough all the time during those three years. Sometimes Lane slough was pretty full; other times it was not. I kept water in it all the time, turned it all down Lane slough when it was low. I did that by putting in a sand dam. When we put in the sand dam in the St. Johns, why of course it all came down Lane slough except seepage. I talked with John Parr (superintendent of St. Johns River Association) at different times. He was taking water down the St. Johns. He told me he wished I would let part of it go down for a few days, then I could shut all out, and I did so, changed it there."

W. G. Pennebaker was familiar with Lane slough from 1892 to 1897, and he testified that: "Lane slough always drew water from the St. Johns whenever there was any there. No one came up there while I was there and interfered with our taking water from Lane slough on any occasion. I never knew of any dam being put across Lane slough during the time I was going to and fro from its head. I have no knowledge of it at any other time. I don't remember of ever seeing it."

There was much other testimony of similar import. The witnesses are positive as to the continuous diversion of the water from the St. Johns river for more than 20 years. What has been quoted shows conclusively that it was under a claim of right as the parties diverting it exercised the usual acts of ownership. The diversion was open and notorious, effected by means of artificial contrivances which not only could be seen, but were actually seen by representatives of appellants. The court below, from this long-continued use, might have presumed the knowledge and acquiescence of appellants; but it had the direct statements of the witnesses clearly revealing such knowledge and acquiescence. As the question of taxes is not involved, no element of title by prescription is wanting.

Complaint is made that the testimony as to interference is negative in its character, that from the declaration of the various witnesses for plaintiffs as to their want of knowledge or information concerning any opposition of defendants, it does not follow that the said diversion of the water was not challenged. It is not contended that the evidence is conclusive as to plaintiffs' claim; but it must be apparent that their showing, giving it full credit as we must is as complete as is practicable or as is required to support the inference that the water was diverted for at least five years under a claim of right and without any interference or opposition on the part of appellants, but with their full knowledge and acquiescence.

The question whether or not the user is adverse or with the implied license of the owner of the servient estate is one of fact to be determined in the light of all the surrounding circumstances. Thomas v. England, 71 Cal. 456, 12 Pac. 491. In Franz v. Mendoca, 131 Cal. 205, 63 Pac. 361, it is held that, "where the user of a way is shown to have been continuous for the full period of limitation, unexplained, without anything in the evidence or in the circumstances of the case to indicate the contrary, it may be presumed that it was under a claim of right and adverse to the owners of the land." See, also, Gurnsey v. Antelope Creek, etc., Water Co., 6 Cal. App. 391, 92 Pac. 326, and cases therein cited.

The result is not affected by the circumstance that the diversion was made by means of an artificial and a natural channel. As said in Lower Tule, etc., Co. v. Angiola, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 498, 86 Pac. 1081: "* * * A person who is making an appropriation of water from a natural source or stream is not bound to carry it to the place of use through a ditch or artificial conduit, nor through a ditch or canal cut especially for that purpose. He may make use of any natural or artificial channel, or natural depression, which he may find available and convenient for that purpose, so long as other persons interested in such conduit do not object and his appropriation so made will, so far as such means of conducting the water is concerned, be as effectual as if he had carried it through a ditch or pipe line made for that purpose and no other."

In this respect there can be manifestly no difference between the appropriation of water under a claim of right and for the requisite time to ripen into a title by prescription and the case of the appropriation specifically provided for in the Civil Code (sections 1415–1421).

But if we interpret said stipulation of the parties as applying only to the waters in the Kaweah river at McKay Point above the mouth of said Lane slough, as contended for by appellants, there is no ground upon which we would be warranted in reversing the judgment of the lower court. Upon this theory of the stipulation it would be necessary for plaintiffs to prove that the use of the water diverted from the St. Johns river by means of said ditch and slough was under a claim of right for the statutory period, which we have already considered, and was enjoyed by plaintiffs or for their benefit or by their predecessors in interest, or else that they were prior appropriators of said waters together with the amount of said waters so appropriated. This is required by reason of the general denials of the answer and the specific allegation as to want of privity to which we have already referred, and "that the said canal or ditch so excavated and made from the said St. Johns river to said Lane slough was not and never has been a natural water course and the plaintiffs herein have never diverted any water whatsoever from the said St. Johns river through or by means of said canal or ditch."

As to the proposition that the use was for the benefit of respondents, it is pointed out in their brief that: "On the 3d day of November, 1877, the owners of the respective ditches now owned by plaintiffs organized themselves into a corporation known as the 'Kaweah & Mill Creek Water Company,' and filed articles of incorporation thereof on said day. One of the main purposes of this corporation 'was to keep water in the Kaweah and Mill creek channel; the route to be adopted to be through Lane slough and any new cut the company may deem expedient to keep water in said Kaweah and Mill creek channel for irrigation and manufacturing purposes.' This company also acquired title on October 27, 1877, to the E. ½ of the S. E. ¼ of section 2, township 18 S., range 26 E., upon which land according to the answer the canal or ditch was dug through which the water of the St. Johns river was diverted." James Evans testified that "this land was in possession of the Kaweah & Mill Creek Water Company ever since the 11th day of May, 1882, and under its control for and on behalf of plaintiffs in this action up to the time that he left in 1891; that he came back in 1892 and was here until 1894 and it was still under their control; that said company didn't act for anybody else besides plaintiffs." Alma Hall, a witness for plaintiffs, testified that in 1877 he went up to the head of Lane slough with Mads Johnson, Frank Duran, John O'Connor, and others in the month of November, to get water down through said slough; that they were three days. Three of them used scrapers, O'Connor for the Evans ditch and the others for the Oakes ditch. He further testified that the Kaweah & Mill Creek Water Company was turning water down for the benefit of the Evans, Watson, Fleming, Persian, Evans Extension, Oakes, and Burch ditches.

From the foregoing and other testimony, some of which we have hereinbefore quoted, the court was entirely justified in concluding that the diversion of the water and its use were in behalf and for the benefit of plaintiffs. Moreover, as suggested by respondents, "plaintiffs had possession of their ditches and water rights in March, 1902, when defendants obstructed the flow of the water into Lane slough, and are presumed to own such ditches and water rights in the absence of a showing by defendants to the contrary. Subdivision 11, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc.; McGovern v. Mowry, 91 Cal. 383 [27 Pac. 746]; Zilmer v. Gerichten, 111 Cal. 73 [43 Pac. 408]; Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 383 [46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74]; Utt v. Frey, 106 Cal. 396 [39 Pac. 807]." Furthermore, it was admitted that plaintiffs own the ditches connecting with the Kaweah river and Mill creek, together with the water rights thereunto belonging. But it is clear that the right to the use of the water flowing through said Lane slough into said river is an appurtenance to said ditches. The water right therefore would follow the ownership of the ditches to plaintiffs.

In this connection it is to be observed that there was evidence also that, when the water was low in the St. Johns river at the said point of diversion into Lane slough, it would not reach the head of the Lakeside ditch by seepage or otherwise. It could not have been and was not used, therefore, by appellants. Hence the respondents would be prior appropriators, and appellants stand in the attitude of trespassers.

The evidence as to the amount of water appropriated was admitted without objection, and we cannot say that the trial court was not justified in acting upon it.

L. E. McCabe, a competent hydraulic engineer, testified to making measurements and calculations, and he reached the conclusion that "with the wing dam in there would be 64.38 cubic feet per second running into the slough." This evidence was probably the best that was available, and, since no counter showing was made by defendants, the court could scarcely have disregarded the testimony of McCabe.

Certain rulings of the court as to evidence are assailed; but, even if erroneous, they are not of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the judgment.

Alma Hall was asked on cross-examination this question: "Did you at any time attempt to take that dam out of Lane slough, and were you prevented by these Lakeside people from doing so?" In his direct examination he had said nothing about this particular dam, and hence the ruling was probably correct; but, at any rate, he substantially answered it by stating that he did take out part of the dam during that summer, and he did not remember of seeing any of the Lakeside people up there during that year.

Burton Smith, a witness for the defendants, was asked this question: "Then, from the amount of water you saw there, you estimated it to be about seven cubic feet per second? A. Yes, sir." To the question counsel for plaintiffs objected on the ground that the witness had not shown himself qualified to measure water. The objection was sustained, and the answer was stricken out. In determining the competency of an expert witness, the trial court has quite a wide discretion, and we are not prepared to say that it was abused in the present instance, although the witness had stated that "I had been accustomed to measure the water myself and to measuring and determining the water flowing in a stream and ascertaining the amount of cubic feet per second." In view of the objection, however, that was made, appellant should have gone more particularly into the facts disclosing the ability of the witness to estimate with some degree of accuracy the amount of water carried by the stream. But again, the question seems to have related to a particular date when the stream was observed by the witness, and there is no controversy that at times no water at all was flowing into the slough from the St. Johns, and necessarily a very small quantity at other periods, and the answer of the witness would manifestly have not assisted the court in determining the maximum amount to which respondents were entitled.

The question: "Is it not a fact that from 1885 to the time you quit having anything to do with the conducting of water through Lane slough that you took through Lane slough, and were permitted to take through Lane slough, only enough water as in your judgment and in the judgment of the people representing the Lakeside Ditch Company and the St. Johns River Association was sufficient to equalize the water so that half of the water coming down the Kaweah river would run in the St. Johns river and half of it in the Kaweah river?" addressed to James Evans, manifestly called for his opinion and was properly disallowed. His cross-examination took a wide range and included every pertinent fact throwing any light upon the question whether the appropriation of the water was in pursuance of any understanding or otherwise.

The action of the court was clearly right in striking out as not responsive the answer of witness Bryan, "Well the division was made there to keep the water in the Lakeside ditch as long as the water would reach the head of the ditch," to the question, "What was the division made then?" This did not call for the opinion of the witness as to the purpose for which the division was made.

The same suggestion will apply to William Dougherty's answer to the question: "What were you doing there at McKay Point that year?"

Alma Hall was asked the question on cross-examination: "In 1896 isn't it a fact that there was plenty of water in the Kaweah and Mill creek for all these ditches which are plaintiffs' in this action without any water in Lane slough?" An objection was sustained on the ground that it was not proper cross-examination. In support of the ruling, it is contended by respondents "that he was put on in rebuttal for the sole purpose of contradicting defendants' witnesses in regard to the interference of plaintiffs' use of the water, and this question was not properly directed to that fact"; but, whether this is so or not, the question called for an opinion of the witness, and, besides, he had previously answered it by stating that at times there was, and at other times there was not, plenty of water "without the water from Lane slough."

James Evans was asked on redirect examination: "I suppose you know that these ditch companies, plaintiffs in this action, claimed that water all that time, claimed the right to use it?" It was objected on the ground "that the same was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and not redirect examination." The objection was overruled, and the witness answered, "Yes, sir." In order to establish a title by "prescription," it was necessary, as we have seen, that the use was under a claim of right. This would ordinarily be shown by the acts, declarations, and relation of the parties to the controversy. If the plaintiffs, during the time they were using the water, had openly declared that they claimed a right to the use of it, a witness with knowledge of that claim would be competent to testify to it. This may have been the position of Evans, and upon that assumption the question was proper. If the answer simply reflected his opinion from the acts of the parties, appellants should have shown that fact by further examination of the witness. Again, no other conclusion could have been drawn from the facts to which he testified. Hence the ruling, if erroneous, was without prejudice.

There are some other points made by appellants; but they are all of minor importance and do not justify any further attention. As already indicated, it is admitted by appellants that the decisive question in the case is the finding as to the use of the water in the requisite manner and for the statutory period to establish a title by prescription.

As we read the record, there can be no possible doubt as to this point, and the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MARTIN. (No. 188.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 30, 1910.)

1. Homicide (§§ 109, 126*)—Justification—Necessity.

At common law, though the right of self-defense against imminent and immediate danger to life or limb from an aggressor existed, such right did not extend to the killing of an innocent third person.

2. Homicide (§ 115*)—Justification—Self-Defense—Imminent Danger.

Under Pen. Code, § 197, making homicide justifiable when permitted in self-defense or in defense of a wife or husband, parent, child, master, mistress or servant, when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit felony or to do some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of such design being accomplished; and section 692, providing that lawful resistance to the commission of a public offense may be made by the party about to be injured, and section 693, authorizing resistance to prevent an offense against one's person or his family or some member thereof, or to prevent an illegal attempt by force to take or injure property in his lawful possession, the right of self-defense can only be exercised to prevent an imminent danger of an offense about to be committed.

3. Criminal Law (§ 38*)—Justification—Duress.

Pen. Code, § 26, excepting from the class of persons capable of committing crimes those who commit the act under threats or menaces sufficient to show that they had reasonable cause to believe and did believe their lives would be endangered if they refused, does not excuse the commission of a felony against the property of an innocent third person because the person doing the deed had reason to fear, not an immediate danger to his life, but a future and remote danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 43; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

4. Infants (§ 67*)—Crimes—Justification—Duress—Insufficiency.

That a person committing a deed and claiming that it was done under compulsion was an infant does not affect the construction of Pen. Code, § 26, excepting from the class of persons capable of committing crimes those who commit the act under fear of danger to their lives, as to the question whether the fear must be of imminent danger or may be of remote danger.

5. Criminal Law (§ 507½*)—Evidence—Accomplices.

Where a witness committed the act of which defendant is accused under the direction of defendant, evidence that the witness had committed various other felonies under threats from defendant, introduced to show that the act of the witness, being under fear of danger to his life, was not criminal, and that he was therefore not an accomplice, was inadmissible, where the fear under which witness claimed to have acted in the present case was not of immediate danger, but of future and remote danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 507½.*]

6. Criminal Law (§ 1169*)—Appeal—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Error in the admission of evidence of previous acts by a witness under threats from defendant was not cured by similar testimony introduced by defendant where such testimony did not cover nearly all the matters erroneously admitted.

7. Criminal Law (§ 351*)—Evidence—Relevancy.

In a prosecution for depositing and exploding dynamite near a residence, evidence of the possession by defendant at the time of her arrest 10 months after the crime of which she was charged of various poisons, none of which had any connection with the crime charged, was not admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 776, 778–785; Dec. Dig. § 351.*]

8. Criminal Law (§ 338*) — Evidence of Other Offenses—Admissibility.

In a prosecution for depositing and exploding dynamite near a residence, evidence of obscene letters and writings of defendant, in no way relating to the crime charged, was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 752–757, 788, 789, 801, 855; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

9. Criminal Law (§ 369*) — Evidence of Other Offenses—Admissibility.

In a prosecution for depositing and exploding dynamite near a residence, evidence of the brutal treatment of a witness who committed the act under the direction of defendant, and as to defendant's guilty connection with numerous other felonies and misdemeanors, were not relevant to the question of her guilt of the crime charged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822–824; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

10. Criminal Law (§ 921*)—New Trial—Ground—Admission of Evidence.

Where irrelevant testimony is admitted, and is of such character as necessarily to be prejudicial to defendant, a new trial must be granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Isabella Martin was convicted of having deposited and exploded dynamite near a residence, and she appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

A. L. Frick and Burton J. Wyman, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. The defendant was charged, under section 601 of the Penal Code, with having, on the 19th day of March, 1907, at the county of Alameda, deposited and exploded dynamite at and near the house of Frank B. Ogden. Upon her trial she was found guilty, as charged, by the verdict of the jury, and before judgment moved for a new trial. Her motion was denied, and judgment pronounced of imprisonment for the term of her natural life. From the judgment and order she in due time appealed to this court. The record upon appeal consists of the judgment roll and a full transcript of the reporter's notes of all the proceedings before the trial court, and is contained in five volumes, consisting of 2770 pages of printed matter. The labor of this court, however, has been greatly lessened by the very systematic and lawyer-like manner in which counsel upon both sides have briefed the case. No attack is made by appellant upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, nor upon the correctness of the instructions to the jury. Appellant relies for a reversal solely upon the rulings of the court in admitting evidence and in refusing to strike out evidence that had been admitted over defendant's objections.

The crime with which defendant was charged was not committed by her in person, but was in fact committed by John B. Martin at her instigation, and, as it is claimed, by reason of her coercion. John B. Martin was at the time of the commission of the crime 16 years of age, and though he had been reared by defendant from babyhood, he was not her child. He was the principal witness for the prosecution, and testified in detail to all the circumstances of the commission of the crime, from which it appears that defendant had for a considerable time before the commission of the crime contemplated the deed, and with the aid of the witness had made careful preparation therefor. Her motive grew out of the result of some litigation which she had had in a department of the superior court of Alameda county presided over by the Hon. Frank B. Ogden, although the action was not finally tried before Judge Ogden. The witness and defendant discussed the contemplated crime, months before its commission, at Weaverville in Trinity county, where defendant had a home and certain mining properties. Early in January, 1907, they came to Oakland, Alameda county, where defendant owned a home and other property. Under the house belonging to defendant, and in which she and the witness took up their residence, was stored a quantity of dynamite. This was by the witness taken from under the house by the direction of defendant, and placed upon a shelf to dry. Subsequently a portion of it, about twelve sticks, was made into a bomb, by the witness and defendant, for the purpose of dynamiting the residence of Judge Ogden. A long fuse was furnished by defendant and carefully prepared for subsequent use. A bicycle was rented by defendant to enable the witness to quickly escape from the scene of the intended crime. Careful preparations were made to enable an alibi to be proved for the witness in case they were suspected or charged with the crime, and on the night of the 19th day of March, 1907, the witness, at the direction of defendant, took the bomb and fuse to the residence of Judge Ogden, about a mile distant from the residence of defendant, in which she remained, and after observing that the residence of Judge Ogden was then occupied by members of his family (wife, four children and a maid) placed the bomb upon the front porch of the house, carefully adjusted the fuse, lighted the same, mounted his wheel and rode away to his home, where the defendant awaited his coming. The explosion occurred before the witness reached his home; and though badly injuring the dwelling of Judge Ogden, did no harm to the unsuspecting members of the household sheltered therein, other than such as may have arisen from fright and nervous shock at the dastardly crime attempted against their home and possibly lives.

During the progress of the trial the prosecution was permitted to prove, not only by the witness John B. Martin, but by other witnesses as well, brutal and cruel treatment of John B. Martin by the defendant. Also the prosecution was allowed to introduce evidence by the witness John B. Martin of numerous thefts committed by him at the instigation of and for the benefit of defendant; also that the defendant, prior to the Ogden dynamiting, planned and caused the witness to carry out or attempt six different felonies, to wit, three cases of arson in 1901, and three attempts to dynamite the residence of Wm. J. Dingee in 1904. Also evidence was allowed over the objection of defendant that after the Ogden affair defendant purchased cyanide of potassium (a deadly poison) and planned to have the witness place the same in a reservoir at Weaverville used to supply drinking water; and also in 1908 planned to have the witness dynamite the residence of Judge George Samuels at Oakland. (The point that this occurred subsequent to the Ogden affair was waived.)

All this evidence, and some other of similar import, was admitted over objections of defendant, and retained over her several motions to strike out, upon the theory that it tended to prove that the witness John M. Martin was not an accomplice of the defendant in the crime for which she was on trial, and therefore his testimony as a matter of law would support a conviction without corroboration. This theory is in turn predicated upon the theory that, although the witness with his own hands dynamited the Ogden residence when over a mile distant from the person of defendant, he was guilty of no crime in so doing because, as it is claimed by respondent, he committed the act under threats or menaces of defendant, sufficient to show that he had reasonable cause to believe and did believe that his life would be endangered unless he committed the deed. It is contended that the evidence objected to was admissible as tending to show the reasonableness of such belief and the existence thereof. The entire superstructure of respondent's contention is based upon the construction placed by respondent upon section 26 of the Penal Code, which, so far as applicable to the matter under discussion, is as follows: "All persons are capable of committing crimes except those belonging to the following classes: * * * Eighth. Persons (unless the crime be punishable with death) who committed the act or made the omission charged under threats or menaces sufficient to show that they had reasonable cause to and did believe their lives would be endangered if they refused."

The vital point of difference between appellant and respondent as to the effect of this section of the Code is this: That appellant insists that the danger to the life of the person claiming the protection of the statute must be, or reasonably appear to be, imminent and immediately impending, while respondent claims that such danger is sufficient to excuse from criminal responsibility for any crime however heinous, not punishable with death, if committed under threats causing a reasonable belief on the part of the person threatened that a refusal would endanger his life either immediately or at some time in the future. To make this clear it is now necessary to state the testimony given by the witness John B. Martin as to the threats and the fear under which it is claimed he committed the crime for which defendant was convicted. We quote from the transcript: "Q. Why did you take this bomb prepared by you and Mrs. Martin, and place it on Judge Ogden's premises? A. Because I was forced to. Q. How were you forced to? A. By threats Mrs. Martin made. Q. What did she say, what threats did she make? A. She said if I didn't place the bomb in Judge Ogden's porch she would have me arrested for burning the house, take me up to Trinity county, hit me over the head with a sledge hammer, put a stick of powder under me and blow me up, and come into town and say it was an accident, and they would believe it. Q. I will ask you what was your feeling towards Mrs. Martin on the 19th day of March, 1907, Mrs. Martin, this defendant? A. I was afraid of her. I was afraid that she would kill me if I didn't carry out such deeds as she told me to." It further appeared from his testimony that this threat was made several weeks before the crime was committed, and before the bomb was made. On cross-examination the witness, in response to the question, "Then you want to be understood now, do you, that the fear which you had of what she would do if you did not explode the Ogden bomb was, not that she would kill you or attempt to kill you in Oakland, but she would get you up in Weaverville and kill you there. That is correct, is it?" answered, "It is." In other words, it was made perfectly clear and certain that the witness did not act under any fear of immediate or imminent danger of his life, but only under a fear that at some future time and at a place hundreds of miles away from the scene of the contemplated crime his life would be in danger from the defendant. Unless such a fear —a fear of a future and remote danger to life—will exempt a person from responsibility for any crime (not punishable with death), committed against the person or property of an innocent third person, all this testimony introduced under the theory that it tended to show the existence and reasonableness of the fear under which it is claimed the witness and perpetrator of the crime acted, was inadmissible.

We do not understand respondent to claim that, at the common law, such a fear of future and remote danger to life would excuse the commission of a felony. The contention of respondent is based entirely upon the wording of section 26 of the Penal Code. At common law, the right of self-defense against imminent and immediate danger to life or limb from an aggressor existed. It only existed, however, to prevent death or bodily injury that was imminent, and could only be exercised against the person threatening the injury. It did not extend to the killing of an innocent third person. It has ever been the rule that necessity is no excuse for killing an innocent person. Blackstone says: "And therefore, though a man be violently assaulted and hath no other possible means of escaping death, but by killing an innocent person, this fear and force shall not acquit him of murder; for he ought rather to die himself than escape by the murder of an innocent. But in such a case he is permitted to kill the assailant, for the law of nature and self-defense, its primary canon, have made him his own protector." 4 Blackstone (Cooley) § 30. In Arp v. State, 97 Ala. 5, 12 South. 301, 19 L. R. A. 357, 38 Am. St. Rep. 137, it is said: "The authorities seem to be conclusive that, at common law, no man can excuse himself under the plea of necessity or compulsion for taking the life of an innocent person."

So, too, while the statute of this state recognizes and sanctions the right of self-defense against an aggressor, the right can only be exercised to prevent an imminent danger or an offense about to be committed. Thus homicide is justifiable "when committed in the lawful defense of such person, or of a wife or husband, parent, child, master, mistress or servant of such person, when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of such design being accomplished." Pen. Code, § 197. "Lawful resistance to the commission of a public offense may be made: (1) By the party about to be injured." Pen. Code, § 692. "Resistance sufficient to prevent the offense may be made by the party about to be injured: (1) To prevent an offense against his person, or his family or some member thereof; (2) to prevent an illegal attempt by force to take or injure property in his lawful possession." Pen. Code, § 693.

If the right of self-defense and forcible resistance against an aggressor exists only in the presence of imminent danger or when an offense is about to be committed, it would be an anomalous condition of the law that would justify or excuse the commission of a felony against the person or property of an entirely innocent person because the person doing the deed had reason to fear and did fear, not an imminent and immediate danger to his life, but a future and remote danger, and one that in the very nature of things could be readily averted by innocent methods.

The fact that in this case the person committing the deed, and claiming that it was done under a compulsion that excuses him from the criminality of the act, is a minor cuts no figure in the proper construction of the statute. It is general and applicable to persons of any age. While the language is not as exact as it might be, it must be given a reasonable meaning so as to effectuate the design of the Legislature and to promote justice. We would be loath to believe that the Legislature intended to excuse one from responsibility for atrocious felonies committed against the property or person of an innocent person, under a fear, by whatever threats induced, that a refusal would in the future and at some remote place endanger his life. Such a danger in the very nature of things could be easily avoided by innocent methods. It would require very explicit language to induce us to believe that the Legislature intended to lay down any such monstrous and unjust rule as that any person should be excused from responsibility for an infamous crime when committed under the fear of future and remote danger to life which in the nature of things could be easily avoided. We agree with the views expressed by the court in Bain v. State, 67 Miss. 557, 7 South. 408, when it said: "We can conceive of cases in which an act, criminal in its nature, may be committed by one under such circumstances of coercion as to free him from criminality. The impending danger, however, should be present, imminent and not to be avoided. * * * The social system would be subverted, and there would be no protection for persons or property, if the fear of man, needlessly and cravenly entertained, should be held to justify or excuse breaches of the law." So, too, in People v. Repke, 103 Mich. 459, 61 N. W. 861, it was said: "Threats of future injury do not excuse any offense. The necessity which will excuse a man for breach of law must be instant and imminent."

Respondent has cited no case that supports its contention. There are none. Burns v. State, 89 Ga. 527, 15 S. E. 748, a case arising under a statute similar to ours, lays down the rule directly contrary to the contention of respondent in the case at bar. The report of the Georgia case is somewhat meager, and can only be fully understood by a somewhat careful study of the case. The decision of the court is in the form of a syllabus, preceding the statement of the case. Under the Code of that state (section 4303 [Code 1882]) it is provided that: "A person committing a crime or misdemeanor under threats or menaces, which sufficiently show that his life or member was in danger, or that he had reasonable cause to believe and did actually believe, that his life or member was in danger, shall not be found guilty; and such threats and menaces being proved and established, the person compelling by said threats and menaces the commission of the offense shall be considered a principal, and suffer the same punishment as if he had perpetrated the offense." The first part of this section excusing the person coerced is not materially different from our statute so far as it relates to the imminency of the danger. The defendant Burns was convicted of murder, and the principal witness against him was his stepmother. It is apparent from the statement of the points involved, and the instructions given and refused, that this witness had previously given false testimony at the coroner's inquest, and which she claimed was given under coercion, and also that she had testified to a state of facts upon the final trial which would make her an accomplice unless she acted under coercion and fear. Upon each point the trial court gave an instruction which ignored the necessity of the fear being of a present impending danger, and refused to give a requested one including this element. The court said: "According to section 4303 of the Code, in order for duress or fear produced by threats or menaces to be a valid legal excuse for doing anything which would otherwise be criminal, the act must have been done under such threats or menaces as show that the life or member was in danger, or that there was reasonable cause to believe and actual belief that there was such danger. The danger must not be one of future violence, but of present and immediate violence at the time of the commission of the forbidden act. Thus, where the forbidden act is perjury by a witness at a coroner's inquest, the danger of death or dismemberment at some future time, in the absence of all danger at the time of testifying, will not excuse. * * * A person who aids and assists in the commission of a crime, or in measures taken to conceal it and protect the criminal, is not relieved from criminality as an accomplice on account of fear excited by threats or menaces, unless the danger be to life or member, nor unless that danger be present and immediate as above announced touching fear under the influence of which perjury is committed." (Italics are ours.) We understand this case as clearly holding that a person is not relieved of the responsibility for a criminal act because he acted through fear produced by threats, unless the fear was of immediate and imminent danger. The case is cited as authority for this doctrine in the commissioners' note to the Penal Code of Georgia (adopted in 1895) under section 41, which is a re-enactment of section 4303, and also in the notes to Arp v. State, in 19 L. R. A. 359. We think the Georgia case is directly in point, and is grounded in sound reason and enlightened justice.

Inasmuch as it is clear that the witness John B. Martin had no fear of immediate and imminent danger to his life, but only a fear that defendant, at some future time and at some remote place, would kill him, all the evidence now under consideration, admitted as tending to show the existence and reasonableness of such fear, was improper. None of it should have been admitted, and all of it should have been stricken out.

Neither were the errors thus committed cured by the subsequent introduction by defendant of the testimony of Johnion to the effect that John B. Martin had confessed to him to committing some of the same crimes and implicating the defendant therein. The circumstances under which this testimony was introduced bear little resemblance to the facts in the case of People v. Silvers, 6 Cal. App. 69, 92 Pac. 506, cited by respondent; but aside from this the Johnion testimony did not cover anywhere near all the matter erroneously admitted.

Other evidence equally objectionable, tending to show the possession by defendant at the time of her arrest (which occurred about 10 months subsequent to the commission of the crime for which she was being tried) of various poisons, none of which had any connection with the crime committed at the Ogden residence, was admitted over the objection of defendant.

Evidence of obscene letters and writings of defendant in no way relating to the dynamiting of the Ogden house was admitted. This evidence was very prejudicial to defendant, as it tended to show her to be a most depraved and vicious woman. However depraved or vicious she might be, she was entitled to be tried only for the crime charged against her; and upon the issue presented by her plea of not guilty only such testimony as was relevant to such issue should have been admitted.

The evidence as to her brutal treatment of the witness John B. Martin, and as to her guilty connection with the numerous felonies and misdemeanors, had no relevancy to the question as to whether or not she was guilty of the crime of dynamiting the house of Judge Ogden. It is not pretended that it tended to prove that she committed the crime for which she was being tried. Its ostensible purpose was to prove that John B. Martin was not criminally responsible for his acts in placing and exploding the bomb at the Ogden home. But as we have shown, it was not admissible for this purpose. Its character was such as to greatly prejudice the defendant with the jury. The defendant had the right to have all such irrelevant matter excluded from the jury. When, as in this case, irrelevant testimony has been admitted, and is of such a character as necessarily to be prejudicial to defendant, a new trial must be granted. People v. Carpenter, 136 Cal. 393, 68 Pac. 1027; People v. Williams, 127 Cal. 216, 59 Pac. 581; People v. Arlington, 123 Cal. 356, 55 Pac. 1003; People v. Lynch, 122 Cal. 503, 55 Pac. 248.

Complaint is also made that defendant was compelled to answer questions upon cross-examination not relating to matters about which she had testified in chief. In some respect this complaint seems to be well founded, but as to most of the questions the answers were such as to preclude any inference of prejudice thereby. In view of the necessity for a new trial, we only feel it necessary upon this point to call attention to the rule for cross-examination of defendant as laid down in People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 Pac. 80, People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 121, 54 Pac. 591, and People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 359, 94 Pac. 407, 419.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the action remanded for a new trial.

CARLSON v. SHEEHAN. (S. F. 5,124.)

1. Work and Labor (§ 14*)—Effect of Express Contract—Performance Prevented.

Where complete performance of a contract has been prevented by the fault of defendant, plaintiff may sue for the value of what he has done under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. §§ 29–33; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. Contracts (§ 303*) — Construction — Building Contract.

Plaintiff contracted with defendant to put up a building for a specified sum on defendant's lot. When the contract was made, defendant was grading off the lot, and plaintiff saw the condition of the banks on each side, and knew the character of the soil. The building was to occupy the entire width of the lot, and defendant did not own the adjoining property. Plaintiff did not believe the banks would stand without support, and there was some negotiation between the parties for a concrete wall, but no agreement was made. Defendant told plaintiff that he had contracted with the graders to slope off the banks, but that the contract was not in writing, and they had refused to do it. After the building was partially constructed, heavy rain caused the banks to slide, crushing in the sides of the building, and damaging it materially. Defendant refused to pay for the restoration of the building to its former condition, and plaintiff refused to complete the building and sued for a balance for work done and materials furnished. Civ. Code, § 1511, provides that, where a person agrees to do a thing for a specified sum to be paid on full performance, he is not entitled to any part of the same unless he has done the thing he agreed to do, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, etc. Section 1512 provides that, if performance is prevented by the party who is to make such payment, the person doing the work is entitled to payment as for full performance. Held, that there was nothing done by defendant to prevent plaintiff from completing the building or which justified rescission by him, and that plaintiff could not recover a balance due and unpaid for work done and materials furnished.

3. Work and Labor (§ 14*)—Effect of Contract—Violation of Intermediate Covenant.

If one party breaks an intermediate covenant of an executory agreement, the other party may treat the entire contract as rescinded, and recover in quantum meruit for the value of the work he has done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Cent. Dig. §§ 29–33; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

4. Contracts (§ 303*)—Excuses for Failure to Perform.

Mere difficulty or unusual or unexpected expense will not excuse a party to a contract in failing to perform the same.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by O. E. Carlson against Maurice Sheehan. From a judgment on a nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Tum Suden & Tum Suden, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $1,715, alleged to be the balance due and unpaid for work done and materials furnished by plaintiff for defendant in constructing a building at defendant's special instance and request. After the plaintiff had introduced his evidence upon the trial, the court, on motion of the defendant, ordered a nonsuit. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment thereupon rendered.

The plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract, whereby the plaintiff agreed to erect a building upon a lot belonging to the defendant for the sum of $3,680. The plaintiff completed the building in part only, and the defendant paid him $2,100 upon the contract. The remainder was to be paid on and after completion. The cost of finishing the uncompleted part of the building would have been about $500. The claim of the plaintiff is that he was prevented or excused from completing the building according to the agreement by the conduct of the defendant. The object of the suit is to recover the difference between the value of the work done at the contract rate and the amount paid by the defendant.

We do not think there is any merit in the contention of the respondent that a recovery cannot be had upon the common count for the value of the work and material, and that the plaintiff should have averred the special contract, the sum agreed to be paid, the performance by himself, and nonpayment by defendant. Such a rule may apply where a contract has been performed by the plaintiff, but, where complete performance has been prevented by the fault of the defendant, the plaintiff may sue for the value of that which he has done under it.

The lot on which the building was erected was 25 feet in width fronting on Market street and 125 feet in depth. The building was a two-story frame structure covering the entire width of the lot and running back 70 feet. The defendant did not own the adjoining lot on either side. At the time the work was begun on the contract, the lot had been graded down lower than the natural surface of the adjoining lot, leaving high vertical banks of earth on each side. These banks were unprotected by retaining walls or otherwise, and were liable to slide down upon the lot and against any building erected thereon in case of heavy rains. The contract was made on September 2, 1906, and plaintiff began the work about the first of October. At the time of making the contract, the defendant was grading the lot to prepare it for the building. Plaintiff saw the condition of the banks on each side, and knew the character of the soil. He did not believe the banks would stand without support, and there was some negotiation between him and defendant about putting in a concrete retaining wall four feet high to protect them from caving or sliding in upon the building, but there was no agreement regarding it. It was agreed that plaintiff should put in a wooden bulkhead in the rear five feet in height. The defendant told plaintiff that he had contracted with the graders to slope off the banks on each side, but that the contract was not in writing, and they had refused to do it. Counsel for plaintiff earnestly insist that this was said at the time of executing the contract, and that it constituted an inducement or consideration therefor from which an agreement by the defendant to slope off the banks would be implied. Giving to the evidence the full force which is to be attributed to it on a motion for nonsuit, we cannot so construe it. The conversation referred to, in which this was said, occurred after the contract was signed and before the work was begun. The statement itself indicates that it was made after the lot was graded and the context confirms this conclusion. There is nothing to show that Carlson signed the contract in reliance upon, or in consideration of, any agreement of Sheehan to slope off the banks.

The work was begun by Carlson with full knowledge of the conditions and without any protest or objection by him on account of any danger of a landslide from the adjoining banks. When the building was nearly finished, there were heavy rains which caused the said banks to slide in on the building, crushing in the sides thereof, and damaging it to such an extent that it would require an expense of $400 to restore it to its former condition. The defendant thereupon undertook to clear away the earth, so that plaintiff could complete the building and directed the plaintiff to stop further work until the earth was removed. This occupied several months. When it was done, the defendant requested that plaintiff proceed with the work to completion. Plaintiff demanded that defendant pay the expense necessary to restore the building to the condition it was in before the slide occurred. The defendant refused to do this, and thereupon the plaintiff refused to complete the building. The decision of the case depends on the question whether or not the plaintiff was justified in his refusal to go on with the work, under the facts stated.

Where a person agrees to do a thing for another for a specified sum of money to be paid on full performance, he is not entitled to any part of the sum until he has himself done the thing he agreed to do, unless full performance has been excused, prevented, or delayed by the act of the other party, or by operation of law, or by the act of God or the public enemy, as specified in section 1511 of the Civil Code. If performance is prevented by the party who is to make such payment, the person doing the things is entitled to payment as for full performance. Civ. Code, § 1512. And, if one party breaks an intermediate covenant of an executory agreement, the other party may treat the entire contract as rescinded, and recover in quantum meruit for the value of the work he has done under it. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164. There was nothing done by Sheehan in the present case which had the effect of preventing Carlson from completing the building, or which justified a rescission by him. At the time the contract was signed the grading was in progress. There is no evidence that Sheehan then agreed that he would have the banks of the adjoining lots, which he did not own, sloped off so as to prevent the earth from falling on his own lot, or from sliding against the building to be erected thereon. He would have no right to do that; and his only lawful means of protecting his lot, without the consent of the adjoining owners, was to erect a retaining wall or bulkhead upon his own side of the boundary line. Carlson saw the situation in which the lot would be left when the grading was done, and he knew the character of the soil. With this knowledge he executed the contract without exacting any stipulation for his protection from the consequences of any caving of the banks which might occur during the erection of the building. Before he began the work, he saw that the banks were vertical and Sheehan explained the reason, but did not agree to do anything to avoid or prevent the danger. Carlson must be presumed to have undertaken the performance of the contract at his own risk of interference by landslides from the adjoining lots. It may be admitted that there was an implied agreement that Sheehan would complete the grading to the desired level and that he was bound to remove the earth which, from natural causes, fell upon the lot after the work was begun and interfered with its completion. If this obligation existed, he discharged it by removing the fallen earth. But he had made no agreement that he would repair any damage to the building from a slide or cave occurring while the work was in progress. There was no such obligation resting upon him by implication of law. Carlson was bound to perform his contract and he was not absolved therefrom by the natural obstacles intervening, unless they rendered performance practically impossible. Mere difficulty or unusual or unexpected expense would not excuse him. 9 Cyc. 625; Klauber v. San Diego St. Co., 95 Cal. 357, 30 Pac. 555; Wilmington, etc., Co. v. O'Neil, 98 Cal. 5, 32 Pac. 705; Sample v. Fresno F. Co., 129 Cal. 228, 61 Pac. 1085; Wilson v. Alcatraz A. Co., 142 Cal. 188, 75 Pac. 787. The only reason given by Carlson for refusing to go on was that after the landslide Sheehan would not agree to allow him extra compensation for the expense he would be put to in restoring the building to its previous condition. This restoration was necessary to complete his own undertaking and he had no right to demand that Sheehan should pay him for it. The refusal of Sheehan to do so was no excuse for noncompletion by Carlson.

It is claimed that further performance was excused by reason of a statement by the defendant, after the injury, to the effect that he would not let Carlson go on with the work unless he restored the building to its proper condition as called for by the contract. It is plain that all that Sheehan meant by this was that he would not consider the building completed nor accept it unless it was so restored. Carlson himself, on cross-examination, fully explained that the only reason why he did not complete the building was that Sheehan would not restore the building himself nor pay the cost thereof.

The District Court of Appeal for the First District to which this case was transferred affirmed the judgment. A transfer was then made to this court to further consider the evidence concerning the asserted agreement or obligation of Sheehan to slope off the adjoining banks. We are satisfied that both the district court and the superior court were correct in their conclusions.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRANE v. DERRICK. (S. F. 4,871).

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 206*)—CLAIMS—CARE OF DECEASED BY SON—UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN CHILDREN OF DECEASED.

The right of a son to recover of his mother's administrator for caring for her is not affected by the fact that when he took her to his home it was the understanding between him and her other children that he should have the use of her property as compensation for caring for her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 206*)—CARE OF DECEASED BY SON—IMPLIED PROMISE.

Though under Civ. Code, § 206, a son has no legal duty to maintain his mother, she having property of her own, his right to recover of her estate for support and care given by him to her depends on whether there was an implied promise on her part to pay him therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 733; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 206*)—CLAIMS—CARE OF DECEASED BY SON—IMPLIED PROMISE.

That a son may recover of his mother's estate for support and care of her on the ground of an implied promise, the circumstances must have been such as to warrant the inference that it was the expectation of both parties, existing while the relation existed, that compensation should be made; as no circumstances occurring afterwards can convert that into an implied promise which was not so before.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 733; Dec. Dig. § 206.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 221*)—CLAIMS—CARE OF DECEASED BY SON—IMPLIED PROMISE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action for recovery by a son of his mother's administrator for her support, held to warrant a finding that there was no implied contract that he should be compensated.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

G. W. Langan and Asa V. Mendenhall, for appellant. W. B. Rinehart, Samuel Bell McKee, and McKee & Tasheira, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was brought by Anna J. Gilson against the defendant for an accounting as to property owned by her and in his possession and to recover the sum found due on such accounting. An accounting was had, resulting in a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $3,195.76. This is an appeal from said judgment. During the pendency of the appeal, Mrs. Gilson died, and her special administrator has been substituted as plaintiff.

It is stipulated that the only question to be determined on this appeal is as to the correctness of the action of the trial court in disallowing certain claims made by defendant against Mrs. Gilson, aggregating $986.62, for board, lodging, and care of plaintiff at certain specified times between May 1, 1903, and May 1, 1906, at the rate of $40 per month; the same being: (1) From May 1, 1903, to October 3, 1903, $162.66; (2) from January 8, 1904, to May 15, 1904, $169.30; (3) from December 20, 1904, to May 1, 1906, $654.66. There is no dispute as to the claim being correct in amount, nor as to the fact that the board, lodging, and care were furnished to Mrs. Gilson. There was no express contract as to such board, lodging, or care, and Mrs. Gilson could be held liable therefor, if at all, only upon an implied contract. Ordinarily, of course, the law will imply a promise on the part of the recipient of services to pay for them. Plaintiff's claim is that no such promise is implied in this case in view of the circumstances under which the services were performed.

Mrs. Gilson was the mother of defendant. In May, 1902, she was about 70 years of age. She was then residing in Reno, Nev., and had been residing there for about 20 years. She owned property aggregating in value about $10,000; a portion thereof being real property in Reno. Defendant was engaged in the practice of medicine in Oakland, Cal., where he had a large and lucrative practice. Defendant's wife was also a licensed physician. They were apparently living in very comfortable circumstances. His mother becoming very ill, and apparently incompetent to care for herself and her property, he went to Reno, and, having been appointed guardian of her person and estate, brought her to his home in Oakland, where she remained until October 3, 1903. She did not remember at all about being taken to Oakland, but found herself there when she "came to, so as to know" where she was. During this period of her stay at defendant's house she was very feeble, and defendant and his wife furnished everything necessary for her maintenance, "care, room, board, such medical advice as was necessary, special massage at times by an assistant in the office, and at times with a horse and buggy—anything that we could do to make her comfortable and happy." In short, she was treated in every respect as an invalid mother would ordinarily be treated in the household of her son. She returned to Reno about October 3, 1903, but came back to defendant's house January 8, 1904, and remained there as a member of his household until May 15, 1904, and again from December 20, 1904, until May 1, 1906. During both of these periods she was better able to care for herself than during the first period. At all times she was treated as a member of the household, and defendant testified that "she had everything that could be furnished to make her comfortable and happy." It is not denied that there was never any understanding between Mrs. Gilson and defendant that defendant was to receive any compensation for such maintenance and services, or that there never was any intimation on his part to her that he expected compensation. It must be taken as true, in view of the conclusion of the trial court, that defendant told his mother on several occasions that she was welcome to a home with him. Defendant made the same statement in a letter written to his brother in October, 1903.

On the settlement of his final account as guardian of his mother's person and estate by the Nevada court May 22, 1903, defendant was allowed $50 per month as compensation for caring for his ward and managing her estate, having asked for the same in his report, and Mrs. Gilson having signed a written request, attached to the account and report, that the account be settled as presented and the requests contained in the report be granted. There was, however, evidence sufficient to support a conclusion on the part of the trial court that Mrs. Gilson, by reason of her then condition, did not realize that defendant was making any charge for her care or maintenance in his home.

It is uncontradicted that the understanding between defendant and his brother and sister at the time he first took his mother to his home was that he should have the use of Mrs. Gilson's property as compensation for her care. Mrs. Gilson, however, never knew anything about this understanding, and, of course, it was in no way binding on her, however much it may be morally binding on his brother and sister as heirs of the mother, now that she is dead.

Counsel for defendant rely strongly on the fact that there was no duty imposed by the law on defendant to maintain his mother to the extent of his ability; section 206 of the Civil Code prescribing such duty on the part of a child being limited by its terms to cases where the relative (father, mother, or child) is poor and unable to maintain himself by work. Manifestly the mother could not by any process of law have compelled support at the hands of her son. That fact, however, is of no importance here. The question on this appeal is simply whether the facts we have stated sufficiently support the conclusion of the trial court that there was no implied promise on the part of the mother to compensate her son for the support and care given.

In Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 508, this court, after speaking of the well-settled general rule that a promise to pay for services rendered and accepted is implied, said: "Such undoubtedly is the general rule upon this question. It is founded, however, upon a mere presumption of law, and is liable to be rebutted by proof of a special agreement to pay therefor a particular amount or in a particular manner, or by proof that the services were intended to be gratuitous, or even by particular circumstances, from which the law would raise the counter presumption that the services were not intended to be a charge against the party who was benefited thereby." One of the most familiar classes of cases of the kind last mentioned is that where a claim is asserted by a child against his parent or by a parent against his child for services of the kind here involved. As was well said in Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 513: "There is, perhaps, no class of cases, assumed to be based upon implied contracts, that has more embarrassed courts and juries than cases arising between relations. These cases are always unfortunate, and, from the delicacy of the relationship existing among the parties, it is often extremely difficult to arrive at their true intention. There is so great a variety in the circumstances of different cases that it is difficult to lay down general rules." The conclusion that one is to pay for services rendered him by another is a common sense one to which the mind naturally comes in ordinary cases "from a knowledge of the circumstances of the particular case and the ordinary dealings between man and man." But when the services are rendered between members of the same household or between those most closely related by blood, "we find other motives than the desire of gain which may prompt the exchange of mutual benefits between them." Page v. Page, 73 N. H. 305, 61 Atl. 356. It has been said many times that the question is one that must be determined on the circumstances of the particular case; the question in each case being whether it can reasonably be inferred that pecuniary compensation was in the view of the parties at the time the services were rendered or the support was furnished. See 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 1061; Murdock v. Murdock, supra; Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42, 45. In the consideration of such circumstances, the degree of the relationship may strengthen or diminish the implication that the services are acts of gratuitous kindness and affection, according to its proximity or remoteness. 1 Beach on Law of Contracts, § 653. Our own decisions appear to support the doctrine that to authorize compensation in such cases the circumstances must be such as to warrant the inference that it was the expectation of both parties that compensation should be made. Murdock v. Murdock, supra; Friermuth v. Friermuth, supra. And it is emphatically declared in Murdock v. Murdock, supra, that it is the expectations of the parties existing while the relation continued that is to control, and that no circumstance occurring afterwards can convert that into an implied contract that was not so before.

It appears clear to us that we would not be warranted in holding that the conclusion of the learned trial judge on this matter was without sufficient support in the evidence. A son finding his aged mother dangerously ill and unable to care for herself, being himself comfortably situated and abundantly able financially to do so, takes her to his home and makes her a member of his household, there treating her in all respects as an affectionate son would treat his mother, and repeatedly assuring her that she was always welcome to a home with him, and never intimating that she was expected to or should in justice pay him for board, lodging, or care. It seems to us that the natural inference of any reasonable person would be that neither of the parties would expect for a moment that pecuniary compensation by one to the other was contemplated by either, and certainly that the son was prompted by no such sordid motive in thus caring for his mother, even though she had property amounting in value to $10,000, and had been living in another place for some years. It is to the credit of the defendant that the record fails to indicate any such expectation on his part as that of being paid by his mother, quite clearly indicating to the contrary, as we read it, that the claim was due solely to the unfortunate differences subsequently occurring. Doubtless defendant expected, and in view of his understanding with his brother and sister properly expected, that, in the event of his mother's death, the agreement between them would be observed; but the trial court was fully warranted in concluding that he did not render the services under any expectation that his mother should render him any compensation.

PEOPLE v. BRIGHT. (Sac. 1,564.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 9, 1910.)

1. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Motion to Quash—Disqualification of Grand Juror.

Under Pen. Code, § 896, authorizing the challenging of a grand juror on the ground that a state of mind exists on his part in reference to the case, or to either party, which would prevent him from acting impartially, and section 995, requiring the setting aside of an indictment against one not previously held to answer, on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge to any individual grand juror, the court must set aside an indictment of accused not previously held to answer, where an individual grand juror was disqualified because of a state of mind on his part in reference to accused, where the juror took part in the consideration of the charge against accused or the deliberations of the grand jury within section 900.

Pen. Code, § 900, providing that, where a challenge of a grand juror is allowed, he cannot be present in the consideration of the charge against accused who interposed the challenge or the deliberations of the grand jury thereon, prescribes the rule to determine whether a disqualified grand juror participated in the matter of an indictment within section 995, requiring the court to set aside an indictment against one not previously held to answer on any ground which would have been good ground of challenge to any individual juror.

3. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Deliberations—Consideration.

Under Pen. Code, § 900, providing that, where a challenge to an individual grand juror is allowed, he cannot be present in the consideration of a charge against accused who interposed the challenge or the deliberations of the grand jury thereon, when considered in connection with section 925, providing that no person must be permitted to be present during the expression of the opinions of the grand jurors or giving their votes on any matter before them, and section 995, authorizing the setting aside of an indictment where a person is permitted to be present during the session of the grand jury and when the charge embraced in the indictment is under consideration, and section 922, requiring a grand juror to declare his knowledge of the commission of a public offense to his fellow jurors who must investigate the case, a disqualified grand juror has no right as such to be present at or to take any part in the investigation of the charge, and a disqualified juror who was present and acted as a member of the grand jury during all the time it was investigating the charge against accused, including the examination of witnesses, and who interrogated some of the witnesses, took part in the consideration of the charge, authorizing the setting aside of the indictment, though he was not present at any time during the actual deliberation of the grand jury on the question whether an indictment should be found.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

R. L. Bright was indicted for a felony, and, from an order setting aside the indictment, the People appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and E. W. Holland, Dist. Atty., for the People. J. B. Curtin, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of Tuolumne county granting a motion to set aside an indictment found by the grand jury of that county against defendant, charging him with a felony. The appeal was properly taken to the District Court of Appeal, and has come to this court under an order granting a hearing herein after decision by the District Court of Appeal.

The defendant had not been held to answer before the finding of the indictment. The motion to set aside the indictment was based on the ground that one of the grand jurors, Charles E. Blanchard, had such a state of mind in reference to the cause as would prevent him from acting impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant. Our Penal Code provides that an indictment must be set aside by the trial court, on motion of the defendant, "when the defendant had not been held to answer before the finding of the indictment, on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge, either to the panel or to any individual grand juror" (section 995), and that a challenge to an individual grand juror may be interposed on the ground "that a state of mind exists on his part in reference to the case, or to either party, which would prevent him from acting impartially and without prejudice to the substantial rights of the party challenging," with the same proviso as to opinions founded on public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety as exists in regard to trial jurors (section 896). Where it is found on such a motion made by a defendant, who had not been held to answer prior to indictment, that the individual grand juror was disqualified to act by reason of this statutory provision, and that the challenge is good, the trial court is bound to set aside the indictment (People v. Landis, 139 Cal. 426, 73 Pac. 153), provided, of course, such juror has taken part in the consideration of the charge against the defendant, or the deliberations of the grand jury therein. Pen. Code, § 900.

It cannot be seriously disputed that the trial court was warranted in concluding that the grand juror was disqualified by reason of this provision of the statute. On the hearing of the motion the juror frankly admitted the existence at the time of the impanelment of the grand jury and throughout the proceedings leading to the return of the indictment of a state of mind on his part with reference to the case that would prevent him from acting impartially, and in recognition of this condition retired from the grand jury room when the grand jury was about to vote upon the question of indictment and was not present at and did not participate in such vote.

The question then is whether the disqualified grand juror participated in the matter of this indictment in a manner prohibited by the statute. Although not present at any time during the actual deliberations of the grand jury upon the question whether an indictment should be found, he testified that he was present and did "take an active part in all of the matters leading up to this indictment, saving and excepting the deliberations as to whether they would find for or against the indictment." He further said that he was present and acted as a member of the grand jury during all of the time that it was investigating the charge against defendant, including the examination of witnesses, and that he interrogated some of the witnesses before that body.

There can be no doubt that section 900 of the Penal Code prescribes the rule applicable in determining the question before us. If this is not so, it would appear to be necessary to hold that under section 995 the court is compelled to grant the motion to set aside the indictment whenever a grand juror is shown to have been disqualified, even though he took no part in the matter of the particular indictment. The contrary, however, is the only reasonable view and is settled by the decisions. See People v. Simmons, 119 Cal.

3, 50 Pac. 844. Section 900 of the Penal Code is the only provision declaring the effect of an established disqualification. That section provides that, "if a challenge to an individual grand juror is allowed, he cannot be present or take part in the consideration of a charge against the defendant who interposed the challenge, or the deliberations of the grand jury thereon."

What does this statute mean when it says that such a grand juror "cannot be present or take part in the consideration of the charge"? Followed as this is by the words "or the deliberations of the grand jury thereon," it would appear to necessarily include something in addition to the mere discussion after the evidence has been received of the question whether an indictment should be found and the actual taking of a vote on that question. An example of the language deemed necessary by the Legislature where it was intended to confine the prohibition to the taking of the vote is to be found in section 925 of the Penal Code, prescribing the officers who may be present during sessions of the grand jury and the purposes for which they may be present, and explicitly providing that "no person must be permitted to be present during the expression of their opinions, or giving their votes upon any matter before them." Again, it is provided, in section 995 of the Penal Code, as one of the grounds upon which the indictment must be set aside on motion, as follows: "Where a person is permitted to be present during the session of the grand jury, and when the charge embraced in the indictment is under consideration, except as provided in section nine hundred and twenty-five"—which section, as we have already seen, permits the presence of any other person only during the investigation prior to deliberation and voting, and expressly prohibits the presence of any person during the expression of their opinions by the jurors and the giving of their votes. We are clearly of the opinion that the word "consideration," in section 900 of the Penal Code, means the investigation of the charge. Under this provision the disqualified grand juror has no right as such to be present at or to take any part in the investigation of the charge. His sole function and duty in that regard is that prescribed by section 922 of the Penal Code, viz., "to declare" the fact of an offense of which he has knowledge "to his fellow jurors, who must thereupon investigate the same." In such investigation the disqualified grand juror cannot be present as a member of the jury, and the only capacity in which he can be present, in view of the provisions of section 925 of the Penal Code, is that of witness during the actual taking of his own testimony, if the same be required by his fellow jurors.

We may question the wisdom of some of our statutory provisions relative to grand jurors and the grounds upon which an indictment shall be set aside; but it is our duty to comply with their mandatory requirements. We cannot doubt that this juror, disqualified under the provisions of those statutes to take part in the consideration of the charge against this defendant, did take part in such consideration, and that the trial court but followed the law in sustaining the motion to dismiss. If it had been desired to prosecute this case on its merits, the simple remedy of the district attorney would have been to obtain a direction from the trial court that the case be resubmitted to the same or another grand jury. The defendant could then have been indicted again, or a new prosecution could have been instituted before a committing magistrate. Section 997, Pen. Code.

The order of the superior court is affirmed.

CERTIORARI (§ 15*)—NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

Where the superior court arbitrarily dismisses an appeal from a justice of the peace, a writ of review will not be granted, as the erroneous dismissal of an appeal is no more jurisdictional than erroneously deciding the merits of the cause.

Application by John H. McGowan against the Superior Court of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, W. P. James, Judge, and another, for a writ of review. Application for writ denied.

Hanson, Hackler & Heath, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Assuming that the matters and facts set forth in the petition disclose arbitrary action on the part of the superior court in dismissing an appeal regularly taken from a justice's court upon questions of both law and fact, and which appeal was then pending in said superior court, by which order it divested itself of jurisdiction and prevented appellant from having a hearing of such cause upon its merits, we are then confronted with the precise question involved in Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, wherein our Supreme Court has said, referring to the superior court: "It has jurisdiction to hear a motion to dismiss the appeal as fully as it has jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause upon its merits, and to erroneously dismiss the appeal is no more jurisdictional than to erroneously decide the merits of the cause." While we are much impressed with the reasoning employed in the former case of Hall v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 25, 8 Pac. 509, wherein it is said, "That court [the superior court] can neither give to itself jurisdiction by holding an insufficient undertaking sufficient, nor divest itself of jurisdiction by holding a sufficient bond insufficient," nevertheless, we feel ourselves bound by the subsequent ruling in Buckley v. Superior Court, which, while the opinion of a divided court, has never as yet been directly overruled or modified. Adopting, then, as we feel ourselves bound to do under the circumstances, the rule laid down in the later case, this application must be denied.

Application for writ denied.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 786*)—COSTS (§ 260*)—APPEAL FOR DELAY—DISMISSAL.

Where more than 40 days elapsed since the taking of the appeal, and no transcript of appeal was prepared, served, or filed, and no excuse was given for the delay, and appellant failed to appear at the hearing of a motion to dismiss, it would be assumed that the appeal was taken for delay, and it would be dismissed, and damages assessed against appellant.

BURNETT, J. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground "that more than 40 days have elapsed since the taking of said appeal, and no transcript on appeal has been prepared, served, or filed"; and respondent also asks the court to assess damages for the "taking of a vexatious appeal for delay." The notice of appeal was given and filed on January 13, 1910, and an undertaking was filed on the same day. Nothing further seems to have been done in the prosecution of the appeal, and no excuse is offered for the delay. The notice of the motion to dismiss was given on March 6th, and appellant did not appear at the hearing. Under the circumstances, we must assume that the purpose of appellant in taking the appeal was as stated by respondent.

The appeal is therefore dismissed, with damages against appellant assessed at $30.

TROY LAUNDRY MACHINERY CO., Limited, v. DRIVERS' INDEPENDENT LAUNDRY CO. (Civ. 776.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 771*)—TIME (§ 10*)—POINTS AND AUTHORITIES—TIME TO FILE—COMPUTATION OF TIME.

The transcript on appeal was filed December 6, 1909, and the period of 30 days allowed appellant by Superior Court rule 2, subd. 4 (78 Pac. vii), for filing points and authorities expired on January 5, 1910, but they were not filed within that time. Respondent's attorney, however, died on December 30, 1909, and on February 16, 1910, respondent selected another attorney, and served notice of his appointment and of a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file points and authorities within the time allowed. Held, that this action rendered it unnecessary for appellant to give the notice to respondent to appoint another attorney or appear in person, prescribed in Code Civ. Proc. § 286, by virtue of which all proceedings were suspended from the death of respondent's attorney till another was appointed or respondent appeared personally, and hence appellant had six days from and after February 16, 1910, within which to file points and authorities, and this period expiring on February 22d, which, being a holiday, should be excluded in the computation, the time was extended to February 23, 1910, on which date they were filed in time.

Action by the Troy Laundry Machinery Company, Limited, against the Drivers' Independent Laundry Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appealed, and defendant moves to dimiss the appeal. Motion denied.

D. Z. Gardiner and Millsap & Sparks, for appellant. Horace S. Wilson and Constan Jensen, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Motion to dismiss appeal from judgment upon the ground that appellant failed to file its points and authorities within the time prescribed by the rules of this court. Subdivision 4, rule 2 (78 Pac. vii).

The transcript was filed December 6, 1909, and the period of 30 days allowed to appellant for filing its points and authorities expired on January 5, 1910. The points and authorities, however, were not filed until February 23, 1910. The reason for the delay, as appears from appellant's affidavit filed in opposition to the motion, was that respondent's attorney died on December 30, 1909, at which time appellant had 6 days within which to file its points and authorities. Upon the death of an attorney all further proceedings against the party for whom he was acting as attorney are stayed until such time (unless he of his own motion appoint another attorney) as the adverse party shall by written notice require him to appoint another attorney or appear in person. Section 286, Code Civ. Proc. By virtue of the provisions of this section all proceedings in the prosecution of the appeal were suspended from the date when respondent's attorney died until such time as respondent voluntarily, or in response to proceedings instituted by the adverse party, as provided by said section 286, appointed another attorney or appeared personally. On February 16, 1910, respondent selected another attorney, notice of the appointment of whom was on the same day, together with a motion to dismiss the appeal, served upon appellant. This action on the part of respondent in appointing an attorney rendered it unnecessary for appellant to give the notice prescribed in section 286, supra. Nicol v. San Francisco, 130 Cal. 288, 62 Pac. 513. Appellant, therefore, had 6 days remaining from and after February 16, 1910, within which to file its points and authorities. This period expired on February 22d, which, being a holiday (section 10, Code Civ. Proc.), should be excluded in the computation (section 12, Code Civ. Proc.), thus extending the time to February 23, 1910, on which date the points and authorities were filed. Under the circumstances of this case they were filed in time.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of M. Theodore Kearney, deceased. From a decree of partial distribution to the Regents of the University of California, Margaret Zeeder appeals. Affirmed.

W. M. Cannon, for appellant. F. A. Cutler, for respondent Regents of University. Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, for respondent Mercantile Trust Co.

COOPER, P. J. This appeal is from a decree of partial distribution, and is brought here on what is termed the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions. In such case all presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the judgment and decree of the trial court.

The record contains the will of deceased filed in the clerk's office in May, 1906. By its provisions the entire estate is left to the Regents of the University of California, a corporation. It is further provided therein that the deceased did not desire that any portion of his estate should go to his heirs if any heirs should survive him; and that in case, by reason of the provisions of section 1313 of the Civil Code or otherwise, all of his property could not be distributed to the Regents of the University, then all such residue to be given to W. H. Crocker and other parties named in the will, and appellant was not one of such parties. In November, 1906, the petition for partial distribution to the said Regents of the University was filed. An order was duly made, designating a time and place for hearing said petition, and the clerk of the court gave notice to all persons interested to appear at said time and place so designated and show cause, if any they had, why such decree should not be made. The time designated in the notice was December 10, 1906, and the notice was posted in three of the most public places in the county at least 10 days before the time so set for hearing.

The next information given by the record is as to the filing of a petition for partial distribution to herself by the appellant on the 18th day of March, 1909, in which it is alleged that she is the assignee of one Dennis Kearney, and that said Dennis Kearney was the sole surviving heir at law of said M. Theodore Kearney, deceased. The court thereupon, on the filing of such petition by appellant, made an order, fixing the 26th day of March, 1909, as the time for hearing appellant's petition for partial distribution which order directed notice of the time and place to be personally served upon the Mercantile Trust Company, the executor of the will of deceased. On the 19th day of March, 1909, the court made the decree of partial distribution herein appealed from, by which it distributed the greater portion of the said estate to the Regents of the University of California in accordance with the will. This decree recites, and finds, that no one appeared or opposed the petition for such distribution; that the deceased left no legal heirs surviving him; that the Regents of the University of California, a corporation, is the sole devisee. The record not only fails to show that any objection of any kind was made by the appellant to the petition of the Regents of the University, but it does not show that notice of the petition filed by appellant was personally served upon the executor of the will of deceased or upon the Regents of the University, or that they or either of them had any notice of it at the time the petition of the Regents of the University came on for hearing. It is shown that the notice of appellant's petition for partial distribution was personally served on the executor on the 19th day of March, 1909, but such fact is perfectly consistent with the fact that such service was made after the decree complained of had been made and signed. In fact, it is perfectly consistent with the record here that the petition of appellant had been withdrawn at the time of the decree to the Regents of the University so made. There is nothing to show what the evidence was on the hearing of the petition, or that appellant had any interest in the estate, or that her assignor was an heir at law of the deceased. It is claimed that notice of the application for partial distribution was not given personally to the executor. It is sufficient that the decree recites that the executor appeared at the hearing by its attorney. We must presume that it was personally served, and whether it was or not the appearance by its attorney is conclusive as to the executor having received notice. Estate of Johnson, 45 Cal. 257; Abila v. Padilla, 14 Cal. 103.

It is next claimed that, the petition of appellant being on file at the time the petition of the Regents of the University came on for hearing, it was the duty of the court to take judicial notice of such petition, and to continue the hearing so that both petitions could be heard at the same time. We are cited to no authority supporting such proposition, and we do not know of any, nor in our opinion was it the duty of the trial judge to act as attorney for the appellant or for either of the parties. The appellant had notice of the application made by the Regents of the University, and had not appeared or filed any answer or objections to such petition.

We must therefore affirm the decree, and it is so ordered.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

REED v. HICKEY et al. (Civ. 683.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 1, 1910.)

1. Mines and Minerals (§ 53*)—Sale or Option—Contract.

A contract reciting plaintiff's ownership of a mine, and that defendants are desirous of an option to purchase it for the agreed purchase price of $36,000, based on the privilege of 60 days from date in which to prospect by sinking a shaft at a certain point, providing that, in consideration of the performance of the terms of the contract by defendants, plaintiff covenants and agrees to sell and convey the mine to defendants, at any time within said 60 days, on payments and conditions as follows: The payments provided being $10,000 on or before 60 days after date, and other payments to make up the price within the year following; providing that all pay gravel taken out by defendants during said 60 days' option shall belong to plaintiff; that improvements placed on the premises by defendants during said 60 days for prospecting shall belong to plaintiff on failure of defendants to make the first payment provided for; that on payment of the first installment within said 60 days plaintiff will execute and deposit a deed in escrow, to be delivered on payment of the balance of the purchase money, but to be returned to plaintiff in case of default in any of the payments or violation of the terms or conditions of the agreement; that on receipt of the first payment plaintiff will turn over to defendants the property and all apparatus owned and used by him in working the mine, and thereupon defendants shall have the right of mining the property for their own benefit; and that a default in payment of an installment at the stipulated time, or a default in other matters stipulated to be done by defendants, shall at once abrogate the agreement, and its provisions shall no longer bind plaintiff, and he may re-enter and assume possession of the mining property and all improvements made or placed thereon by defendants, and the same and all payments on account of purchase price shall be forfeited to plaintiff as liquidated damages for use and occupation of the property—is not a continuing option, renewed as each payment is made and continuing until the next payment, but on the first payment being made it becomes a contract of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 147, 148; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 23*)—Contracts—Signing by One Party—Entry and Payments by Other Party.

Though a contract, constituting an agreement by plaintiff to sell land to defendants, is signed only by plaintiff, defendants by going into possession of the property, and making payments under the contract, accept its terms, and become bound by it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

3. Contracts (§ 10*)—Mutuality.

Though the vendees by their breach of the contract of sale deprive themselves of the right to specific performance, mutuality of the contract is not thereby destroyed, so as to take from the vendor the right to recover the unpaid amounts due under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 21–23; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. Vendor and Purchaser (§ 302*)—Contracts—Remedy for Default in Payment.

A contract of sale of land providing that default in payment of an installment shall abrogate it, and the vendor may re-enter and assume possession, and all improvements put on the property by the vendees, and all payments on account of purchase price, shall be forfeited to the vendor as liquidated damages for use and occupation of the property, does not limit the vendor to his right of repossessing himself of the property, but he may recover the unpaid installments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Solinsky & Wehe and John Hancock, for appellants. Nicol & Orr, Snyder & Snyder, and Ira Hill Reed, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover the balance of the consideration mentioned in a certain contract for the sale of certain placer mining property situated in Calaveras county. Plaintiff had judgment, from which and from the order denying their motion for a new trial defendants appeal. The question now here rests chiefly upon the interpretation to be given to the agreement in the light of the circumstances surrounding the parties and their conduct and acts at the execution of the agreement and subsequent thereto.

It is set forth in the complaint that on April 29, 1907, and for many years prior thereto, plaintiff was the owner of the property in question, called the "Reed Drift Mine"; that on that day one J. E. King was and had been the agent of defendants in negotiating for a contract for the sale and purchase of said mine, and upon that day plaintiff entered into an agreement in writing with said King, for said defendants, the material provisions of which are as follows: Reciting the fact of plaintiff's ownership and setting forth a description of the mine, the contract recites that second party "is desirous of an option to purchase said property for the agreed purchase price of $36,000, based upon the privilege of sixty days from date in which to prospect by sinking a shaft from the surface and drifting therefrom to ascertain the course and extent of the lead on which said party of the first part is now breasting and milling the gravel taken out." It is then provided that in consideration of the faithful performance of the terms of the contract by the second party, as thereinafter set forth, first party "covenants and agrees to sell and convey the said Reed mine to said party of the second part, at any time within said sixty days from the date of these presents, upon payments and conditions as follows." These conditions provide for a payment of $10,000 on or before June 29, 1907; $6,500 to be paid on or before September 29, 1907; $6,500 on or before December 29, 1907; $6,500 on or before March 29, 1908; the full and final payment of $6,500 to be paid on or before June 29, 1908. The contract then fixes the point upon the mine at which the prospecting shaft is to be sunk, and provides that "until the expiration of the sixty days' option hereby granted the right to continue the uninterrupted working and operating of said mine by said party of the first part and to the proceeds of the gravel taken out is agreed to and that the said privilege of prospecting by said party of the second part shall in no manner interrupt or interfere with the working of said mine by said party of the first part"; and "all pay gravel taken out by the party of the second part while prospecting during the said period of sixty days shall belong to said party of the first part"; that all buildings, improvements, and appliances placed upon the premises by second party "during said period of sixty days granted for prospecting" are to belong to said first party upon failure of second party to make the first payment provided for. It is then provided that upon payment of the first installment within said period of 60 days from date first party will at once make and execute a good and sufficient conveyance of said mine, and deposit the same in escrow with the Bank of California, with instructions to hold the same during the life of the said agreement, and deliver the same upon "payment of the balance of said purchase price at the times as herein stipulated, but if default be made in making any of said payments or any violation of the terms or conditions of this agreement to return said deed to the party of the first part." It was further agreed that upon receipt of the first payment party of the first part "will at once turn over and surrender possession of said property to said party of the second part with the hoist, mill, and all tools and appliances owned by him and heretofore used in working said mine; * * * and thereupon said party of the second part shall have the right and privilege of entering upon and into said Reed mine and of mining, prospecting and developing the same, and of taking out and working the gravel or any other mineral deposit, and extracting the gold contained therein for his own use and benefit." It is next provided that second party shall do the prospect work in a good and workmanlike manner at his own cost and expense, and contains certain provisions for protecting first party against liens or unpaid labor and materials. The contract also gives to the first party the privilege of access to the mine and mill in order that he may know the character of the work being done and the extent of the pay gravel extracted. Time is expressly made the essence of the agreement and it is provided "that a default in payment of either or any of the installments of said purchase price at the times and in the manner stated, or the failure to make monthly payments of the operating expenses in working said mine or to file with the party of the first part, on the tenth day of each month a statement of such running expenses with vouchers, within a reasonable time thereafter, showing the payment thereof, shall at once abrogate this agreement and its provisions shall no longer bind the party of the first part and he may at once re-enter and assume possession and control of the whole of said described mining property, together with any and all machinery, buildings, tools, lumber, material, appliances and improvements either made or placed thereon by said party of the second part and the same, together with all payments of money on account of said purchase price, shall be forfeited to said party of the first part as liquidated damages for the use and occupation of said property, * * * and all such machinery, buildings, tools, lumber, materials, appliances, and improvements, together with any and all such payments made of said purchase price, shall revert to and belong to said party of the first part without legal recourse by said party of the second part."

It is averred that said King entered into said contract with plaintiff as the representative of defendants and for them and as their agent, and he, said King, immediately after the execution of said contract, assigned and transferred all right therein and interest thereto to said defendants Hickey and Lamb; and they, said defendants Hickey and Lamb, thereupon entered into and upon said mine and commenced prospecting therein; that on May 18, 1907, defendants notified plaintiff of their exercise of the option to purchase said mine at the price of $36,000, payable to plaintiff in installments, at the times and in the amounts as in the said agreement specified, and on that day paid to plaintiff on account of said purchase price the sum of $10,000, and then demanded that plaintiff at once make and execute to them a deed of the said mine and deposit the same with the Bank of California, with instructions to hold said deed during the life of the agreement and to deliver the same to the defendants upon the payment made at said bank of the balance of said purchase price; that on said day, in response to said demand of defendants and in compliance with said agreement, plaintiff did make, execute and duly acknowledge a good and sufficient deed of said mine to defendants and deposit said deed with said bank with instructions to deliver the same to defendants upon the payment of the balance of said purchase price, as provided in said agreement, and said deed has ever since been and is now in and held by said bank under said instructions, ready for delivery to defendants upon the payment of the remainder of said purchase price; that upon said day plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement in writing supplementary to the agreement hereinbefore set forth, by which it was agreed that plaintiff should remove all incumbrances upon said mine on or before September 29, 1907, and that if all such incumbrances were not so removed the defendants should not be obligated to pay the second installment or any other installments until the title to said mine was clear of incumbrances, and it is averred that plaintiff did, prior to September 29th, cause to be removed from said premises all incumbrances and the title thereto was on that day and ever since has been and still is clear of all incumbrances. It is next averred that on May 18, 1907, defendants entered into full and sole possession of all of said mine, and commenced active mining operations therein, and so continued in the possession and the mining thereof, and during such mining operations extracted gold-bearing deposits therefrom of the value of upwards of $40,000, all of which defendants appropriated to their own use, and that upon August 29, 1907, defendants paid to plaintiff, upon said purchase price of said mine, the further sum of $6,500, and that no other payments on account of said purchase price have been made and there is unpaid the sum of $19,500. All the foregoing averments of the complaint are found by the court to be true, except it is found that the amount of gold extracted from the mine by defendants was $33,540.55, and in that connection the court found that defendants had expended the sum of $23,069.45. The date of the second payment is found to have been September 29th instead of August 29th, as averred and as provided by the said agreement.

It was further alleged and found by the court that defendants promised and agreed to pay plaintiff the said purchase price in installments of the amounts and at the times specified in said agreement of April 29, 1907; that subsequent to said date, at the request of defendants, plaintiff in writing extended the time for the payment of the third installment from December 29, 1907, to January 28, 1908, but defendants failed and refused to pay said sum on or before said January 28th, and have since refused to pay said sum or any part thereof. That defendants continued in sole possession of the mine and extracting gold-bearing deposits therefrom until January 28, 1908, at which date they suspended mining operations and notified plaintiff that they refused to pay said sum of $6,500, payable, as aforesaid, on January 28th, and refused to proceed with said agreement or to keep or perform its terms or to make plaintiff any further payments on account of the unpaid purchase price of said mining claim; that on said 28th day of January defendants suspended work, and attempted to surrender possession of the mining claim to plaintiff, claiming that they were relieved from any further payments on account of the purchase price agreed to be paid for said mine, but plaintiff refused to accept surrender of said mining property, and demanded that the defendants keep and perform their said agreement for the purchase of the said mine and to pay plaintiff the remaining portion of said purchase price, to wit, the sum of $19,500, which said sum or any part thereof defendants refused to pay; that plaintiff has fully kept and performed all the conditions of the agreement on his part, and, ever since the making of said agreement, has been able, ready, and willing, and is now ready, able, and willing, to cause delivery of said deed to be made to said defendants upon the payment to him of the purchase price of said mining property. It was also alleged in the complaint and found by the court that the said mine is a gravel mine operating through shafts, drifts, and tunnels run from the surface, and to prevent injury thereto it is necessary that the same be drained and kept drained, the tunnels and drifts to be timbered and kept timbered and in proper repair, and the mine drained and kept free from water, and that unless such care is given the said mine it will be destroyed, and great and irreparable injury and damages will be done thereto. The complaint also alleges that plaintiff has a lien upon the said property and the right to resort to the same in satisfaction of his said claims, and also avers that in order to preserve the said property a receiver should be appointed to take charge thereof. The court makes no findings upon these averments, and they seem not to have formed an issue in the case and need not be further noticed.

A general and special demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and defendants filed an amended answer denying many of the averments of the complaint, but admitting the execution by said King of the contract set forth in the complaint and its assignment to defendants; they aver that they took no part in the negotiations relating to the contract of purchase, and took possession only as the assignee of said King, "and with the understanding that the same was a bare option giving them the right to purchase the said property upon the payment of the purchase price as mentioned therein, and subject only to the condition that if the purchase price was not paid as therein provided that they should have to surrender the possession of the said property and forfeit all rights thereto and all payments theretofore made; and that they never, at any time, promised to pay any part of said purchase price or to become indebted to said plaintiff in any sum of money whatever." They also allege that they were led to believe by plaintiff himself that said contract was a mere option and contained no personal obligation to pay any part of said purchase price except as a condition of the getting of a deed, and then only at the option of the holder, and that plaintiff has always treated the same as a mere option. They deny that the said King entered into said contract as the representative of said defendants or either of them. They deny that they notified plaintiff of their exercise of the option to purchase said mine, and allege that they merely took possession of said property under the assignment of said contract and paid the sum of $10,000 in accordance with its terms. The court found the foregoing averments of the answer to be untrue. The answer sets forth the escrow agreement, and avers that the deed therein referred to was not to be regarded as the deed of plaintiff and was not to be delivered to defendants "unless they should exercise their option to pay the balance of said purchase price, and that said deed never was made or executed to these defendants, or either of them, and that it was always understood that the forfeiture provided in said contract was the only recourse which said plaintiff should have against these defendants, or either of them"; and upon this construction of the escrow agreement it is denied that plaintiff, in compliance with the demand of defendants, or either of them, executed the deed referred to in the complaint. This escrow agreement is dated May 18, 1907, executed by plaintiff, and recites the delivery to the bank of a grant, bargain, and sale deed by plaintiff and his wife to defendants, conveying certain property and mining claims therein described, and directing the bank to hold the deed in escrow under instructions calling for all of the various payments, excepting the first installment, at the dates as mentioned in said contract of purchase and sale, and, upon payment of the same, "You will deliver the said inclosed deed to said John J. Hickey and Charley Lamb or their assigns, upon their order." It recites also that these instructions were given pursuant to an agreement entered into between the plaintiff and King on April 29, 1907, which was thereafter assigned to defendants, and also in pursuance to the terms of a supplemental agreement of May 18th between plaintiff and defendants in which it is recited that plaintiff has covenanted to convey good title to said properties, and to have an abstract of title prepared by a law firm named on or before September 29, 1907; and it is provided that "if said abstractors should certify that the title to said property is clear in all respects and on or before the said 29th day of September, 1907, the said sum of $6,500 is not paid to my account, or if any of the other installments are not paid as hereinbefore provided, the said inclosed deed is to be redelivered to me at my request; if, however, said abstractors certify that the title to said property is not clear then said deed is to remain with your institution until a further order is made upon you, signed jointly by myself and John J. Hickey and Charley Lamb or their assigns." The court found against the defendants upon their averments as to the execution of the deed and the conditions upon which it was executed, as defendants alleged to have understood it, and found the escrow instructions to be as set forth above.

The answer denies that the supplementary agreement of May 18, 1907, was as set forth in the complaint, and avers that such supplementary agreement was entered into by plaintiff and defendant Hickey, and it is set forth in the answer. It recites the contract between plaintiff and said King; that King has assigned his right and interest therein to the party of the second part (John J. Hickey); that party of the second part has this day paid to the first party the sum of $10,000 in accordance with the terms and conditions of said agreement, and states that, "Whereas, the said party of the second part is desirous that all incumbrance of all kinds whatsoever shall be removed from the property and premises particularly described in the said agreement: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the payment of the sum of $10,000 as hereinbefore provided, the said party of the first part agrees to remove all of said incumbrances against the said Reed Drift mine in said annexed agreement particularly described, on or before the 29th day of September, 1907, the date of the payment of the second installment of said purchase price, and in the event that all of said incumbrances are not removed on or before the 29th day of September, 1907, then the said party of the second part hereto shall not be obligated to pay the said second installment on said date and shall not be required to pay said second installment or any future installment of said purchase price until the title to said herein described property and premises is absolutely clear of all incumbrances whatsoever." It is then averred in the answer that at the time of the execution of this supplementary agreement the plaintiff stated "that he would remove the incumbrances so that in case that said defendants exercised the option of making any future payment the property would be free and clear from such incumbrances, and promised that the option for making any future payments would be extended until such time as such incumbrances were removed, and to put the matter beyond question promised to put the same in writing, whereupon the said instrument was executed, and at the time that it was executed it was understood between all parties thereto that the same was not to add any condition whatever to the said original contract of said 29th day of April, 1907, set out in said complaint, but was merely to be an extension of the time within which said defendants might exercise the option to make any future payments, and in so far as the said instrument as written includes any further promise or condition, if it be construed to contain such, it was entered into by mutual mistake of said parties thereto, and was not intended to be such, and it was so understood by said plaintiff and said defendants, and it was never understood by any of the parties to said agreements that any of said payments should be binding upon said defendants or either of them, but that each payment was to be made or not at their option, and that said instrument last mentioned and said contract set out in said complaint were not intended to be a contract of purchase at all but merely an option, as aforesaid, and that said plaintiff during all of the negotiations pending the execution of said instruments led defendants and each of them to believe that the same was an option."

The finding of the court is squarely against the aforesaid averments as to the supplemental agreement and as to the understanding between the parties, and the court finds that there was no mutual or other mistake made by the parties in reference to said supplemental contract.

It is also averred in the answer that plaintiff was a lawyer, and defendants relied upon his knowledge of said matters and upon his said representations in respect to the construction to be placed upon said instruments and each of them. The court found that plaintiff was a lawyer but that it was not true as to the other of these averments.

The findings of the court have support in the evidence, from which it appeared: That said King was known by plaintiff and defendants to be a mining promoter, and that in obtaining the contract in question he was acting for defendants, who were partners in the enterprise, each acting for both, and was in fact to receive compensation for his services from both plaintiff and defendants. On April 21, 1907, King first spoke to plaintiff about having defendants in view as possible purchasers of the property, if sufficient time was given to prospect it, and plaintiff then gave King a written memorandum in which he stated: "If on next Friday, April 26, 1907, Joseph King, with a Mr. Lamb, will visit the Reed mine, that I will agree to sell the latter the said property at the agreed price of $36,000, and this offer to hold good for ten days after said Lamb appears upon the ground,"—to which was attached a further memorandum to the effect that if King effected a sale he would be "entitled to a commission of ten per cent. pro rata on payments of said purchase price as made." Some time before this King had met defendant Lamb at Stockton, and informed him of the property, and that plaintiff would give a 60-day option for prospecting. Lamb said he would see his partner (admittedly defendant Hickey), and a short time thereafter and prior to April 29, 1907, both defendants visited the mine and commenced prospecting. King and defendant had an understanding prior to the making of the contract of April 29th, as to its disposition when made, and King's compensation by defendants for obtaining it was agreed to, and was later reduced to writing, by which they were to pay him 5 per cent. on the purchase price of $36,000. It appeared that the day following the execution of the contract defendant Hickey made objection to certain words relating to the removal of machinery put upon the property by defendants, and they were erased. From the time defendants went upon the property, prior to April 29 and until May 18, 1907, they continued to investigate and prospect the mine at their own expense. During this time plaintiff was working the mine and had developed better paying gravel and was taking out from $1,000 to $2,000 per week which was known to defendants. Without waiting the 60 days given in the contract for prospecting the mine defendants informed plaintiff, on May 18th, that they held the contract and were "ready to do business." Hickey and King met at the office of defendants' attorney, Hancock, on May 18th, and plaintiff was present. Plaintiff testified that Hickey and Hancock said "they were ready to buy the mine—make the purchase. Mr. Hancock requested me to sign a deed. Mr. Hancock said the parties—that Mr. Hickey, before they would accept it, would expect a good title to the mine, and that he wanted time to prepare it, and that he would arrange it." The mine was incumbered at the time and defendants wanted the title cleared on or before the next payment. Mr. Hancock prepared the deed, the so-called supplementary agreement of May 18th to clear the property of debt and also the escrow instructions mentioned in the pleadings and plaintiff executed the documents as agreed upon, and he subsequently paid off the incumbrances and cleared up the title and deposited the abstract in the Bank of California, as required of him, showing the title to be clear. On May 18th, when the matters just mentioned were concluded, defendants paid the first installment of $10,000; plaintiff cleaned up his mill and workings, and surrendered full possession to defendants, who commenced at once mining operations at the point where plaintiff had been working, and, as shown by their books, defendant took out of the mine the sum found by the court ($33,540.55) and appropriated it to their own use; they continued working the mine, and on September 28, 1907, paid the second installment of the purchase price. The third installment fell due December 29, 1907, but at defendants' request an extension of the time in which to make this payment was given them and plaintiff and defendants entered into a written agreement extending the time to January 28, 1908, changing the paragraph of the original contract to read: "Third. Six thousand five hundred (6,500) dollars to be paid on or before the 28th day of January, 1908." On January 28, 1908, defendants notified plaintiff in writing in which they said: "We hereby give you notice that on this 28th day of December, 1907, we surrender and give up and do hereby deliver to you possession of your property," etc. Plaintiff replied, refusing to accept the surrender of the property and demanding payment of the unpaid amounts due. So far as appears, defendants at no time until January 28, 1908, claimed that they were holding the property under a mere option to purchase.

Respondent claims that the contract of April 29th was one of sale and purchase, and while it gave defendants an option for a definite time and specific purpose, to wit, 60 days in which to prospect and determine whether they would purchase, that upon the acceptance of the offer of sale thereby made to defendants, the payment by them of the first installment of the purchase price, entry into possession of the property after demand for the execution and delivery in escrow of a good and sufficient deed, it ceased to be a mere option, and became and continued to be a valid binding contract, obligatory according to its terms, upon both parties thereto, and that plaintiff, having fully performed on his part, has his action for the unpaid purchase price of his property. The judgment of the court was that plaintiff recover from defendants the sum of $19,500 and costs of suit, and that on payment thereof to plaintiff "defendants shall be entitled to have and receive from the Bank of California the deed placed with said bank in escrow by plaintiff as in the findings herein set forth." It seems to us free from doubt that the findings and judgment are fully sustained by the evidence and that respondent's view of the contract is correct.

Appellants contend that the contract was a continuing option which was renewed as each payment was made, and continued until the next payment. We cannot agree to this interpretation of the contract. By its terms the option was limited to 60 days, during which time the vendees had the right only to prospect the mine at a particular point, but any gold taken out was to belong to the vendor. When, however, the vendees became satisfied, as they appear to have been from the results of the vendor's working of the mine during the continuance of the option period, that they preferred to work the mine for profit rather than be confined to prospecting it, they changed their attitude as prospectors and became operators and workers of the mine; they ceased prospecting at the point designated; announced their intention to purchase; paid the first installment a month before it was due, after requiring the vendor to cease mining and to surrender full possession to them with the privilege of retaining all the gold mined by them; and the evidence is that $20,000 was taken out up to the time the second payment became due. It is unreasonable to suppose that the vendor intended, when he surrendered possession to the vendees, to permit them to appropriate all the gold they might mine, and yet not be obligated to make the payments agreed to be made. Under such a construction of the contract, the supplementary agreement, and the instructions as to the escrow, the vendees could have decided on September 28th not to take the mine, and without making the second payment could have retained the $20,000 taken out. We do not think that the contract compels or would reasonably warrant such a construction. The so-called supplemental agreement refers to the payments as to be made upon the "purchase price," and it provided that if the vendor failed to remove the incumbrances by a stated time the vendees should "not be obliged to pay the said second installment * * * or any future installment of said purchase price until the title to said described property and premises is absolutely clear of all incumbrances whatsoever." The implication here is very strong that the vendees would be and were obligated to pay the installments as they became due if the title was made clear. And they so acted when the second installment fell due. Of course, the vendor could have made the improvident contract contended for by the vendees, but we do not think he so intended or that the contract made by him can reasonably be so construed. The "agreed purchase price" was expressly mentioned as $36,000, based upon a 60-day option in which to prospect the mine, and the agreement was "to sell and convey the said Reed mine to second party, at any time within sixty days * * * upon payments and conditions as follows." Nowhere in these conditions is any mention of an option, but throughout the contract the payments to be made are upon the "purchase price." Before the 60 days expired the vendees availed themselves of the right to purchase, and there is nothing in the record to show that they did so merely as optionees with a continuing right to buy or not to buy as they might elect. Their entire conduct, as well as that of the vendor, shows that they were acting as purchasers.

Appellants speak of the contract as unilateral and for that reason not binding upon them to purchase. It does not follow that because plaintiff alone executed the contract it is not binding upon defendants. If the contract was an agreement to sell and not a mere option, as we think is true, and defendants went into possession and made payments under it, such acts were a sufficient acceptance of its terms, and defendants became bound by it. Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 53, 25 Pac. 249. Besides, defendants signed the so-called supplemental agreement; i. e., defendant Hickey signed it for defendants, which evidenced a further acceptance of the contract of April 29th. Appellants cite Gordon v. Swan, 43 Cal. 564, as decisive of their contention. We do not so understand that case. The contract there was for the sale of the entire stock of a corporation to defendants. The contract recited that the corporation was the owner of a vein of copper ore; that the first parties were desirous of selling their respective shares; that the parties of the second part (defendants) were "desirous of making improvements on the said mine, and erecting smelting works for the purpose of reducing the ores of said mine, and of eventually making a purchase of the shares of stock of the parties of the first part and of the mine, if the tests which they shall cause to be made prove satisfactory." The purchasers were to pay $50,000 at the end of six months from the date of the agreement and possession given, and similarly two further payments of $50,000 at intervals of six months, failing in which they were to forfeit their improvements made in and about the mine, and thereupon first parties were to take peaceable possession. The court said: "It cannot be claimed that it was the true import of the contract that this large sum of money was to be paid for a brief possession of the mine, or for the privilege of erecting furnaces and testing the value of the ore. * * * It seems to be clear, from the terms of the instrument, that the purchase should be at defendants' option. It recites that the defendants are desirous 'of eventually making a purchase of the shares of stock * * * and of the mine, if the tests which they shall cause to be made prove satisfactory.'" In that case the defendants had a comparatively brief time in which to make a large outlay of money for the purpose of testing the mine, and their only right was to go into possession for that purpose. It was not possible in this character of mine to do this at a profit or to work the mine for profit. Had they made their test and at the end of six months informed the vendors of their intention to purchase and had paid the first installment of $50,000, we would have had a case somewhat similar to the present one and the conclusion of the court might have been different.

Some suggestion is made by defendants that because of their breach of the contract they could not have enforced its specific performance and hence its mutuality was destroyed. We see no merit in this contention. Mutuality of contract does not require the same remedies under it. Defendants could not by their depriving themselves of the right to specific performance take from plaintiff his right to recover the unpaid amounts due under the contract. Where both are bound by the agreement either may pursue such remedies for its enforcement as are open to him and these need not be identical. Nor was plaintiff confined to his remedy of repossessing himself of his mine upon defendants' breach, and after defendants may have extracted a large quantity of gold from it to its possible exhaustion. Wilcoxon v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 Pac. 629, 52 Am. Rep. 310; Brickell v. Atlas Insurance Co., 10 Cal. App. 17, 101 Pac. 16.

Some alleged errors of law are called to our attention, but defendants say in their brief that "a decision on them favorable to appellants would be of but little avail should the court hold against appellants as to the construction of the agreement, for if it is held that the contract evidenced a promise to pay the balance of $19,500, such decision will end the case." For this reason "appellants do not seriously urge the objections."

DANIELSON v. SYKES. (L. A. 2,413.)

1. Easements (§ 17*)—Implication—Sale of Platted Land.

Where a tract is laid out into lots and streets, and lots are sold by reference to a map, the purchaser has a private easement in the streets opposite his lots, independent of their dedication to public use, and such easement is not confined to the street upon which the lot abuts and those leading therefrom to a public highway or place, so that where a private alley, shown on the plat, lay directly opposite plaintiff's lot on the opposite side of the street and led to a railroad right of way, and toward a beach, and had been used by plaintiff and others as a footpath, the alley was appurtenant to plaintiff's lot, and he could enjoin its obstruction, though it may never be used as a public way to the railroad depot.

2. Easements (§ 17*)—Private Way—Implication.

Where streets are laid out on the ground, but no map is made, and lots are sold upon representation that such streets exist, the purchaser's easement in the streets rests on equitable estoppel, not being based upon the grant, as where lots are sold with reference to a map.

3. Easements (§ 61*)—Obstruction—Injunction.

If an obstruction to a private easement is continuous, exclusive, and under a claim of right so that the easement will finally be destroyed by adverse possession, the obstruction will be enjoined, though it has caused no substantial damage.

4. Easements (§ 61*)—Obstruction—Injunction—Grounds of Relief—Inadequacy of Legal Remedy.

Where trespasses upon a private easement are continuous so that the current damage is small, equity will enjoin such trespasses on the ground that the legal remedy for damages is inadequate.

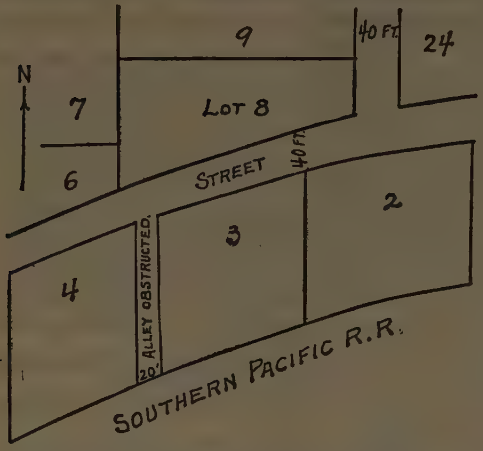
The plaintiff is the owner of lot 8 in a subdivision of land into lots and streets. Its situation with reference to the way in question, the streets, and the adjoining lots is shown by the following diagram:



The tract, comprising about 16 acres, was subdivided in 1893, and the lots were sold by the owner thereof to divers persons who have erected dwelling houses thereon. It constitutes a part of the seaside resort known as "Miramar" in Santa Barbara county. The plaintiff is in possession of lots 8 and 9, and occupies a house on lot 9, the two lots being used in connection with the house as a place of residence. The alley in question lies between lots 3 and 4 and is directly opposite to lot 8. It extends south to the south line of the tract, leading from the street in front of lot 8 to the track and right of way of the Southern Pacific railroad, not far from Miramar station. The defendant obtained from the successor of the original owner of the tract a conveyance of lot 4 and also of the ground included in the adjoining alley. Thereupon he built a fence across the northern end of the alley where it enters the street and has ever since maintained the fence and occupied the alley as a part of his premises, completely preventing the use of the alley by plaintiff or others as a way. The plaintiff began this action to enjoin the continuance of the obstruction. The findings state the facts aforesaid, but further state that the alley was of no use or benefit to the plaintiff, that its closing caused plaintiff no damage, and, hence, that she was not entitled to an injunction.

It is a thoroughly established proposition in this state that, when one lays out a tract of land into lots and streets and sells the lots by reference to a map which exhibits the lots and streets as they lie with relation to each other, the purchasers of such lots have a private easement in the streets opposite their respective lots, for ingress and egress and for any use proper to a private way, and that this private easement is entirely independent of the fact of dedication to public use, and is a private appurtenance to the lots, of which the owners cannot be divested except by due process of law. Kittle v. Pfeiffer, 22 Cal. 490; Petitpierre v. Maguire, 155 Cal. 250, 100 Pac. 690; Prescott v. Edwards, 117 Cal. 304, 49 Pac. 178, 59 Am. St. Rep. 186; Schaufele v. Doyle, 86 Cal. 109, 24 Pac. 834; Eachus v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 103 Cal. 617, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 122, 92 Pac. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; Williams v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 594, 89 Pac. 330; King v. Dugan, 150 Cal. 263, 88 Pac. 925; Archer v. Salines, 93 Cal. 49, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145; Grogan v. Haywards (C. C.) 4 Fed. 163; Gormley v. Clark, 134 U. S. 350, 10 Sup. Ct. 554, 33 L Ed. 909. It is claimed on behalf of the defendants that this private right of way is limited to the use necessary for ingress and egress and that it embraces only the street which abuts upon the particular lot in question and such other streets as may lead therefrom to some public highway or public place. There are decisions in other states which place these limits upon the private easements, and in section 247 of Jones on Easements the rule is so stated. The decisions in this state do not recognize such distinction, and we do not think it is founded in good reason.

When a lot conveyed by a deed is described by reference to a map, such map becomes a part of the deed. If the map exhibits streets and alleys, it necessarily implies or expresses a design that such passageways shall be used in connection with the lots, and for the convenience of the owners in going from each lot to any and all the other lots in the tract so laid off. The making and filing of such a plat duly signed and acknowledged by the owner, as was the case here, is equivalent to a declaration that such right is attached to each lot as an appurtenance. A subsequent deed for one of the lots, referring to the map for the description, carries such appurtenance as incident to the lot. Such we understand to be the true foundation for the rule first above stated. Where streets are laid out and exhibited on the ground and no map is made, but lots are sold upon the representation that such streets exist, the appurtenant right to use the streets is not expressed in the grant, and in such cases it is declared to rest upon the doctrine of equitable estoppel. Prescott v. Edwards, supra. If this implied grant is the foundation of the doctrine in question where the sale is by reference to a map, it is difficult to perceive any ground for a distinction which would limit the appurtenant way to the streets necessary for access to the outside world. It is obvious that the convenience of the use of the way over the side streets, as compared with those leading to general public highways, is merely a matter of degree, and that it does not affect the technical right. The decisions of other states, for the most part, make no such distinction. The cases which suggest or hold that no such appurtenance is given in side streets are those in which time had shown that the scheme of subdivision and settlement as a part of a town or village had failed, in whole or in part, or where the lots on the closed streets were unoccupied, and where such lots and interlying streets were used for agriculture or other purposes incompatible with use for dwellings or business, and which rendered such streets useless, or where the lot in question was so remote from the closed street that the damage was infinitesimal, and the remedy by injunction was considered inapplicable on the ground that the law does not regard trifles. The prevailing doctrine, however, seems to be that the technical right extends to all the streets, and that it will be enforced in equity with respect to all the streets which the particular lot owner has occasion to use, but that the closing of a remote street which can be of no material benefit to the particular lot in question will not in general be enjoined.

In the present case the alley lies directly opposite plaintiff's lot, it leads toward the ocean beach, and it gives access to the right of way and track of the railroad. This may or may not at the present time be open to the general public for passage to the station, but such passage may be allowed in the future, and in that event the alley would be more valuable to the lot. The defendant has no right to permanently close the alley because of any uncertainty on this point. The plaintiff is entitled to whatever benefit may exist from the prospect that such use may be permitted in the future. The evidence shows that it has been so used in the past.

There is a finding that the alley has not been used for passage to and from the streets of the tract, or the houses thereon, to or from said railroad right of way. This is contrary to the evidence. It appears without contradiction that it had been used by the plaintiff and others for passage on foot to such an extent that there was a path made which was distinctly visible. It is established by the findings and the evidence that the alley was of sufficient benefit to the plaintiff as a private appurtenance to the lot to support a complaint for an injunction to prevent its obstruction. The conclusion that it is of no use or benefit to plaintiff or to her land, and that its closure causes her no injury, is not sustained by the facts proven.

The rule is that if an obstruction to a private easement is continuous, exclusive, and under claim of right, so that it will eventually destroy the easement by adverse possession thereof, an injunction will be granted against such obstruction, although substantial damage has not yet been caused by the obstruction. In such a case the damage will be substantial when the adverse occupation has extinguished the right of way. This is sufficient to justify the injunction to prevent the continued occupation which would eventually operate to take a right in real property from the true owner. Mendelson v. McCabe, 144 Cal. 232, 77 Pac. 915, 103 Am. St. Rep. 78, and cases there cited. This case also decides that where such trespasses are of a continuing nature, and the damage for each day's obstruction is insignificant, the remedy of successive actions at law for such damages is inadequate, and equity will interpose by injunction.

The judgment and order are reversed.

Act March 20, 1874 (St. 1873–74, c. 345), prohibiting recovery of more than $5 for a sale of intoxicants at retail or by the drink, applies to both retail sales and sales by the drink.

2. STATUTES (§ 211*)—MARGINAL NOTES—EFFECT.

Marginal notes to sections of the original Codes, like the headnotes to the chapters, articles, and titles, are parts of the statute limiting and defining the sections to which they refer.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 329*)—CONSTRUCTION—REFERENCE TO OTHER STATUTES—"RETAIL."

In view of the classification of sales of intoxicants in less quantities than one quart as "retail" sales, by the marginal note to Pol. Code 1872, § 3381, which imposed a license tax on such sales, the Legislature is presumed to have intended that the same meaning be given the word "retail" in Act March 20, 1874 (St. 1873–74, c. 345), prohibiting recovery of more than $5 for a sale of intoxicants at retail.

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 23*)—REGULATION OF SALE—VALIDITY OF STATUTE.

Act March 20, 1874 (St. 1873–74, c. 345), prohibiting a recovery of more than $5 for a sale of intoxicants at retail or by the drink, can only be sustained as a regulation of the retail liquor business in the lawful exercise of the state's police power.

Court on plaintiff's appeal from the judgment. Modified and affirmed.

Wyckoff & Gardner and C. F. Lacey, for appellant. Geo. P. Burke and P. E. Zabala, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by plaintiff, who conducts a grocery and merchandise store in Watsonville, against defendant, to recover the balance due on a running account for goods sold to him for one Kitigawa. There was found to be due plaintiff on this account the sum of $323.10, which included items aggregating $54.30 for wines and whisky sold to defendant for Kitigawa. None of said wine or whisky was sold to be drunk on the store premises, and none of it was drunk there. It was sold in amounts of gallons and half gallons, being drawn from barrels into demijohns, and was all taken away from the premises in such demijohns by Kitigawa. The trial court, being of the opinion that a recovery for any greater amount than $5 for said liquor was prohibited by the act of the Legislature entitled, "An act to prohibit the collection of accounts for liquors sold at retail," approved March 20, 1874 (St. 1873–74, p. 509, c. 345), gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for $273.80. Plaintiff appealed from such judgment to the District Court of Appeal, and the appeal was subsequently transferred to this court for determination.

The only question involved is whether the act hereinbefore referred to includes such transactions as those above detailed. The act is as follows:

"Section 1. The purchase of, or the sale and delivery of any spirituous or malt liquors, wines, or cider, by retail, or by the drink, is hereby declared to be an invalid consideration for any promise to pay, or assumpsit of account therefor, when the amount of such account or demand exceeds five dollars.

"Sec. 2. No court shall, in any action at law, render judgment for a greater amount than five dollars, for the sale at retail, or by the drink, of any spirituous or malt liquors, wine, or cider, together with costs."

We cannot accede to the claim of learned counsel for plaintiff that the words "or by the drink" are to be taken simply as limiting the effect of the words "by retail" and "at retail" as used in the act. It is true, of course, that a sale by the drink is necessarily a sale "by retail," and that it was entirely unnecessary to specify sales "by the drink" if all sales at retail were intended to be included, for the provisions as to sales "at retail" necessarily included sales by the drink. But, if sales by the drink were the only sales intended to be included, why say anything at all about sales "at retail"? A provision as to sales "by the drink" would have sufficed. The theory that the intention was by the words "or by the drink" simply to explain what was meant by the words "by retail" is not consistent with the language used, and to that alone must we look for the intention of the Legislature. If there had been any such intention, it might have been indicated by a provision defining the word "retail" as used in the act, or even less artistically by the words "that is" in place of the word "or" before the words "by the drink." But we would be indulging in the merest surmise, unsupported by any language in the act or by any rule of statutory construction, if we concluded that the intention was as claimed by learned counsel. The act by its terms is clearly applicable to sales at "retail" and sales "by the drink," and we can attribute the presence of the latter words only to a superabundance of caution on the part of the legislators, who may have feared that some subtle distinction resulting in the exclusion of the vendor by the drink from the provisions of the act might be found between the two classes.

The remaining question is what was meant by the word "retail" as used in the act. It cannot well be disputed that the sales of liquor made by plaintiff were sales at "retail" within the ordinary and common acceptation of that term as applied to sales of merchandise generally. As to sales of intoxicating liquor, however, as said in Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 23, as a general rule the statutes have undertaken to regulate the distinction between the terms "retail" and "wholesale" by prescribing that sales of less than a given quantity should be considered sales at retail, and thus to give to the word "retail," as applied to the liquor traffic, a meaning generally accepted in the state. This distinction is usually to be found in acts imposing a license tax or regulating the business of liquor selling. We are of the opinion that at the time of the adoption of the act of March 20, 1874, the word "retail" as applied to the liquor traffic must be held to have acquired a fixed and definite meaning by reason of the statute relative to licenses to be obtained by persons engaged in the sale of spirituous, malt or fermented liquor or wine. Section 3381 of the Political Code, in the article devoted to the classification and amount of license taxes, provided that every person who sells such liquors or wines "in less quantities than one quart" must obtain a license, paying therefor an amount in proportion to the amount of sales. No license tax was imposed on vendors of such liquor in quantities of one quart or more except as they might fall within other provisions relating to merchants generally. As to such merchants the provision was absolute that no sale of liquors or wine could be made in less quantities than one quart. This section was a part of the original Political Code adopted in 1872. The marginal note to section 3381 contained in the original edition made and certified by the Code commissioners under authority from the Legislature was: "Retail liquor licenses." Transactions in such liquors were thus divided into two classes, to one of which, viz., sales in less quantities than one quart, the name of "retail" was given by the statute itself, for the marginal notes to the sections of the original Codes cannot be distinguished in principle from the head notes to the chapters, articles, and titles. As to these it has been held that they are parts of the statute limiting and defining the sections to which they refer, and that to refuse to give effect to them according to their import would be to make the law, not to administer it. Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 16, 16 Pac. 345; Barnes v. Jones, 51 Cal. 306; Keyes v. Cyrus, 100 Cal. 325, 34 Pac. 722, 38 Am. St. Rep. 296. We are satisfied that, under this classification, the word "retail" must be held to have such a definite and fixed meaning in relation to the liquor traffic, viz., as referring only to sales in quantities less than one quart, that it must be presumed to have been used by the Legislature with that meaning in the act under consideration. That the distinction is made in sections relating to license taxes does not assist defendant. The two statutes are in a sense in pari materia. The imposition of a license tax upon retail liquor dealers has always been considered a regulation of the business as well as a provision for revenue, and for that reason the license tax on such dealers has always been larger in amount than the tax imposed on the ordinary merchandise business. The act involved in this case was also in the nature of a regulation of the same business; the object being to prevent sales on credit by one engaged therein. It is only upon the theory that it was such a regulation enacted in the lawful exercise of the police power of the state that it can be upheld as a valid law at all. Thus we have two statutes regulating the sales of liquors at retail, the statute of 1872 regulating it by the imposition of a license tax and prescribing, at least for the purposes of such regulation, what shall constitute a sale at retail, and the statute of 1874 regulating the business of selling liquors by retail by prohibiting the collection of any amount exceeding $5 on any balance due on account of such sales. It is only reasonable to assume that the word "retail" was used in the later act as intended to include only such transactions as were intended to be regulated by the prior act. The cases of Beiser v. State of Georgia, 79 Ga. 329, 4 S. E. 257, and Roberson v. City of Lambertville, 38 N. J. Law, 71, sustain our conclusion in this regard.

In the cases relied on by learned counsel for defendant there does not appear to have been any statutory classification warranting a conclusion that the word "retail" was used other than in its ordinary and common acceptation.

The judgment is modified by adding to the amount recovered by plaintiff the sum of $49.30, and, as so modified, it is affirmed.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 278*)—RECORD.

The personal memoranda of the clerk of a court of record made in a book designated as "blotter," or "the rough minutes of the court," as orders of the court are announced, as a guide in entering the orders on the register of actions and in the minutes, are not an official record of the court, and an entry therein of an order is not an official record of the order, but the matter ordered remains a mere oral announcement, though the memoranda may sometimes be useful as evidence on a proper foundation being laid.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 215*)—"RENDITION."

Where findings are required, there can be no rendition of the judgment until they are filed, unless they are waived, and where they are waived or are not required, the entry of the decision in the minutes of the court is the rendition of the judgment.

3. JUDGMENT (§ 386*)—ENTRY—"TAKEN."

The word "taken," in Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a "judgment, order, or other proceeding, taken" against him through his mistake or excusable neglect, provided that application therefor is made within six months after the "judgment, order, or proceeding was taken," is used in the same sense as the words "rendered" or "rendition," when used with reference to a judgment, and while the word "rendered" is appropriate in reference to a judgment or decree, but not to a proceeding or order, the word "taken" is adopted as a term applicable to judgments, orders, and proceedings or either of them, and has relatively the same meaning as rendition.

4. TRIAL (§ 400*)—FINDINGS—AMENDMENT OF CONCLUSIONS OF LAW.

Where findings are filed which constitute the rendition of a judgment, and where the conclusions of law signed by the judge show what judgment is to be entered, the court retains power to change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment, and to enter a judgment different from that first announced, and such power continues until the entry of the judgment.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*)—DISTRIBUTION OF ESTATE—ORDER OF PARTIAL DISTRIBUTION—RELIEF—"TAKEN."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1661, authorizing the court, after hearing a petition for partial distribution, to order the same by first requiring the distributees to give a bond for a payment of their share of the debts, etc., an order for partial distribution must be prepared, approved, and signed by the judge after the hearing and granting of the petition therefor, and the signing and filing of a formal order is a taking thereof within section 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him, provided the application is made within a specified time.

6. Executors and Administrators (§ 315*)—Conformity to Findings—Modification of Conclusions of Law—Power of Court.

The rule that the court may change its conclusions of law after they are filed and render a different judgment from that first announced, applies to proceedings for a partial distribution of an estate of a decedent, and the court, after making an oral statement of its decision on a petition for partial distribution, may, before the decision is recorded and signed or filed, change it and render a different decision.

7. Judgment (§ 386*)—Vacation—Time for Application—Rendition of Judgment.

Where a party had no actual notice of a proceeding, nor any knowledge of judgment therein until it was filed, there should be some fixed manifestation of the judgment or proceeding before it can be considered as taken against him, within Code Civ. Proc. § 473 authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order if applying therefor within a specified time, so as to set the period of limitation in motion.

8. Judgment (§ 388*)—Vacation—Notice of Application.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him, provided the application is made within a reasonable time, etc., does not require that notice to the adverse party shall be given prior to the application, but only provides that the relief cannot be given until after notice, and where a party appears and moves the court for the relief within the time specified, and the court makes an order on the adverse party to show cause on a day fixed why the motion should not be granted, and the adverse party is duly notified thereof, the application is sufficient.

In Bank. Application for a writ of prohibition by William W. Brownell and others, against the Superior Court of Yolo County, to prevent the court from hearing an application to set aside an order for partial distribution of the estate of a decedent. Writ denied.

Hurst & Hurst and Alexander R. Baldwin, for petitioners. Harry L. Huston and Arthur C. Huston, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in prohibition to prevent the superior court from hearing an application by one Mabry McMahan, who alleges that he is a creditor of the estate, to set aside an order of partial distribution of the estate of Harriet V. Brownell, deceased, on the ground that it was taken against him through his mistake and excusable neglect. It is claimed that the application of McMahan was made after the expiration of the period of six months prescribed as a limitation thereto by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

1. The petition for partial distribution of the estate was made by Edward Earle Brownell and W. W. Brownell as devisees of the property. It was filed on March 4, 1909, and the hearing thereof was fixed for March 15, 1909. The 10-day notice by posting, required by the law, was duly given, and the matter came on regularly for hearing on the day fixed. No person appeared in opposition thereto, and after the usual ex parte proofs the court orally announced that the petition was granted, and the clerk made a memorandum to that effect. No order was prepared or signed at that time, and nothing further appears to have been done until March 23, 1909, when a paper purporting to be the order for partial distribution was filed in the cause. It was signed by the judge, and it purported to be an order made on March 15, 1909, closing in the usual form, thus: "Done in open court, and dated this fifteenth day of March, A. D. 1909." The order was on the same day (March 23d) entered in the minutes of the court. The memorandum of the clerk, to the effect that the petition was granted, was made in a book which the plaintiffs designate as "the rough minutes of the court," and which in the answer filed herein is styled a "blotter." There is no law providing for "rough minutes." The clerk doubtless finds it necessary, as orders are announced by the court, to make a memorandum thereof for his own guidance in entering the orders on the register of actions and in the minutes. These memoranda are often referred to as "rough minutes," but they do not constitute an official record of the court. They are sometimes useful as evidence, if the proper foundation is laid, but they have no inherent vitality or effect. We cannot regard this personal memorandum as in any sense a record of the court, or as an official record of any character. The application to vacate the order was not made, nor was any proceedings to that end begun, until September 21, 1909. If the six months' limitation began to run on March 15th, the application to vacate it was clearly too late, and the court had no authority to act upon it, except to dismiss it. Section 473 authorizes the court to relieve a party from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him; "provided that application therefor be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order or proceeding was taken." The question is, when was the decree of partial distribution "taken" within the meaning of this provision?

A somewhat similar question has arisen in this and other states, where a statute provides that an appeal may be taken within a stated time "after the rendition of the judgment." In this state the former practice act prescribed a period of one year. In Gray v. Palmer, 28 Cal. 416, the judgment was pronounced on April 6, 1861. It was drawn up, signed by the judge and filed on April 9, 1861, and was entered in the judgment book on June 17, 1861. An appeal taken on June 14, 1862, was held to be too late, on the ground that "there was a rendition of the judgment as early, at least, as the 9th of April," 1861, when the judgment was formulated, signed, and filed. In Peck v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 209, a final judgment in partition on confirmation of the report of referees was ordered on December 22, 1863, but it was not entered until July 25, 1864. An appeal was taken on July 8, 1865, less than one year after the entry but more than a year after the judgment was ordered. It was held that the order for judgment was equivalent to a rendition thereof and that the appeal was barred. Genella v. Relyea, 32 Cal. 159, was a case similar to Gray v. Palmer, supra, and it was decided the same way, the court saying, however, that the time for taking an appeal began to run at the time judgment was ordered, citing Peck v. Courtis, supra. Peck v. Courtis was followed in Wetherbee v. Dunn, 36 Cal. 252. In New York a writ of error could be taken within two years after the "rendering of the judgment." It was held in that state that the time began to run at the time the judgment was pronounced and not from the time of its entry and that a writ sued out after the judgment was thus rendered was barred. Fleet v. Youngs, 11 Wend. 522; Lee v. Tillotson, 4 Hill. 27. In Nevada, the same conclusion was reached, the court holding that an appeal could be taken after rendition and before entry. Cal. St. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 155; Kehoe v. Blethen, 10 Nev. 453. In Estate of Newman, 75 Cal. 213, 16 Pac. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146, and In re Cook, 77 Cal. 225, 17 Pac. 923, 19 Pac. 431, 1 L. R. A. 567, 11 Am. St. Rep. 267, it was decided that a judgment is binding on the parties and privies as soon as it is rendered and before it is entered. In Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 488, 26 Pac. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491, the following is laid down as the correct rule under the present Code: "Under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, whenever findings are required there can be no 'rendition of the judgment' until they are made and filed with the clerk. Findings of fact, however, are required only 'upon the trial of a question of fact,' and they may in all instances be waived. Wherever they are waived or are not required, the entry of its decision in the minutes of the court constitutes the 'rendition of the judgment' in the same manner as it did under the former system." See, also, San Joaquin etc., Co. v. West, 99 Cal. 347, 33 Pac. 928; First N. Bank v. Dusy, 110 Cal. 76, 42 Pac. 476, and Painter v. Painter, 113 Cal. 375, 45 Pac. 689, approving this rule.

The word "taken," as used in section 473, is, as we think, used in the same sense as the words "render" or "rendition," when used with reference to a judgment. The word "rendered" is appropriately used in reference to a judgment or decree, but not to a proceeding or order. The phrase in question embraced judgments, orders, and proceedings, and the word "taken" was adopted as a term alike applicable to either or all of them, and having relatively the same meaning as "rendition."

But giving full force to the proposition that the order of partial distribution of the estate of Brownell is to be considered as having been "taken" when entered on the minutes, we cannot perceive how this can aid the plaintiffs here. The entry in the so-called "rough minutes" was, as we have seen, no official record of the order for judgment. The matter ordered still remained a mere oral announcement. Where findings are filed, which constitute the rendition of a judgment, and where, of course, the conclusions of law signed by the judge show what judgment is to be entered, it has been repeatedly held that the court retains power to amend or change the conclusions of law so as to point to a different judgment and to enter a judgment different from that first announced, and that this power continues until the entry of the judgment. Condee v. Barton, 62 Cal. 1; Crim v. Kessing, supra; Broder v. Conklin, 98 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 211; Brady v. Burke, 90 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 52; First N. Bank v. Dusy, supra; O'Brien v. O'Brien, 124 Cal. 426, 57 Pac. 225. In the Brownell Estate there was no record of any decision or judgment given by the court, until the filing of the signed order on March 23d. The Code provides that after the hearing of a petition for partial distribution, if the necessary facts are shown, the court must make an order requiring of the distributees a bond for the payment of their share of the debts, and directing that the distribution prayed for be made when such bond has been given and approved by the court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1661. The signed order recites that the bond required had been given and approved, and it directed the distribution positively and without any condition precedent. The order must therefore have been prepared, approved, and signed by the judge at some time after the hearing and granting of the petition. Under the rule stated in Crim v. Kessing, supra, findings not being here required, the order would not be "taken" until it was in some manner entered in the minutes of the court, and here there was no such entry until the formal order or decree was entered at length in the minutes. We think that rule should perhaps be modified in cases like the one at bar so that the signing and filing of the formal order would constitute a "taking" thereof so far as an application for relief under section 473 is concerned. But as it was not signed and filed until March 23d, an application to vacate it would be in time if made within six months from that date. Furthermore, the rule that the court may change its conclusions of law, after they are filed, and render a different judgment from that first announced would seem to be equally applicable here. No findings being required, and the court having merely made an oral statement of its decision, it might, before that decision was recorded, or signed and filed, change it in any respect and render a different decision. Whether or not it could by such change affect things done by the parties under the order as first announced, and before any change was made and announced, is a question not here involved. Nor are we concerned with the effect of an announcement of a decision or order against one who was then present. The party here seeking relief was not present, and he had no actual notice or knowledge of the proceeding, nor any knowledge of the order until it was filed. As to such a party there should be some fixed manifestation of the order or proceeding before it can be considered as "taken" against him, so as to set the period of limitation in motion. We perceive in this no hardship upon the parties in whose favor the order, judgment, or proceeding is taken. They have it in their power to set the time running by procuring the appropriate entry to be made. Our conclusion is that the time began to run on March 23d and not before.

2. The plaintiff further contends that the application of McMahan for relief was not made on September 21st, nor until after the period of six months from March 23, 1909, had expired. This contention cannot be upheld. On September 21, 1909, while the court was in session, McMahan appeared, and formally moved the court to set aside the order of partial distribution, stating at length the ground of the motion and filing affidavits in support thereof. Thereupon the court made an order that the motion be heard on October 4, 1909, and requiring the persons to whom distribution was made, naming them, and all others interested, to appear at that time and show cause why the motion should not be granted. On the same day the distributees and the executor were served with a copy of the order and a notice that the motion would be pressed to a hearing on October 4, 1909. This was a sufficient application within the time limited. Section 473 provides, in effect, that the relief therein specified may not be given until after notice to the adverse party, but it does not provide that no application for the relief can be made to the court until after such notice has been given. If it did require this, since five days' notice must be given, the effect would be to reduce the six months' period by five days. It is the application which is to be made within the six months. A motion is an application for an order.

The letter as well as the spirit of the law is fulfilled where the party appears and moves the court for the relief within that period, and thereupon the court makes an order on the adverse parties to show cause on a day fixed why the motion should not be granted, and they are duly notified thereof. There is no decision of this court contrary to this. Spencer v. Branham, 109 Cal. 336, 41 Pac. 1095, was a proceeding in a justice court, and no application was made to the court within the time limited. A written statement of the motion to be made was handed to the justice while he was engaged in other occupations and was not doing judicial work nor in session as a court. In Thomas v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 629, 92 Pac. 739, the only thing done within the six months was to serve a notice on the adverse party and file it in the clerk's office. This was not in any sense an application to the court. It was merely a notice that at a future time, beyond the six months allowed, such an application would be made. This was not sufficient. "The attention of the court must be called to it and the court moved to grant it." People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 650. This was done by McMahan, in the present case; the grounds were fully stated, and the action of the court invoked; and we hold that to be a sufficient making of the application within the meaning of the Code.

It follows that the court had jurisdiction to entertain and decide the application on its merits, and that prohibition will not lie.

BURNS v. CASEY et al. (Civ. 634.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Proceedings leading to the assessment and taxation of property for special purposes, as distinguished from those general burdens necessarily imposed alike upon all property for support of state and municipal governments, are in invitum, and, to validate the tax thereby imposed, the law authorizing such proceeding must be strictly followed.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 444*)—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—COMPLIANCE WITH LAW.

Laws authorizing assessments for special municipal purposes are not to be so strictly construed as to render them practically nugatory, but a substantial compliance with their provisions is sufficient so long as property owners and bidders for the work are given such notice, in required form, of the proposed improvement as will give them fairly accurate knowledge of its character and extent, and of a reasonable approximation of the detail and total cost thereof, and in such case, if the work has been well performed, the assessment will not be nullified merely because of the omission by the authorities to observe some immaterial technical requirements of the law by the provisions of which alone the work is authorized.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 284*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.

Committing to the street superintendent's judgment or volition the determination whether, according to the condition of the earth, "crushed rock" or "selected earth material" should be used in the preparation of the foundation for a street improvement, was only a reasonable and necessary discretion to vest in him, since the determination thereof necessitated investigation to ascertain whether the soil was naturally soft or yielding so as to require crushed rock or selected earth material according as to the extent of that quality which it possessed, or whether it was naturally sufficiently compact in itself to require neither of such materials, and a provision in the specifications, giving the superintendent such authority, was not on its face a delegation of an unauthorized power to determine the cost of the improvement, fatal to the assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 571*)—ASSESSMENTS—REVIEW—EVIDENCE.

On appeal in a suit to foreclose a lien for an assessment for a street improvement, the contention that the specifications for the improvement amounted to the delegation of an unauthorized power to the street superintendent to decide whether crushed rock or selected earth material should be used as a foundation, and hence to determine the cost of the improvement, cannot be considered where the record does not contain the evidence, so that there is no showing of any material difference in cost between the two materials between which the superintendent was authorized to select, since while, as an abstract proposition, crushed rock would be more expensive than ordinary earth material for the use intended, yet the cost of the use of selected earth material that would as well serve the purposes of a foundation, as would crushed rock, might, on account of the expense of discovering and selecting it, the price to be paid, if it had to be purchased, and the possible transportation expenses, be such that it cannot be said as a matter of law that any difference in price would exist.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 571.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 284*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.

A provision in the specifications requiring that the street be brought to a smooth and even surface by excavating the space above grade and filling the depressions with "suitable earth material," cannot be said to be objectionable as uncertain and as giving the street superintendent such unauthorized power, as to enable him to cause the cost of the improvement to exceed that provided for, in the absence of evidence showing that positive injury has in fact resulted therefrom, it being no more uncertain on its face than if the term "earth material" had been used.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

7. EVIDENCE (§ 18*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE—COST OF BUILDING MATERIALS.

Judicial notice cannot be taken of the fact, if such, that there is a difference in cost of cobbles, trap, and basalt as material for the crushed rock foundation of a street.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 284*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.

A provision in specifications for a street improvement which minutely describes a catch-basin, both as to size and materials to be used, cannot, in the absence of evidence showing positive injury to have actually resulted therefrom, be held insufficient as delegating power to the street superintendent to fix the cost of the improvement, because it fails definitely to fix the point at which the catch-basin should be located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 304*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.

Specifications for such improvement need not specifically locate the line of the curbs and gutters, it being common knowledge that they must be placed at one of the edges of the street fixed by official survey.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 811–816; Dec. Dig. § 304.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 284*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF SPECIFICATIONS.

Specifications providing that if the mixing of concrete should be done by hand a certain method should be pursued, but if a machine should be used it should be of a standard approved type and the concrete so mixed, be at least equivalent to that mixed by hand as therein specified, cannot be held, in the absence of a showing that positive injury has in fact resulted therefrom, to give to the street superintendent, the discretion to decide which of two methods of mixing the concrete should be adopted, but must be held merely to call for a certain standard of concrete, and to expressly provide that such must be the standard whether mixed by hand or by machine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 284.*]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 445*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS — SPECIFICATIONS — FINALITY OF CITY SURVEYOR'S CONSTRUCTION.

While a provision of the specifications, that in case of a misunderstanding as to the meaning of any provision thereof the interpretation of the city surveyor shall be final, was invalid, the Vrooman street law, under which the work was done (St. 1905, c. 67), not providing or contemplating that such power should be exercised by an officer or agent of the property owners, yet when assuming that the surveyor could by the exercise of such power, have increased or diminished the cost of the work below or above that provided for by the resolution, there is no showing that any attempt was made on his part to exercise such power, nor that occasion arose calling for its exercise, the assessment for the improvement will not be invalidated because of such provision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Action by T. M. Burns against Frank J. Casey and others. Decree for plaintiff, and the mentioned defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Shinn, C. G. Shinn, and Carl L. Shinn, for appellant. White, Miller & McLaughlin, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a suit for the foreclosure of a lien arising upon an assessment of the property of the appellant, situated in the city of Sacramento, for the improvement of the street upon which said property abuts. A decree foreclosing said lien and authorizing the sale of said property for the satisfaction of the said assessment, costs, etc., was entered, and this appeal is brought here by the defendant, Casey, from the judgment, unaccompanied either by a bill of exceptions or the evidence in any form. The legality of the assessment is challenged upon the alleged ground that the board of trustees of the city of Sacramento never acquired jurisdiction to order the work to be done. This contention is founded upon an alleged insufficient description in the resolution of intention of the proposed improvement—that is, that with regard to the description of the work to be done, there were material defects in the specifications, which were made a part of the resolution of intention. Section 3 of the so-called "Vrooman street law" (St. 1905, p. 64) provides: "Before ordering any work done or improvement made which is authorized by section 2 of this act, the city council shall pass a resolution of intention so to do and describing the work."

The following are the alleged fatal defects in the specifications upon which we are asked to render a judgment invalidating the assessment:

(1) "Curbs, gutters, and round corners are to be constructed of concrete in accordance with plans attached, and in the following manner: A proper foundation shall be prepared by thoroughly tamping the earth upon which they are to rest, and if necessary, in soft or yielding ground, crushed rock or selected earth material shall be deposited upon the foundation and thoroughly compacted."

(2) "The street shall be brought to a smooth and even surface conforming to the required cross-section of the subgrade by excavating all places above grade and filling the depression with suitable earth material."

(3) "The crushed rock shall be of the harder quality of cobbles, basalt, or trap, free from loam, clay, or shale."

(4) "The rock used in concrete must be of the harder quality of cobbles, basalt, or trap, free from loam, clay, or shale or other inferior material."

(5) "A concrete catch-basin not exceeding five (5) feet in depth will be constructed at a point to be designated by the city surveyor."

(6) "If the mixing is done by hand, the sand and cement must be carefully measured and thoroughly mixed while dry upon a tight platform, after which, sufficient water applied in a spray will be added during subsequent mixing to convert it into a uniform stiff mortar. Then to the required amount of broken rock evenly spread upon a platform and thoroughly drenched with water, the mortar shall be added, and the whole mass turned over at least three (3) times with shovels when every piece of rock shall be completely coated with mortar.

"If a machine is used for mixing it must be of a standard and approved type and the concrete so mixed shall be at least equivalent to that mixed by hand as above described."

The general objection to all those parts of the specifications complained of here is that they are so indefinite and uncertain in certain particulars that they necessarily vest in the superintendent of streets an inordinate and unwarranted amount of discretion as to the character or nature of certain materials with which the street was to be improved. as well as to the manner in which portions of the work were to be done. It is just as well in the beginning to declare it to be our judgment that not a single one of the objections to the assessment urged here possesses substantial merit.

It is, of course, well settled and well understood that proceedings leading to the assessment and taxation of property for special purposes, as contradistinguished from those general burdens necessarily imposed alike upon all property for the support of state and municipal governments, are in invitum, and, in order to validate a tax imposed for special purposes, the law authorizing such proceedings must be strictly followed. But the laws authorizing assessments for special purposes—for the improvement of streets, building of sidewalks and sewers, and other like improvements necessary to the comfort and welfare of inhabitants of local communities—are not supposed to be so "strictly" construed as to render them, practically, nonsensical and nugatory. A substantial compliance with their provisions ought to be all that should be required, by which we are to be understood as meaning that, where property owners and bidders for the work have been given such notice, in form required by law, of the proposed improvement as will put them in possession of fairly accurate knowledge of the character and extent of the work to be done and of a reasonable approximation of the detailed and total cost of the improvement, and the work has been well performed, then in that case no assessment ought to be nullified and the contractor thus forced to suffer a heavy loss, or perhaps made a bankrupt, merely because of the omission by the authorities to observe some immaterial technical requirements of the law by whose provisions alone the work is authorized.

The specific criticism involved in the first objection here is that there is delegated by the board of trustees to the superintendent of streets the power of determining what should constitute a "proper foundation" for the curb, gutters, and round corners, and, further, that that official is also invested with the discretion of deciding whether there should be used in the preparation of said foundation "crushed rock" or "selected earth material." The contention is that the street superintendent was thus given power, by the exercise of which he was able to increase or diminish the cost of the work at his will.

We do not so read that portion of the specifications objected to. It is first therein specifically provided how and in what manner such foundation should be prepared in order to constitute it the "proper foundation" contemplated and provided for by said portion of the specifications. As seen, the language is: "A proper foundation shall be prepared by tamping the earth upon which they (curbs, gutters and round corners) are to rest," etc., and thus far the description of the work to be performed is about as definite and specific as language could make it. What clearer terms in the English language could be employed to prescribe to the contractor the absolute duty of so tamping and thus hardening the earth as to make the foundation stable and durable? And that is all that that part of the specifications called for, and we do not see that it could have called for either less or more. As to the second point under the first objection, that to the street superintendent unauthorized power, fatal to the assessment, was delegated by committing to his judgment or volition the determination whether, according as he found the condition of the earth, "crushed rock" or "selected earth material" should be used in the preparation of the foundation one answer is, and we think it is conclusive, that, the evidence not having been brought up, there is no showing here that there was any material difference in the cost between the two kinds of materials from which the superintendent was authorized to exercise a selection. Besides, we think that, in any event, it was not only a reasonable, but a necessary, discretion to vest in the street superintendent. To determine whether the ground or earth upon which the foundation was to be laid was "soft or yielding" required investigation, as by digging into the soil a sufficient depth to ascertain whether it was naturally "soft or yielding," thus requiring crushed rock or selected earth material, according as to the degree or extent of that quality it possessed, or whether it was naturally sufficiently compact in itself to require neither crushed rock nor selected earth material.

In McCaleb v. Dreyfus, 103 Pac. 924—the latest expression of the Supreme Court involving an interpretation of the provisions of our street law—it is said: "In awarding a contract for street work it is quite apparent since the surface of the ground is exposed, that there may be an accurate predetermination of the amount and character of material to be used. It is unnecessary, therefore, to delegate any discretion in this matter to the street superintendent. Such was the condition in Perine v. City of Pasadena, 116 Cal. 6, 47 Pac. 777 (a street work case), where the specifications required that 'the contractor shall put in such extra concrete as the superintendent of streets and the city engineer may require, and in such places and in such form as they may designate.' It was easily susceptible of predetermination upon the part of the council whether any extra concrete was required at all, and, if so, the quantity and the place of use. This delegation, therefore, was held to be unreasonable. But where, as here, the work is the construction of a sewer, involving, first, the digging of the trench, and, second, the placing of the sewer upon a durable foundation, it is apparent, that but one of three courses can be pursued in the letting of the contract." The court then proceeds to point out three different methods by which a contract for the building of a sewer may be let, and showing that the better course for the owners of property affected by the assessment is that objected to in that case, where the challenged specifications read: "If, in the judgment of the city engineer, it shall be necessary to form any portion of said foundation (of the sewer) of concrete, said concrete shall be paid for as extra work at the price per cubic yard mentioned in the contract." The court further said in that case, and it is equally true as to the objection we are considering here: "Indisputably, the determination as to whether or not a concrete foundation would be necessary must be vested in some one. Indisputably, also, the proper person to determine this was not the contractor, but the street superintendent or city engineer." As stated, and as is plainly obvious, the question whether the earth upon and in which the foundation for the gutters, curbs, and round corners was to be laid was naturally of sufficient compactness and strength to be suitable for that purpose was not one which could, upon a mere inspection of the surface, be determined, and was not, therefore, subject to predetermination by the city council.

There is a wide distinction between the case here and the case of Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 250, 38 Pac. 881, 45 Am. St. Rep. 33. In the latter case the contract expressly vested in the street superintendent the power of authorizing, for the construction of a "five-foot brick sewer," payment at the rate of either $9.83 per lineal foot or $12.78 per lineal foot, according as that official might determine what the nature of the foundation should be. Readily it is thus to be noticed that the governing board in that case conferred upon the superintendent of streets discretionary power which enabled him to exercise his own volition with regard to the cost of the improvement. Manifestly, the board exceeded its authority when so delegating to the street superintendent such power, and the assessment was, of course, held to be void by reason thereof. In the case here there is absolutely nothing in the specifications which, in express terms, authorizes the street superintendent to either increase or decrease the price for laying the foundation for the curbs, gutters, etc., nor, as we have before stated, is there anything on the face of the contract itself dealing with gutters, curbs, etc., from which it can be said that the preparation of the foundation would cost more by the use of crushed rock for that purpose than by the use of "selected earth material," or vice versa. Whether there would be any material difference between the cost of one and that of the other would largely depend, it seems to us, upon conditions existing with respect to the accessibility of either the one or other of these materials. It is safe to say that it is known, as an abstract proposition within the scope of common knowledge, that crushed rock would be much more expensive than ordinary earth material for use in the preparation of a foundation for curbs, etc. But by the phrase "selected earth material" we understand is meant that that quality of earth must be used which would as well serve the purposes of a foundation as would crushed rock, and the difficulty in the way of a predetermination of the difference in the cost between the two materials, if any, would be the expense, first, incident to discovering and selecting the earth material which would meet the test under that description, then the price to be paid for it, if it had to be purchased, and furthermore, if the point at which such material was procurable were remotely situated from the point at which it was to be used for the foundation, what would be the expense of transporting it to said last-mentioned point.

In Lambert v. Marcuse, 137 Cal. 47, 69 Pac. 620, where the specifications called for the construction of a stone and grouted gutters from rock of either of two classes, as classified by the ordinance authorizing the work, designated as "class A" and "class B," and where the claim was that thus an unwarranted discretion was vested in the street superintendent to use the rock of either class, it is said: "The option was given to the contractor to use either class A or class B rock. The material to be used was macadamizing rock, and the difference between the two classes was not in the material, but in the density, or hardness, of the rock. But whether there was any difference in the cost does not appear, and we cannot say, as a matter of law, that there was any such difference. The difference in the cost may, by reason of the situation of the rock in place, or the cost of quarrying of the two kinds, be practically equalized, so that it would become a matter of indifference to everybody concerned which class was used."

The foregoing language has peculiar application to the portion of the specifications now under review, for, as we have tried to show, if, abstractly, it may be said that crushed rock is more expensive than selected earth material, the use of the latter might, for reasons which we have suggested, and perhaps others which have not occurred to us, be as expensive and therefore cost as much as crushed rock, and thus the difference in the expense of the two materials at least approximately equalized so that there would be no material difference in the cost between the two. At any rate, we cannot say, as a matter of law or as a matter of fact, in the absence of an affirmative showing that there was any material difference between the cost of crushed rock and that of "selected earth material," that any such difference existed or would exist.

The objection that the provision requiring that the street shall be brought to a smooth and even surface by " * * * excavating the places above grade and filling the depressions with suitable earth material" is mortally uncertain, is too hypercritical to merit extended notice. The vice of that portion of the specifications, it is said, is in the use of the language we have italicized, and it is contended that thereby the street superintendent is given such unauthorized and dangerous power as to enable him to cause the cost to exceed that provided for by the resolution. A provision that the depressions should be filled with "earth material" would probably have attracted no comment or excited no criticism by appellant, as it would have been sufficient to describe the material to be used with substantial and satisfactory accuracy. Under such a description it certainly could not be said that anything less than suitable earth material was intended to be used. We are, therefore, unable to discern how or in what way the provision is made any less certain by the addition of the word "suitable."

What we have said with regard to the objection first considered applies with equal pertinency and force to the third and fourth points stated in the order in which we have here presented them. We cannot take judicial notice of the fact, if it be a fact, that there is any difference in the cost of the three several kinds of material out of which the crushed rock for the macadam and the rock used in concrete were to be formed. In fact, it would seem that there could in fact be no material difference in the cost between cobbles, trap, and basalt, except possibly in the fact that the one might be the more readily accessible or procurable than the others in a sufficient quantity to do the work.

In the case of Lambert v. Cummings, 2 Cal. App. 643, 84 Pac. 266, cited by appellant, the specifications for macadamizing and guttering certain streets in the town of Berkeley prescribed that the macadam should be formed out of one of three classes of rock, of which two classes only (classes A and B) were described with sufficient clearness and definiteness to convey approximately precise information as to the character of the material to be used in the work. The resolution, however, provided that the rock designated as class C should be such rock as might be approved by the board of trustees upon a sample presented to said board for that purpose. Under such a provision it was within the power of the board to require the macadam to be made out of any kind of rock submitted for its inspection and approval, whether it was rock coming within class A or B, which classes, as seen, were defined and described in the specifications, or an entirely different character of rock from that of either class A or class B. The court in that case well said: "It is at once evident that a contractor bidding for the work must have done so upon the probability of being compelled to use the most expensive rock for macadamizing, unless he had been assured in some way by some private arrangement that he might use other or different rock. The board were thus enabled to favor one contractor and discriminate against another. * * * A resolution of intention, followed by a notice of letting a contract to macadamize a certain street with such rock as may be approved by the board of trustees, does not describe the work to be done. The contractor may be required to use marble or soft sandstone or cobbles."

It will be observed that the power vested in the board in the cited case by the language of that provision of the specifications designating "class C" made the descriptions of classes A and B, otherwise clear and definite, equally as indefinite and uncertain as class C itself. But, as seen, the specifications here specifically describe the rock from which the macadam and the concrete should be made, and do not, as in the case cited, leave to the governing board the right to finally determine whether either of the kinds of rock described should be used, or, disregarding altogether the rock described, that some other and different kind of rock, of which there was no description whatever in the specifications, may be used.

In Lambert v. Marcuse, supra, where, as seen, the street superintendent was clothed with the power to select, in the construction of gutters, from two classes of rock, the Supreme Court, affirming the judgment for plaintiff in an action to foreclose the assessment, says: "The contract gave the superintendent no power to change the material, nor did it give him any discretion to require material not provided for in the contract and in the specifications." So it is true here. Some discretion in street or sewer or like work must be left to the street superintendent or officer to whom is committed the superintendence of such work, or else all improvements contemplated by the street law must be at an end, and where it does not appear as a matter of law or of fact, as it does not appear here, that the exercise of such discretion will result in either materially increasing or decreasing the cost of the proposed improvement beyond or below that contemplated by the contract, a judgment invalidating the assessment because of the delegation of such discretion would not only be inequitable and unjust but unconscionable.

The cases of Perine Cont., etc., Co. v. Pasadena, 116 Cal. 6, 47 Pac. 777; Fay v. Reed, 128 Cal. 360, 60 Pac. 927; Bay Rock Co. v. Bell, 133 Cal. 150, 65 Pac. 299; McDonnell v. Gillon, 134 Cal. 332, 66 Pac. 314; and Williamson v. Joyce, 137 Cal. 107, 69 Pac. 854,—are cited by appellant in support of the alleged invalidity of the assessment because of the objections now under discussion; but an examination of these cases will disclose an obvious distinction, as to the facts, between them and the case at bar. It is unnecessary to give them special attention in this opinion. It is enough to say that in those cases there was vested, by reason of an insufficient and indefinite description of the work to be done, in the officer charged with the immediate direction or superintendence of the work a discretion by the exercise of which the cost of the improvement could have been increased or diminished at his will. As stated, such is not the case here.

The fifth objection challenges the validity of the specifications upon the ground that they fail to definitely fix the point at which "a concrete catch-basin" should be located, the exact point of location of said basin being left to the judgment of the city surveyor. In this connection, appellant points out that the specifications do not provide for the location of the curbs, gutters, and gutter drains, and contends that for this reason also the specifications are fatally defective. In support of these objections we are referred to the case of Grant v. Barber, 135 Cal. 188, 67 Pac. 127, supra. There the specifications, which were, as here, made part of the resolution of intention, provided that the contractor "shall put in such culverts as the street superintendent may direct," there being no description of such culverts, either as to size or the material from which they should be constructed. Such discretion or power thus delegated to the street superintendent was out of all reason, and the act of the governing board in delegating it manifestly ultra vires, or beyond their authority.

In the case at bar the catch-basin and curbs, gutters, and gutter drains are minutely described, both with regard to size and the character of the materials of which they were to be made, and, as to the catch-basin, it is to be said that the power given the street superintendent merely to determine the particular point at which it should be located on the street, was perhaps only that power which it was found necessary that he should exercise in order to properly locate it. In any event, it does not appear here (and we do not see how it could be made so to appear) that the location of the basin at any particular point would increase or diminish its cost over or below that which would be involved in its location at some other point. As stated, the size and the material from which it was to be made were specified, and, obviously, its cost readily ascertainable therefrom. As to the claim that the specifications are uncertain in that the line of the curbs, gutters, etc., is not specifically located or pointed out, the reply is that there was no necessity for specifically describing so obvious a proposition. Common knowledge tells us that curbs must be placed at one of the edges of the street, and, thus, as the Century Dictionary tells us, they form the inner side of a gutter. As counsel for respondent well suggest in their brief: "The edges of the street being established by official surveys, it is impossible to understand how any doubt could arise as to the location of the curbs, and the position of the curbs being thus fixed, the plans, as a part of the resolution, fix the position of the gutter and the gutter drains." In other words, the exact location of the curbs, gutters, and gutter drains, as contemplated by the specifications here, is as easily ascertainable from said specifications as if the same were specifically described, or as would be the location of the foundation of a building with reference to the superstructure.

The remaining objection to be considered involves that part of the specifications providing for the character of the concrete to be used, and the contention is that the street superintendent is therein given the discretion to decide which of two methods may be adopted for the purpose of mixing the sand and cement to be used in forming the concrete. This contention cannot be sustained. All that the specifications call for in this respect is a certain standard of concrete, and they expressly provide that such must be the standard, whether the mixing is done by hand or by a machine. While, under the terms of the specifications, the contractor was at liberty to mix the sand and cement either by hand or by means of a machine, there is no language to be found therein which authorized the street superintendent to dictate to the contractor the adoption of either method. The evident purpose of this part of the specifications was to secure concrete of a certain approved standard, regardless of the means to which the contractor might deem it the better plan to resort in order to furnish the kind of concrete required.

There is a further objection raised against the assessment based on that provision of the specifications which reads: "In case of a misunderstanding or dispute as to the meaning or intent of any provision of these specifications, the interpretation of the city surveyor shall be final."

While it is the paramount duty of the street superintendent, or the city surveyor, or any officer who may be legally charged with the responsibility of superintending the work, to require the work to be done in accordance with the terms of the contract or the specifications, the street law does not provide nor does it contemplate that such power as is thus sought to be delegated should be exercised by an officer or agent of the city or the property owners, and if it did so provide, the act to that extent would no doubt be held to be in violation of the Constitution. There is a wide distinction between the power of one selected as an arbitrator to pass upon the proposition whether the work has been done according to the specifications and the power sought to be conferred here by which the decision of the city surveyor as to disputes involving the "meaning or intent" of the specifications is made final and conclusive, thus opening the way for adjudications which do not constitute that "due process of law" by which citizens can alone be deprived of life, liberty or property. But we are unable to perceive how the provision could have misled bidders for the work. And, assuming that the city surveyor could, by the exercise of the power, have increased or diminished the cost of the work above or below that indicated by the resolution, there is nothing here to show that any attempt was made upon his part to exercise such power, or that occasion arose calling for its exercise. Thus we have reviewed all the objections urged against the validity of the assessment involved in this action.

It is our opinion, as already expressly stated, and as must be manifest from the views generally we have expressed herein, that all the objections to the assessment in this case involve technicalities behind which there is little if any substance. It is proper, and indeed, necessary that all the provisions and requirements of laws authorizing the levy of assessments or taxes upon the property of citizens, particularly for special purposes, should be strictly followed, where a strict observance thereof is reasonably practicable; for, unless the rights of property owners are not completely safeguarded in the matter of the levy of such taxes, it may become an easy matter to perpetrate all sorts of fraud against property owners, even to depriving them of their property without lawful right or due process of law. Yet, as the Supreme Court says in Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 365, 80 Pac. 81, "however desirable it would be to have the precise details of the work, even to the smallest fraction, fixed in advance of the bids, so that the exact cost to the contractor, as well as the contract price may be known at the time the contract is let, it always has been and always will be impossible to do so." And in Haughawout v. Hubbard, 131 Cal. 678, 63 Pac. 1079, similar language is used. It is there said: "To some extent such details must depend on unanticipated contingencies of the actual construction. The specifications must, therefore, always fail, more or less, in certainty or completeness of detail, and hence the most accurate and detailed specification must leave unprovided for many questions arising in the course of the work as to the kind and amount of work or materials and other details of construction. The giving of discretion to some person as to all these details, the culverts possibly excepted, is inevitable in every such work. If not vested in and exercised by the street superintendent, it will be exercised by the contractor himself. The statute recognizes this condition, and itself provides that the work must be done to the satisfaction of the street superintendent." To the same effect is Haughawout v. Raymond, 148 Cal. 312, 83 Pac. 53.

That there may be no misapprehension of our views regarding certain propositions treated in this opinion, we desire to say that we are not to be understood from anything herein said as holding that cases have not arisen or that cases may not arise in which the invalidity of a street or like assessment has appeared or may appear from the very terms of the resolution of intention itself. In other words, we are not holding here that, if the resolution of intention should disclose the delegation to the street superintendent of power which the Legislature clearly intended should be exercised alone by the board itself, or which, from its very nature, could be said to clothe the superintendent with discretion to enlarge or diminish the cost of the work at his will, the assessment would not have to be declared invalid, regardless of whether or not there was an affirmative showing of actual injury as the result of the exercise of such power. But where, as here, the power or discretion delegated does not appear upon its face to be material or unauthorized, this court cannot declare, as a matter of law, or in the absence of evidence showing that positive injury has in fact resulted from its exercise, that, with regard to the matters as to which such discretion is delegated, the discretion or power so delegated is material or beyond the contemplation of the law.

No substantial reason appears to us why the judgment should not stand, and the same is therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

In re LINDNER'S ESTATE.

MUTH v. DOMENICI. (Civ. 760.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 12, 1910.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD (§ 2*)—CUSTODY—RIGHT OF MOTHER.

Upon the death of a father, the mother is prima facie entitled to the custody of her young child, and cannot be deprived of it unless clearly shown to be unfit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parent and Child, Cent. Dig. §§ 4–32; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 13*)—RIGHT OF MOTHER TO APPOINTMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On an application by a mother for appointment as guardian of the person and estate of her child, evidence held insufficient to sustain a finding that she was not a proper person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 40–52; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—FINDINGS OF THE TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

Where there was any substantial evidence to support the findings of the trial court, the court on appeal will not interfere.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 13*)—RIGHT OF MOTHER TO APPOINTMENT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

On application by a mother for appointment as guardian of the person and estate of her child, general statements by manifestly unfriendly witnesses that the child was always filthy, and that the mother did not keep her house clean, without any showing of the knowledge possessed by the witnesses, did not meet the requirement that a mother cannot be deprived of the custody of her child save by a clear showing that she is unfit.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Petition by Madge Muth against Emma Domenici for the appointment of petitioner as the guardian of the estate and person of Juanita A. Lindner, minor child of the petitioner. From a judgment denying the petition, Madge Muth appeals. Reversed.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment denying appellant's petition to be appointed guardian of the person and estate of her own child and the order denying her motion for a new trial. The court found that the petitioner was not a fit, proper, or competent person to discharge the duties of guardianship or to be appointed guardian of said minor, who was then less than three years of age. The father of said child died before this proceeding was instituted, so, unless the evidence fairly shows that the mother was not a fit or proper person to have the care and custody of her own child, the judgment and order must be reversed.

Upon the death of the father the mother is prima facie entitled to the custody of her young child, and cannot be deprived of such custody unless shown to be unfit by sufficient testimony. In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 383, 62 Pac. 613; Guardianship of Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 Pac. 51.

The prior right of parents to the custody of their children under 14 years of age "cannot be disregarded except on the most compelling reasons proven and sustained before the court." 21 Cyc. 34.

The petition of appellant is in the usual form, and showed that the child had an estate of the value of $500, and was then in the custody of Emma Domenici. When the matter came on for hearing Emma Domenici appeared with the child, but filed no answer to the petition. The matter was heard upon three different days. At no time was it suggested by any one that petitioner was in any way immoral or of bad habits. Prior to the death of the father of the child petitioner had brought a suit for divorce from him, and on the 28th day of January, 1907, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to her, in which the custody of the child was awarded to its father until further order of the court. The awarding of the custody of the child was in accordance with an agreement between the father and mother which contemplated that the child should be placed with its paternal aunt, Emma Domenici, but which likewise provided that such custody should be temporary only. The father died January 30, 1907, but the child had been given into his custody under the agreement December 24, 1906, and subsequently by him placed with Mrs. Domenici. After the death of the father petitioner remarried, and is now the wife of George Muth, and is able to provide for the child. The evidence taken upon the first and second days of the hearing disclosed that petitioner had visited the child but once since giving it into the care of its father, but nothing else was shown to her prejudice. Indeed, at the close of the second day's session the learned judge presiding expressed the view that this was a most unnatural act, and that she (petitioner) "thinks more of the $500 that is in sight in the estate than she does of the person of the child. That is the only matter that is facing me at the present time."

At the next hearing it was shown without contradiction by letters that passed between her and her counsel, Frank McGowan, Esq., that she was advised by him that she had better not visit the child until the court rendered judgment in the divorce suit. This occurred January 28, 1906. In February petitioner did call to see her child, and in March consulted with Mr. McGowan with a view to regaining its custody. She was then taken ill, but upon leaving her bed wrote to Mr. McGowan urging that steps be taken to get for her the child. Negotiations were at once commenced and carried on by Mr. McGowan, for her, with Mrs. Domenici and the attorney that had represented Mr. Lindner in the divorce case, until finally the petition was filed.

Several letters written by Mrs. Muth to her attorney were read in evidence. None of them refer to the money or estate of the child at all, but do show love and anxiety for the child. They are all expressed in good English, correctly spelled and show the writer to have a fairly good education. These letters and the evidence of Mr. McGowan and other evidence given after the intimation from the court as to its views fully explain in a satisfactory way the reasons why petitioner did not more frequently visit her child.

At the close of the hearing some evidence was given intended to show that petitioner had neglected the child. Emma Domenici testified that "When I got the baby we had to give her a bath. She was filthy. Her hair was not combed. * * * Her hair was matted." But it was shown without contradiction that the baby had for a week or more preceding been in the custody of its paternal uncle and not with its mother at all. She was therefore not responsible for this condition. Evidence was also given by the sister and brother of Mrs. Domenici in general terms that the baby was always filthy and dirty, and that petitioner did not keep her house clean. How frequently they visited the house of petitioner or what opportunities they had of really knowing what care she gave the baby was not shown. Petitioner, after this testimony was given, again took the witness stand and denied its truth. She testified that she bathed the baby every day and always kept it clean. There was not one word of testimony that the child had ever been ill, or that anything existed in the life of petitioner that would militate against the moral well-being of the child. We fully recognize the rule that where there is any substantial evidence to support the finding of the trial court this court cannot interfere. But we likewise recognize that as against everyone except the father the mother is by the law of God and man entitled as of right to the custody of her own child, and of this right she cannot be deprived except upon a clear showing of her unfitness for the exercise of such right.

General statements by manifestly unfriendly witnesses that the child was always filthy and that the mother did not keep her house clean, without any showing as to the opportunities for real knowledge possessed by such witnesses, do not meet the requirements for such a showing.

The general statements made by the brother and sisters of her divorced husband to the effect that she did not keep the child clean are not sufficient to warrant a finding that she is not a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of her own baby, there not being one word tending to show any loose or immoral conduct upon her part, or any neglect that has ever injured the health or physical well-being of the child. A mother who is both capable and anxious to rear her own offspring should not be deprived of the opportunity to thus discharge the duty she owes to the child, without a clear showing of unfitness for the trust.

The ends of justice require that this case be remanded for a new trial, to the end that a careful and full investigation may be had as to whether or not this mother should be deprived of the right to rear and care for her own child. The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by W. I. Stone against the San Francisco Brick Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

HALL, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the sum of $854 as the reasonable value of work and labor performed for and materials furnished to defendant by plaintiff's assignor at the special instance and request of defendant. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $500, from which and the order denying its motion for a new trial defendant appealed to this court.

The action was commenced by the filing of the complaint on the 18th day of May, 1907, which alleged the performance of the work, etc., within two years last past. The findings were signed and filed on the 21st day of May, 1908. The court, following the language of the complaint, found "that within two years last past, at the city and county of San Francisco, said Union Machine Company performed work, labor, and services for said defendant corporation at its special instance and request, in making and repairing various kinds of machinery and metal appliances, and during said time said Union Machine Company furnished materials to defendant in and for said work on the like request." This finding is attacked by appellant as not supported by the evidence and as evasive and not responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings. The point of the attack is that the words "two years last past" refer to the two years immediately preceding the date of the filing of the findings, and not to the period preceding the filing of the complaint, while the evidence in the case shows without conflict and with certainty that all the work was done and all material furnished before the great earthquake and conflagration which occurred in April, 1906, more than two years before the filing of the findings. Undoubtedly the words "within two years last past" as they occur in the findings were inadvertently used.

Findings must be read as a whole. In this case the court also found that "prior to the commencement of this action" the claim was assigned by said Union Machine Company to plaintiff, and in response to a plea of the statute of limitations (subdivision 1, § 339, Code Civ. Proc.) found that the cause of action was not barred by the provisions of said section or by any other section of said Code. The court also found as to the value and as to nonpayment of the debt. Under these circumstances, we think the finding that the services were performed and the materials furnished "within two years last past" was immaterial, and should be disregarded. The gist and heart of the finding attacked is that the services were performed and the materials furnished by plaintiff's assignor to defendant at its special instance and request. If the court had simply so found without mentioning in that finding the period of time, the finding would have been sufficient, in connection with the other findings as to the assignment before the commencement of the action, as to the action not being barred, as to value, and nonpayment, to support the judgment; for it thus appears that the debt accrued within two years before the commencement of the action.

The vital questions of fact presented by the pleadings are answered by the findings, and the substance of the finding attacked is supported by the evidence. The form of the finding is not to be commended and such errors should be avoided, but we do not think that a judgment should be reversed or a new trial ordered for what so clearly appears to be a mere clerical error.

It is also claimed that the court committed error in permitting the witness Bepler to testify to the balance disclosed, just prior to the great fire, by the collection book kept by the bookkeeper and collector for the Union Machine Company (plaintiff's assignor). It had been shown that this and all other books kept by plaintiff's assignor had been destroyed by the fire of April, 1906. Evidence had also been given by the bookkeeper that he kept the books correctly. Nevertheless the entry in this particular book was not admissible, for it was not the book of original entry, and was not of such a character as to come within the rule allowing the introduction by plaintiff of entries in his own books. But it is not at all clear that the objection made to the admission of the evidence was really pointed at the real vice of the evidence. While a general objection that the evidence was incompetent and hearsay was made, this was coupled with the specific objection "that the book is not shown to be kept in the handwriting of this witness, no entries were made there by him," which seems to have been the real point of the objection relied on. But the bookkeeper who did keep this book testified to the correctness of his books, and subsequently specifically testified to the correctness of this particular book. Under such circumstances, if the entries are admissible at all, and the book has been destroyed, the contents thereof may be further proved by any witness who has knowledge thereof (section 1937, Code Civ. Proc.). So the specific objection made to this evidence was not well taken, and that this was understood by counsel and the court as the real point of the objection we think is manifest from what appears in the record and the original brief of appellant. Appellant in his objection did not suggest that the book was not a book of original entry, which would have been the most appropriate and direct way to call the court's attention to the vice of the offered evidence; and in his brief he heads his discussion of the point with the words, "Error in admitting testimony of person not the bookkeeper as to contents of destroyed books," and concludes his discussion with a summary of his views to the effect that it is doubtful whether contents of destroyed books of account may be proved at all, and that, if such proof may be made, it must come from the bookkeeper.

But, whether or not the vice of the evidence admitted was reached by the objection, we do not think that any error that may have been committed by the court in admitting such evidence is of sufficient importance in this case to require the granting of a new trial. The witness answered that the book showed a balance in favor of plaintiff's assignor of between $700 and $800, and he further testified that no payments were thereafter made by the defendant. The court, however, gave judgment for but $500, thus showing that the evidence in question did not affect the judgment. The judgment rendered is amply sustained by other evidence. The challenged evidence was introduced in rebuttal after the defendant had given evidence as to the balance shown by its books. Under such circumstances, we think this is a proper case for the application of the rule prescribed by section 475, Code Civ. Proc., that error that does not affect the substantial rights of the parties must be disregarded.

Objection was also made to a witness refreshing his memory by the use of a memorandum made under his direction, but the ruling overruling this objection was not erroneous, for it appeared that the memorandum was made at the dictation and under the direction of the witness when the facts were fresh in his memory, and that he knew that the facts were correctly stated in the memorandum. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047.

The judgment and ordered are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Goetz. From an order denying an application for a decree of partial distribution, Louis Albert Goetz and others appeal. Reversed, with directions.

See, also, 109 Pac. 145, 492.

P. A. Bergerot, A. P. Dessouslavy, and Jellett & Meyerstein, for appellants. Louis Bartlett and Loewy & Gutsch, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying an application for a decree of partial distribution.

The controversy calls for a construction of clauses 7 and 13 of the will of Joseph Goetz, deceased. The first clause of the will contains the names of the executors and vests them with certain powers. The second clause reads: "I make the following bequest: all of which money bequest and to be paid in gold coin of the United States of America." In the third and fourth clauses the testator bequeathed to six nephews and a niece—other than the appellants—and to a grandniece, sums of money aggregating $180,000. By the fifth clause he devised to the appellants, three nephews and a niece, all his real estate. In the sixth clause among other gifts he bequeathed to the appellants certain pictures, some jewelry, and his household furniture, all of substantial value. The seventh clause reads as follows: "I make no money bequests to my nephews and niece which are mentioned in paragraph Fifth of my will as the real estate owned by me at the time of my death so bequeathed to them in equal shares is ample and sufficient." The only other clause in the will that need be quoted is clause 13, which reads as follows: "If there should be some surplus of money from the sales of my personal properties consisting of mortgages notes; and shares of stocks and banks account so mentioned shall be divided equally among the legatees herein mentioned in this will share and share alike."

From the findings of the court it appears that the debts of the estate have all been paid, and that after liquidating certain unpaid legacies, and making an adequate allowance for the remaining expenses of administration, the surplus of the personal estate referred to in the thirteenth clause will not be less than $60,000, and there is no reason why a partial distribution of the estate should not be made to the appellants unless it was the intention of the testator by clause seventh to exclude them from participating in what he termed the "surplus" of his state. The appellants are not only devisees, but admittedly by virtue of the terms of the sixth clause of the will they are also legatees, and as such, under clause 13 standing alone, they are beneficiaries.

This brings us to a consideration of the real question in the case, namely: Does the seventh clause of the will limit or affect the thirteenth clause thereof? The testator drew his own will. He was a foreigner by birth, whose command of the English language, and especially of technical legal terms, was limited; and for this reason, among others, it is somewhat difficult to determine the testator's intentions. We think, however, that it was not his desire that clause seventh should affect or restrict the thirteenth clause. From a reading of the will it would seem that, while the testator out of excess of caution provided for the disposition of a possible surplus of his estate, he hardly expected that there would be any surplus, but that the legacies of $180,000 in clauses 3 and 4 would exhaust his entire personal estate. In clause 10 he directed that a portion of the rents of the real property devised should constitute a part of his estate. In clause 11 he directed that, if there should not be sufficient money to pay the legacies mentioned in clause 3, said legacies should be proportionately reduced. Clause 13 itself reads: "If there should be some surplus of money," etc., it "shall be divided equally among my legatees," which uncertain form of expression, when compared with the certain and positive language in which other provisions of the will are stated, would also indicate that he considered the surplus of his personalty to be at least a doubtful quantity. Accordingly, and as the tie was closer and stronger between appellants and the testator then between him and respondents, and, as he nowhere in his will stated the value of his whole estate or of his real property, it is more reasonable to assume that, remembering the superior claims of appellants on his bounty, he wrote clause 7 to explain why he had made no definite money bequests to appellants, rather than that he intended thereby to exclude them from receiving any part of the possible residue of his estate.

Further light is thrown on the purpose of clause 7 by a consideration of the structural arrangement of the will. In clauses 3, 4, 5, and 6 the testator disposed of $180,000 in cash, all his real estate and his pictures, jewelry, and household furniture, which clauses cover what we may term the primary disposition of his property. Immediately following these is clause 7, in which he says, "I make no money bequests" to my nephews and niece mentioned in paragraph 5 of my will, as the real estate "bequeathed to them is ample and sufficient." Six clauses farther along he says, however, "If there should be some surplus of money," etc., it "shall be divided equally among the legatees * * * mentioned in this will share and share alike." The seventh clause following immediately, as it does, the disposition, as he apparently supposed, of all of his property, was intended, we believe, not as a limitation or restriction of clause 13, but as a reason why he made no specific money bequests to the appellants. Again, in clause 2 the testator, in referring to the legacies in clauses 3 and 4 of named sums of money, spoke of them as "money bequests"; and there is some force in the suggestion that in employing the same expression in clause 7 he meant thereby to say that he made no bequests to appellants of specific sums of money because the real estate given them was ample and sufficient. In 30 Am. & Eng. Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) p. 671, it is said: "Repetition of words. Words occurring more than once in a will are presumed to be used always in the same sense when the context does not show a contrary intention, or when the words are not applied to different subjects."

In Pringle v. Wilson (decided September 23, 1909) 104 Pac. 316, it is said: "It is a familiar rule of construction that other things being equal, words used in a certain sense in one part of an instrument are deemed to have been used in the same sense in another." See, also, Beal on Legal Interpretation (2d Ed.) p. 558. It will be unnecessary, however, to consider this point further, for whatever the testator meant by clause 7 it cannot be successfully denied that it is at least doubtful whether that clause was intended to limit or affect clause 13; and section 1322 of the Civil Code specifically provides that a clear and distinct bequest in a will, such as is clause 13, cannot be restricted or qualified by another provision therein which is indefinite or doubtful; and it must be held, therefore, that appellants are residuary legatees under clause 13, and entitled to partial distribution of the personal estate of the testator. The last-mentioned section reads as follows: "A clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any reasons assigned therefor, or by any other words not equally clear and distinct, or by inference or argument from other parts of the will or by an inaccurate recital of or reference to its contents in another part of the will." See, also, Estate of Upham, 127 Cal. 90, 59 Pac. 315; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 61 Pac. 964, 64 Pac. 1071; Estate of Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 75 Pac. 324; Williams v. Williams, 73 Cal. 99, 14 Pac. 394.

The order is reversed, and the court is directed to enter an order granting the application for partial distribution.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Goetz, deceased. From an order of partial distribution, an appeal is taken. Affirmed.

Louis Bartlett, for appellants. P. A. Bergerot, Jellett & Meyerstein, and A. P. Dessouslay, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order of partial distribution, whereby a certain parcel of real estate in the city and county of San Francisco was distributed to the respondents.

The testator, Joseph Goetz, devised all his real estate owned by him at the time of his death to the respondents, who were his nieces and nephews. The surplus of his estate which remained after the payment of money legacies aggregating $180,000 was bequeathed by him to the appellants and others. Joseph Goetz executed his will May 11, 1904. He died July 1, 1907. On January 7, 1907, he and E. C. Chapman had executed an instrument in writing as follows: "Chatfield & Vinzent, Real Estate, Mortgages, Loans and Insurance, 51 Post Street. San Francisco, Jan. 7, 1907. Received from E. C. Chapman the sum of $5,000.00, being deposit on account of $75,000.00, United States gold coin, the purchase price of the property this day sold to him, as per the owner's authority, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and described as follows. [Here follows a particular description of the real property.] Terms of sale: 90 days allowed to examine title and consummate sale; at the expiration of said time the balance of said purchase money is due and payable upon tender of the deed of the property sold. If title is defective, thirty days are allowed the seller to perfect the same, and if, after the expiration of said time (unless extended by mutual consent) the title is incurably defective, then the deposit is to be returned at once. If the sale is not consummated in accordance with the foregoing conditions the deposit is to be forfeited. Time is of the essence of the contract. Taxes for the fiscal year 1906–07 to be pro rated. Title is to be approved by the Pacific Title Insurance Company, whose policy of insurance shall be evidence of good title. Chatfield & Vinzent. I, the said E. C. Chapman, hereby agree to purchase the above-described property and to comply with all the conditions therein contained. (Sale to be consummated at the office of Chatfield & Vinzent.) E. C. Chapman. San Francisco, Jan. 7, 1907. I hereby approve the above sale. Joseph Goetz."

Two days after the execution of this contract, to wit, January 9th, Joseph Goetz signed a grant, bargain, and sale deed of said land to Chapman. On January 11th he duly acknowledged the same, and deposited it with the French-American Bank of San Francisco, with written instructions that it be delivered to Chapman on or before 90 days from date upon payment by Chapman of $70,000, which amount was stated to be the balance of the purchase price of said property "as per contract of sale dated January 7, 1907." Subsequent to this date, Chapman went into possession of said property and wrecked some of the buildings, and caused some of the bricks thereon to be cleaned. When the instrument of January 7th was executed, Chapman paid the $5,000 deposit therein mentioned. On April 25, 1907, Chapman and Goetz signed an agreement wherein it was provided that, in consideration of the sum of $2,000 additional deposit, Chapman's time for the carrying out of the contract of January 7th was extended up to and including May 10, 1907. On May 9, 1907, Goetz signed and delivered a receipt to Chapman for $93.10, being interest for 10 days from the 10th to the 20th of May on $68,000, the balance due Goetz from Chapman on the "contract of sale" of said property. On May 24, 1907, in the presence of Goetz and Chapman, the contract of January 7th was marked "canceled" the deed which had been on deposit with the French-American Bank was returned to Goetz, and, in the language of Chapman, "the deal was off."

The respondents claim under a devise by the testator of all the real estate owned by him at the time of his death, which includes the parcel now in dispute. Appellants, on the other hand, contend that the instrument of January 7th operated as a grant, bargain, and sale deed from Goetz to Chapman, and that consequently Goetz at the time of his death no longer owned the land, or that, if the instrument was not such conveyance, it operated in equity to convert the realty into personalty, so that in either event the property would not be carried by the devise to the respondents. We cannot agree with the contentions of appellants. It is true that in the contract in question the word "sold" was used, and that Chapman went into possession of the property and wrecked some of the buildings. But it is conceded, as, of course, it must be, that the word "sold" does not conclusively show a present conveyance. Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Eaton v. Richeri, 83 Cal. 185, 23 Pac. 286; Shainwald, Buckbee & Co. v. Cady, 92 Cal. 83, 28 Pac. 101; Gallup v. Sterling, 22 Misc. Rep. 672, 49 N. Y. Supp. 942; Brooks v. Libby, 89 Me. 151, 36 Atl. 66; Cooley v. Miler & Lux (Sup.) 105 Pac. 981; Payne v. Neuval (Sup.) 99 Pac. 476. And the possession by Chapman only shows that the parties intended to carry out the contract. Later, however, they changed their minds and canceled the arrangement. The instrument was not called by the parties a deed, nor was it executed with the formalities of such a document, and it was not regarded as a conveyance by either Goetz or Chapman. The fact that a deed to the property was deposited with the bank by Goetz shows that Goetz at least did not regard the agreement of January 7th as a deed. Moreover, Chapman's signature to the contract is preceded by the words "I agree to purchase." The $2,000 paid by him was referred to in the receipt not as a part payment, but as an additional deposit. Finally, the conduct of the parties to the transaction with reference thereto, and particularly on May 24th, when in the presence of Chapman the deed was returned to Goetz by the bank and the contract marked "canceled," indicates that they never intended that the agreement of January 7th should divest Goetz of his title. Upon a consideration of the whole instrument, together with the conduct of the parties, it is very plain to us that the instrument was an agreement of sale and not a conveyance.

Equally without merit is appellants' contention that, if the agreement in question be construed as a contract of sale instead of a conveyance, it effected an equitable conversion of the property from real estate into personal estate, and that the property must therefore fall into the residue of personal estate and be distributed to the testator's legatees. This contention is based upon the theory that the contract was subsisting, valid, and enforceable at the time of the death of Goetz; but the court found on ample evidence that on May 24th "the said agreement for the purchase of said property was entirely canceled and rescinded by agreement then entered into between the said decedent and the said Edgar C. Chapman," and that thereafter Goetz "returned and paid to said Edgar C. Chapman the said sum of $5,000 paid on account of said purchase price as aforesaid." Another conclusive answer to this contention is that section 1301 of the Civil Code operated to prevent the application of the doctrine of equitable conversion (even if it had been otherwise applicable). That section reads as follows: "An agreement made by a testator for the sale or transfer of property disposed of by a will previously made does not revoke such disposal; but the property passes by the will, subject to the same remedies on the testator's agreement for a specific performance or otherwise against the devisees or legatees as might be had against the testator's successors if the same had passed by succession."

The order is affirmed.

W. P. JEFFRIES CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT et al. (Civ. 781.)

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL—UNDERTAKING—NOTICE OF FILING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 978a, providing that the undertaking on appeal from a justice to the superior court must be filed within five days after the filing of notice of appeal, and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to respondent, and that the adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and, unless they or other sureties justify within five days thereafter, the appeal must be regarded as though no such undertaking had been given, service of notice of the filing of an undertaking is not necessary to give the superior court jurisdiction of the appeal; the evil sought to be remedied by such section being the necessity of the owner of the judgment keeping watch during the 30 days within which previously appellant might file his undertaking, respondent then, as now, being required to except to the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking; the notice not being a step in perfecting the appeal, but only in the collateral proceeding to justify, an appeal by the provision of section 974 being taken by filing and serving a notice of appeal, and being perfected or made effectual by filing an undertaking "for the payment of costs on appeal"; and the qualification by the sureties on this undertaking, in the absence of exception, which may be waived, being a full and complete justification.

Application by the W. P. Jeffries Company for writ of review to the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles and W. P. James, judge thereof. Demurrer to petition sustained. Writ denied.

PER CURIAM. Certiorari. Petitioner is plaintiff in an action brought in a justice's court of Los Angeles county in which he obtained a judgment against the defendants in the action on October 11, 1909. The latter appealed to the superior court upon questions of both law and fact. Separate notices of appeal were served and filed on October 21, 1909, by two of the several defendants in the action, and on the same day the statutory undertakings on appeal and to stay execution were filed by one of the defendants; and on October 25, 1909, a separate undertaking for the same purpose by the other appealing defendants was filed. On October 27, 1909, all the papers in the cause were certified to and filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court.

No notice of the filing of these undertakings, or either of them, was given as provided by section 978a of the Code of Civil Procedure at the time they were filed, or within 30 days thereafter; and on November 11, 1909, respondent served notice upon appellants of its intention to move to dismiss the purported appeals, which motion was noticed for November 22, 1909, and based upon the failure of appellants to serve the notices of the filing of said undertakings as aforesaid. An affidavit of counsel setting out the facts was served with the notice. Thereafter, on November 12, 1909, one of the appellants served notice upon petitioner of the filing of his undertaking. The motion to dismiss said appeals was heard at the time for which noticed and the motion denied. It is this order denying this motion which we are asked to review.

Section 978a, Code Civ. Proc., is a new section added to the Code in 1909, and reads as follows: "The undertaking on appeal must be filed within five days after the filing of the notice of appeal and notice of the filing of the undertaking must be given to the respondent. The adverse party may except to the sufficiency of the sureties within five days after the filing of the undertaking, and unless they or other sureties justify before the justice or judge within five days thereafter, upon notice to the adverse party, to the amounts stated in their affidavits, the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given." The requirement of the first sentence, to wit, the filing of the undertaking within five days after the service of the notice of appeal, and the giving of notice of the filing of the undertaking, are new provisions in the statute. Prior to the enactment of this section, the undertaking could be filed at any time within the 30 days during which the appeal might be taken. Section 978. The portion of 978a, relating to the justification of sureties, is but a re-enactment of the same matter theretofore a part of section 978. It is apparent, then, that the only question presented on this application is: "Was service of notice of the filing of an undertaking by appellants necessary to give the superior court jurisdiction of the appeal?" We think this question must be answered in the negative. Statutory provisions are to be construed with reference to the intention and purpose of their enactment. The apparent evil to be remedied by the amendment of 1909 was the necessity under the old conditions that the owner of a judgment rendered in a justice's court should keep constant supervision of the justice's docket for the period of 30 days to prevent an appeal being taken therefrom without adequate security being given on the appeal. The remedy was the requirement that the undertaking be filed within five days, and that notice of the filing of the undertaking should be given to him. No change was made by the amendment in regard to the time within which the respondent must except to the sufficiency of the sureties. This is still required to be done within five days after the filing of the undertaking; no reference being made to any notice of such filing. Notice of intention to file an undertaking would serve no useful purpose, as the service and filing of the notice of appeal would accomplish all that a notice of an intention to file an undertaking could do, as it implied that within five days the undertaking necessary to perfect the appeal would be filed. This is regarded as sufficient notice of intention on appeals from the superior court. No reason exists for giving a notice in advance of the act, as no hearing was to be had or act done which required the presence of the adverse party when the instrument was presented to the justice. If considered as a notice to be given after the undertaking has been filed, there is no provision as to the time it should be served or the effect of a failure to serve it. The language used in the latter part of the section with respect to the notice to be given of the time of justification of sureties cannot be read into the first sentence, as petitioner suggests. Neither is it applicable by analogy.

If the failure to give notice of the filing of the undertaking should subject appellant to a penalty, such as that prescribed where the sureties fail to justify, there would have been no question as to the legislative intention. It is true, as argued by petitioner, that the absence of such a provision makes somewhat for the view that this notice is a step in perfecting the appeal, rather than a part of the collateral proceeding to justify, but its very nature and purpose make it part of the latter. Its sole use is to bring home to respondent the knowledge that the appeal is already perfected, at least, prima facie. Only after the appeal has been taken and rendered effectual to this extent can it serve any purpose. It merely invites the respondent to inspect the undertaking already filed in order to determine the sufficiency of the sureties executing it. The justification of the sureties after notice is not a necessary step in taking an appeal. An appeal is taken by filing and serving a notice of appeal. Section 974. It is perfected or made effectual by filing an undertaking "for the payment of the costs on appeal." The qualification by the sureties, upon this undertaking, in the absence of exception, is a full and complete justification. A further justification may be required by the respondent by excepting to the sufficiency of the sureties. This further justification is a collateral proceeding in which the respondent may exercise a right granted him to determine the adequacy of the security given for his protection on the appeal. This he may waive, and if he fails to exercise his right to except, or fails to attend before the court when the sureties are in attendance for the purpose of justifying, the appeal remains perfected and effectual under the undertaking as originally filed, just as it does when he does not except. Bank of Escondido v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 43, 47, 39 Pac. 211. If, however, after exception properly made, the sureties fail to justify within five days, "the appeal must be regarded as if no such undertaking had been given." Section 978a; Wood v. Superior Court, 67 Cal. 115, 7 Pac. 200; McCracken v. Superior Court, 86 Cal. 76, 24 Pac. 845; Bennett v. Superior Court, 113 Cal. 440, 45 Pac. 808; Lane v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 762, 91 Pac. 405.

The question here under consideration was not before the Court of Appeal for the Third District in Stimpson, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 107 Pac. 1013. In that case there was an entire failure to file any undertaking after giving the notice of appeal; the undertaking relied on having been executed and filed "months before the trial." In the absence of some clearly expressed intention upon the part of the Legislature to make jurisdictional the serving of a notice the sole purpose of which is what we have declared this one to be, we feel constrained to hold that the failure to do so does not deprive the superior court of jurisdiction to hear an appeal in which the other steps provided by the statute are regularly and properly taken.

The demurrer to petition is sustained and the writ denied.

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 42*) — FORMATION OF HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT — PROCEEDINGS — SUBMISSION TO POPULAR VOTE.

An application for a mandatory writ recognizing the formation of a certain high school district showed that nine school districts had filed with the county superintendent of schools separate petitions, each stating that it was signed by a majority of the heads of families in the ——— school district, and asking for an election to determine the question of establishing a union high school district to be composed of the named school districts within said county, "or any seven of them which shall include the ——— school district," and then named the nine districts petitioning. It appeared that at the election no votes were cast in two of the districts, but a large majority in five other districts voted for the formation of a district and a majority of all the voters in the nine districts were in favor. A majority of the heads of families in A. district did not sign the petition, while B. district had for five years been a part of another union high school district. Pol. Code, § 1670, subd. 4, as amended by St. 1907, c. 519, provides that, when the heads of families equal in number to a majority in each district as shown in two or more contiguous school districts in the same county unite in the petition for the establishing of a union school district, the superintendent shall call the election. Held, that only the heads of families had a right to designate the boundaries of a district, the superintendent being given no authority, and that as the language of the petition might be construed as requesting the formation of a district which might or might not comprise contiguous or compact territory, and the petitions did not unite in the request for an election within the seven districts of the nine which could have united, the vote of yes or no required was not on an alternative proposition, and the election was invalid.

Original application by the Moorpark School District of Ventura County and others against James E. Reynolds, as superintendent of schools, and others, for writ commanding filing of certificate. Writ denied.

T. O. Toland and Toland & Rogers, for petitioners. Don G. Bowker, for respondents. Edward M. Selby, amicus curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The petitioners pray the court for a writ commanding the superintendent of schools for Ventura county to make and file a certificate of the result of an election alleged to have been held on August 3, 1909, on the question of forming a certain high school district, and further requiring said superintendent to call an election in said union high school district for the purpose of electing a board of trustees therefor.

Many questions involving a proper construction of the statutes with reference to the creation of high school districts have been presented and ably argued upon this application. We think, however, that the primary question for determination and the one which should control the action of the court in the premises, depends upon the legal organization and creation of the high school district alleged to have been created by a vote of the people thereof; for if, as a fact, such high school district was not legally created and established, it follows that the superintendent of schools has no duty to perform in connection with the matters sought in the application.

It is made to appear from the petition filed herein: That on the 30th day of June, 1909, eight certain school districts, to-wit, Long Canyon school district, Fairview school district, Timber school district, Simi school district, Santa Susana school district, Las Posas school district, Conejo school district, and Moorpark school district, filed with the superintendent of schools of Ventura county eight certain petitions, each of which was in the following form, omitting the introductory part: "We, the undersigned, being a majority in number of the heads of families as shown by the last school census of the ——— school district, and also a majority of the heads of families now residing within said ——— school district, respectfully petition that you call an election in the time and in the manner as by law provided for the purpose of determining the question of establishing and maintaining a union high school district to be composed of the following-named school districts within said county of Ventura, state of California, or of any seven of them, which shall include the ——— school district." Then follows a statement of the names of all the school districts sought to be included, among which was another district called Somis school district. That afterwards, on the 19th day of July, 1909, Somis school district presented a petition of similar character. All of the nine petitions so presented were similar in form, except that, where the blank appears in the petition, there was inserted the name of the particular school district joining in the petition. It further appears that the nine school districts comprised contiguous territory, and that, excluding Santa Susana school district upon the easterly border and Somis school district upon the westerly boarder, the remaining seven districts formed contiguous and compact territory. Upon the filing of the petition by the Somis school district, the superintendent of schools called an election in each of the school districts, notifying the qualified electors of an election to be held upon the question of the formation of a union high school district to consist of the following school districts (naming the nine districts), or any seven or more of said districts, including ———, which blank contained the name of the particular district in which the notice was posted. That said election was held in each of the school districts named, except that no votes were cast in Las Posas and Conejo districts, and as a result of said election a large majority of the voters of Somis district, Timber district, Moorpark district, Fairview district, and Long Canyon district voted for the creation of such high school district, and a majority of all of the voters in the nine districts cast their votes in favor of the formation of such high school district. That the superintendent of schools filed with the county clerk a certificate of the result of said election, which stated that the boundaries of said proposed union high school district are the exterior boundaries of the nine districts in which the election was held. It is further made to appear that, excluding Santa Susana and Somis districts, the census children exceeded 200, and the aggregate of votes cast in favor of the formation of the high school district was greater than that of the votes cast against it.

Subdivision 4 of section 1670 of the Political Code (St. 1907, p. 958), in force prior to July 1, 1909, provided: "When the heads of families equal in number to a majority in each district, as shown by the last preceding school census, residing in two or more contiguous school districts in the same county (provided, that said districts are accredited by said school census with a school population of two hundred or more), shall unite in a petition to the county superintendent of schools for the establishing and maintaining of a union high school district, he shall, within twenty days after receiving said petition, call an election for the determination of the question," etc. It is conceded that a majority of the heads of families in Santa Susana district did not sign the petition. It is also averred in the petition for the writ that Somis school district, included therein, is, and has been at all times for five years, a part and one of the districts comprising and comprised within a union high school district called the Oxnard high school district.

Considering, then, the demurrer filed to the petition for the writ, it is admitted that, by reason of the insufficiency of the petition in behalf of Santa Susana district and the fact that Somis was already within another high school district, neither of said districts could be included within the high school district sought to be created by the petition. The statute authorizing the heads of families to petition is the equivalent of an authority for them to unite in a request for a particular thing. An examination of the petitions filed with the superintendent of schools clearly shows that the petitioners therefor did not unite in a request for the formation of a specific territory into a high school district. Each district requested that its own territory be included, either with six other districts, or eight other districts. The only persons who under the law have a right to designate the boundaries of a district are the heads of families. There is nothing in the act indicating that the superintendent of schools, or any other person, shall have any right to determine what districts shall be united, and when the heads of families by their petition fail to unite in a specific request for the creation of a definite territory into a high school district they fail to comply with the statute, through which petition jurisdiction is given to the superintendent of schools to call the election. Under the peculiar language of these petitions, they were open to the construction of requesting the formation of a district which might or might not comprise contiguous and compact territory. These petitions did not unite in a request for an election within the seven districts which could have been united, but, on the contrary, requested an election to unite other territory, notably Santa Susana district, which declined to enter into the district, and Somis district, which could not enter into a new district. The necessity for the definite character of the request is evident when we consider the statute with reference to the election, which provides that the electors shall vote "yes" or "no" upon the question involved. The call for the election must be based upon the petition, and, with an alternative proposition in the petition and call for election, it would not be possible for an elector by simply answering "yes" or "no" to express his assent or dissent to or against the organization of a district having particular and specified boundaries. We are of opinion, therefore, that the demurrer to the petition for this writ should be sustained.

It may not be improper to say further that were a consideration to be had of the issues presented by the answer and return nothing is therein disclosed which, in our opinion, could have the effect of validating the proceedings sought to be instituted, or to confer upon the superintendent of schools jurisdiction or authority to call the election.

Writ denied.

Unless the testimony in support of the verdict is so inherently improbable as to demand its rejection the appellate court is bound by it, though the evidence, considered by itself, does not convince.

2. Criminal Law (§ 59*)—Aider—Abettor—"Aid"—"Abet."

To "aid" does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, but means to assist and supplement the efforts of another, while to "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator, and counsel and encouragement of the crime.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 289–291; vol. 1, p. 15.]

3. Homicide (§ 30*)—Principal and Accessory.

If, without the knowledge of accused, another feloniously makes an assault, and accused voluntarily assists in taking the life of the person assaulted, although he does not fire the fatal shot, both participants are equally guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 48–51; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

4. Homicide (§ 250*) — Manslaughter—Sufficiency of Evidence.

5. Criminal Law (§ 829*)—Instructions—Repetition.

In a prosecution for homicide where all the material elements of every degree of the crime included in the charge were clearly defined, and the jury instructed that unless they believed from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that deceased was killed by accused and by no other, or that he was killed by accused and another person who had conspired together to commit the crime, or that he was killed by some other person, while accused aided and abetted such other person in killing him, it will be their duty to acquit accused, a refusal to instruct that if no aiding and abetting by defendant in the homicide and no conspiracy between him and another had been shown, but if there existed a reasonable doubt as to which of them inflicted the wound from which deceased died, the accused was entitled to be acquitted, was not error.

6. Criminal Law (§ 1137*) — Homicide (§ 340*)—Appeal and Error—Harmless Error—Instructions.

In a prosecution for murder, in which there was no evidence that prior to the killing defendant and another had conspired together to commit the offense, a portion of an instruction relating to the conspiracy might well have been omitted, but accused cannot complain of the error in giving it, as he requested the instruction, and because it could not have prejudiced the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3009; Dec. Dig. § 1137;* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 715–720; Dec. Dig. § 340.*]

7. Homicide (§ 305*) — Instructions — Conspiracy.

In a prosecution for murder, in which accused, with another person, was implicated in the crime, it was not error to refuse an instruction that if there is not a conspiracy proven, then accused did not aid and abet, as the conspiracy implied an agreement to commit the crime as to which there was no evidence, while aiding and abetting requires only the actual participation in the act constituting the offense.

8. Homicide (§ 305*) — Necessity for Defining Conspiracy.

It was not necessary for the court in a prosecution for homicide, where accused and another were implicated, to define the term "conspiracy," where the court had instructed that unless the jury believe from the evidence that deceased was killed by defendant and another person, "who had conspired together to commit the crime," they were to acquit accused, as it must be assumed that the jury would understand that expression, and the expression used is not open to the construction that, if accused and another had formed a joint purpose of arresting lawbreakers such agreement would constitute them conspirators, as the instruction necessarily excludes any agreement except one to commit the crime for which accused was prosecuted.

9. Homicide (§ 298*)—Conflicting Instructions.

Accused and another were deputy fish and game commissioners, and had arrested deceased for violating the fish law, and deceased was killed in a struggle which took place between them immediately after the arrest. The court instructed that a peace officer may arrest any one committing a misdemeanor without a warrant, that in making the arrest or in preventing escape after the arrest the officer when resisted is not bound to retreat, but may use such physical force as is apparently necessary to effect the arrest or to subdue the efforts of the prisoner to escape, but he cannot in either case take the life of the prisoner unless it appears to him as a reasonable man from all the circumstances that the taking of the prisoner's life is necessary to prevent great bodily injury to himself or those acting with him, or to prevent the killing of himself or those acting with him. The court further instructed that accused as an officer of the law had a right in endeavoring to arrest and retain deceased if he had committed a public offense in his presence to use all the force necessary or that appeared to him as a reasonable man to be necessary to overcome all resistance even to the taking of life. Held, that the instructions were not conflicting.

10. Criminal Law (§ 823*)—Appeal and Error—Harmless Error—Instructions.

If the instructions were inaccurate or incomplete, they were rendered harmless by the remainder of the charge in which all the conditions concerning which the evidence relates and under which the right to take the life of deceased exists were fully expressed and the theory of the defense was fully presented to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992–1995; Dec. Dig. § 823;* Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 718, 719.]

11. Criminal Law (§§ 404, 1036*)—Admissibility of Evidence — Clothes of Deceased.

In a prosecution for homicide, it is not error to admit in evidence the remnants of the shirt worn by deceased at the time of the homicide, and if accused objected to its admission on the ground that it is not shown to be in the same condition as at the time it was removed from the body of deceased he should have called it to the attention of the court or interrogated the witnesses concerning it.

12. Criminal Law (§ 455*) — Opinion Evidence—Course of Bullet.

In a prosecution for homicide the sheriff who had inspected the body was competent to describe what he had seen, and was properly allowed to testify that the bullet entered the left side of deceased passing through his body and coming out on the right side, there being other evidence in the case showing that the bullet entered the left side.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1044; Dec. Dig. § 455.*]

13. Criminal Law (§ 454*) — Opinion Evidence—Age of Deceased.

In a prosecution for homicide, evidence by a witness who had known deceased for 25 years that deceased was 70 years of age is admissible, as age is provable by the inference of any competent observing witness.

14. Homicide (§ 338*)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Deceased, while fishing, immediately before the killing, was arrested by accused and another for violating the fish law. Held that, overruling an objection to a question to a witness as to whether a fishing ladder was in working order at the time the witness was there was not erroneous on the ground that the cross-examination and the introduction of evidence as to the condition of the fish ladder was prejudicial to accused because it would lead the jury to believe that fishing within the prohibited distance of a fishing ladder which was not in working order would not be a misdemeanor, that inference being obviated by an instruction that accused and the person acting with him were deputy fish commissioners, and while acting in such capacity placed deceased under arrest for the violation of the fish law committed in their presence.

15. Homicide (§ 163*)—Admissibility of Evidence—Character of Accused.

Deceased was killed by accused and another shortly after their arrest of deceased for violating the fish law. Held, that evidence of another person who had been arrested by accused and the person acting with him for violating the fish law that he had been properly treated by the officers was properly rejected in a prosecution for the homicide, as the conduct of accused on a different occasion is not pertinent evidence to disprove the commission of the crime for which he is being tried.

16. Witnesses (§ 388*)—Impeachment—Laying Foundation.

It is not error in a prosecution for homicide in cross-examining a witness who testified at the coroner's inquest to ask questions preliminary to impeachment as to his testimony at the coroner's inquest without producing the record, and asking the witness if at the coroner's examination he did not place the hand of another person upon a gun, and say that that was the manner in which deceased took hold of the gun, is not improper without showing the witness the record, where the record contained no photograph of the incident and could have afforded the witness no assistance.

17. Homicide (§ 338*) — Harmless Error — Cross-Examination—Instructions.

Deceased was killed shortly after his arrest by accused and another, acting as deputy fish and game commissioners, for violation of the fish law. In a prosecution for the homicide the man who was acting with accused was cross-examined as to whether he had his hand upon the shoulder of deceased when arrested, and also whether the fish ladder was in working order. Held, that such cross-examination was not prejudicial as creating the impression that the arrest of deceased was unlawful, where the court instructed that defendants were deputy commissioners, and while acting in such capacity placed deceased under arrest for violation of the fish law committed in their presence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

D. M. Bond was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. T. Matlock, Jr. (Braynard & Kimball and W. H. Orrick, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The defendant and one M. A. Carpenter were jointly charged with murder. They were tried separately, and the defendant Bond was convicted of manslaughter. He has appealed from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

On August 20, 1908, appellant and the said Carpenter, who were deputy fish and game commissioners, were at a certain point on Battle creek, in Tehama county, looking for an individual who, they had been informed, was violating the fish and game law. They walked up the creek and observed the deceased, an Indian named Robert Junior, engaged in unlawful fishing. The officers went away in search of the other party, but returned in a short while and placed the Indian under arrest. With Junior at the time were his wife, his daughter, and his granddaughter. There is a sharp conflict in the testimony as to what occurred at the scene of the arrest, but it is agreed that all the parties proceeded up the hill to the camp of the deceased. An entirely different account from the statement of the defendants as to what occurred at the camp is given by the Indians. According to the former, the history of the affair is about as follows: Upon their arrival the deceased looked around and about the wagon as though searching for something, the Indian woman taking her position at the rear wheel thereof, the evidence without conflict showing that while Junior was down at the creek fishing the Indian girls had placed his rifle under the wagon and covered it with a quilt. Deceased then went out to a tree and an outhouse, which were near, and immediately turned back, looked under a board and then started towards the wagon. Bond and Carpenter were watching him and the latter stated to the former: "I guess he hasn't got any gun." They then started towards their buggy, Bond being in advance about 15 feet. When they had gone about 20 feet they heard a commotion at the rear end of the wagon and looking back they saw the Indian woman shoving deceased away, and saying to him, "Oh, no; oh, no; go away." The deceased was crouching down to get under his wagon. Carpenter, who was carrying a fish basket containing fish which he had taken from deceased, threw it down and hastily returned to the wagon where Junior was endeavoring to get the gun which had been partially exposed. When Carpenter was within four or five feet of him the Indian ran around the right hind wheel of the wagon and got hold of the gun barrel, and Carpenter leveled his revolver at deceased and said to him: "Get away from there; let that gun alone; you are crazy." Deceased then straightened up, and suddenly grabbed Carpenter's pistol with his left hand, catching hold of Carpenter's arm and coat sleeve with his right hand. They then struggled for the possession of the revolver out towards a certain tree. During the time Carpenter fired a shot, and when they reached the tree he fired again and deceased fell away from him to the ground. When Carpenter drew his pistol the defendant Bond was about 20 feet away, and he hastily returned to the wagon, but did not arrive until after Carpenter had fired the first shot. Two other shots were fired about the same time, one by Carpenter and the other by Bond. At this time Carpenter was trying to lunge away from the Indian and they were still struggling together. Bond testified that he fired the shot "to make him (Junior) let loose of Carpenter. He was struggling with Carpenter for the possession of the gun at that time." One bullet shattered the left shoulder of the deceased and another passed through his body, entering from the side just above the nipple, the point of exit being three or four inches lower, causing his death a few seconds thereafter.

It is stoutly insisted by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of manslaughter. It is virtually conceded that there is testimony tending to show that the crime was committed, but the contention is that it must be disregarded on account of the want of credibility of the witnesses so testifying. In this connection we deem it necessary to refer only to the widow who was the principal witness for the people. It is contended that it appears she contradicted herself in important particulars, when we compare her testimony at the coroner's inquest, the preliminary examination, and the trial of the defendant. On two essential propositions, it is contended by appellant, she is entirely inconsistent, to wit: "As to whether deceased straightened up and turned around before stepping away from the wagon, or straightened up and stepped backwards from the wagon; also, as to whether the point of entrance of Bond's bullet was on the left or right side of deceased, she having at the time of the trial changed her testimony in both of these particulars from that given by her at both the coroner's inquest and the preliminary examination. In addition to this she has made the very startling and unnatural statement that defendant Bond, a deputy fish and game commissioner, deliberately and in cold blood fired the shot without saying a word or a moment's warning, and without any hostile demonstration on the part of deceased." But how can we say that the witness was not honestly mistaken in reciting some of the less important details of the occurrence and that her story was not substantially correct as to the vital facts surrounding the homicide? Is it not a matter of common knowledge that honest and intelligent witnesses differ radically in their statements of even less exciting events which they have witnessed and that they are often strangely uncertain as to details which seemingly would make a lasting impression upon the memory? We should not demand of this untutored Indian woman a more tenacious memory, a clearer impression of the surrounding circumstances attending an event of such excitement and trepidation or a more consistent statement of its various features than experience and observation demonstrate may be expected from more intelligent and favored observers of such an occurrence. And while it does seem somewhat incredible that a public officer should be guilty of such brutality as is described by this witness, it must be admittted that the annals of crime contain the record of many deeds equally cruel and inexplicable. But the complete answer to the whole contention of appellant readily suggesting itself is that the jurors are the exclusive judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight of the evidence, and unless the testimony in favor of the verdict is so inherently improbable as to demand its rejection appellate courts are bound by it. It is needless to add that it is not a question of whether the higher court is convinced by it of defendant's guilt or may be satisfied of defendant's innocence. The Indian woman did testify clearly and positively to facts from which only the inference can be drawn that the defendant committed at least the crime of manslaughter, unless it can be said that there is no sufficient evidence that defendant's shot caused the death of deceased. Indeed, giving full credit to her statements, and assuming that there was a sufficient showing that appellant's shot contributed to the fatal result, the conclusion would follow that there should have been a conviction of murder. But it is probable that, recognizing the not uncommon disposition of mankind to yield somewhat to the influence of interest or prejudice in giving testimony of important events of deep concern to the witness, the jury believed that all the witnesses to the homicide were not entirely candid, and while rejecting the theory that defendant maliciously killed the deceased, they were satisfied that he was not altogether blameless and should be convicted of the lesser offense.

At any rate, here is some of the testimony which we are asked to brush aside as unworthy of credence: "My husband, he pass around the wagon, and went over here where this table was and looked in the box and then come back along here, and I caught him by the arm and called his attention to this loose wagon nut. He was standing near this loose wagon nut when I had this conversation with him about the monkey wrench, and Carpenter was over there with his fish basket, and Bond was standing over here near the right hind wheel of the wagon. The time that I saw Bond shoot my husband was when my husband turned around and was facing over towards the oak tree, then my husband staggered back to the live oak tree, and was holding on to one of those cross bars, and he was there when Carpenter shot him. My husband didn't reach around to pick up the gun, and didn't offer to fight Bond, and didn't tell Bond that he would fight him, and didn't tell him that he would cut him or shoot him. He didn't have a club in his hand. He didn't have any rock to go and strike Mr. Bond. He didn't have any knife at all. He didn't offer to fight Mr. Bond at any time. I was right there all the time." The testimony of the girls as to what occurred at the camp in the main corroborates the statements of the widow.

Another circumstance to which attention is directed by appellant to show the improbability of the testimony of the Indian witnesses relates to the entry and exit of the bullet. It is argued that since the ground was comparatively level and Junior was admittedly much taller than the defendant, if the shot had been fired as related by said witness the bullet would have left the body above the point of its entry. But this is a matter of speculation, and it overlooks the familiar fact that the course of such wounds through the tissues of the body is often eccentric and apparently opposed to the recognized laws of physics. Besides, there was evidence from which the jury had a right to infer that the position of defendant, as testified to by the Indian witness, was considerably higher than the place upon which Junior was standing. But it is further insisted by appellant: (1) That "the evidence is insufficient to show that defendant fired the shot which caused the decedent's death"; and (2) it "totally fails to show that any conspiracy was entered into between Carpenter and defendant, or that the latter aided and abetted the former in the commission of the homicide."

As to the first proposition it is said: "Of the three shots fired, Carpenter fired two and defendant one. One of the three missed the decedent, another inflicted a flesh wound merely, while the third passed through the most vital parts of the body, causing instantaneous death." It is claimed that there is no evidence to show that the defendant fired this shot which passed through the body. In arguing the importance of this feature of the case appellant says: "Even had the authorship of the fatal shot been merely one of a series of incidental or secondary facts necessary to establish the defendant's connection with the affair, instead of being, as it was, the paramount issue in the case, it is certain that it would have had to be proved to a moral certainty, and in such a manner as to exclude every other reasonable hypothesis." People v. Phipps, 39 Cal. 333. But answering the last suggestion first, it should be sufficient to say that the rule announced is for the jury, and not for a reviewing court. If we can find any evidence in the record from which a rational inference might be drawn that defendant fired the fatal shot, our inquiry as to this feature can go no further. It is, of course, well settled that "If the evidence which bears against the defendant, considered by itself and without regard to conflicting evidence, is sufficient to support the verdict, the question ceases to be one of law of which alone this court has jurisdiction—and becomes one of fact upon which the decision of the jury and the trial court is final and conclusive." People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 Pac. 1069. There is this to be said, also, that it is a mere inference drawn by appellant from the evidence that one shot "inflicted a flesh wound merely," while another caused "instantaneous death." One of the witnesses testified that the shot which inflicted what appellant calls "a flesh wound merely" "broke the arm completely, but we couldn't find out if it had left the body at all, and I don't know whether that bullet that entered the arm went down into the heart or not." Another witness who declared on direct examination that one of the shots "pierced his arm about the center of the arm up near the shoulder, breaking his arm and lodged in the bone," said on cross-examination: "I didn't see whether that bullet went out or not. There was no indication of it. It might have gone down and lodged in the deceased's arm. I couldn't tell whether it stopped in a bone or went on into the body." No autopsy was held, and there is probably nothing in the respective positions of the participants at the time of the homicide or in the course of the bullets to afford any assistance in determining who fired the fatal shot. There is—it may be admitted—no certainty as to its source, and it cannot be positively affirmed which shot missed the deceased, which of the two, if only one, or whether both striking the body caused the fatal termination, or how long the deceased survived the fatal blow; but the question with which we are concerned is, Do we find in any of the circumstances detailed by any of the witnesses substantial support for the inference that appellant fired the fatal shot?

According to the transcript, the widow testified: "D. M. Bond shot my husband. Shot him right here. (Showing.) My husband, he hold him right here this way (showing), and he go back that way; and he hold this pole here, and he come across and he hold him here, and he do this way (illustrating by holding hands on body), 'Oh!' And he do that way. (Showing.)" It thus appears that the witness illustrated the actions of Junior after the first shot was fired by appellant. While, manifestly, we have an incomplete reproduction of those movements, there is sufficient in the transcript to support the inference that the Indian was seriously wounded. The convulsive movements of the body and the position in which the hands were placed apparently described by the witness, may have carried to the jury the conviction that the shot fired by Bond was the one that passed through the body and caused the death of the deceased. We cannot say, in view of the record, that such conclusion is unwarranted. According to the witness, the question of the infliction of the fatal wound narrows itself to two shots—one fired by appellant and the other by Carpenter—since she declares that the last shot was fired into the air when she struck Carpenter's pistol while her husband was lying on the ground. It is quite probable that both of these shots which took effect contributed to the death of Junior, but, at any rate, the solution of the question as to who caused his death must be found in the circumstances detailed by the witnesses, and it cannot be said that the inference which connects appellant with the fatal result is unsupported.

But again, it will not be disputed that the jury had a legal right to reject a portion of the testimony of the defendants and also of the witnesses for the prosecution. The jury, basing their conclusions upon the evidence, may have adopted substantially the following theory: That the Indian assaulted Carpenter at the creek, as testified to by the latter; that defendants harbored resentment in consequence of Junior's violent conduct; that, after arriving at the camp, Carpenter, without even the appearance of justification, drew his pistol and made an effort to shoot the deceased; that the latter seized the pistol and while the two were struggling for its possession Bond, understanding the situation, deliberately fired a shot which contributed to the fatal result and caused the Indian to relax his hold upon the weapon and thereupon Carpenter fired the last shot, which was followed immediately by the death of Junior. Upon this theory it could not be doubted for a moment that appellant could be convicted properly as an aider and abettor of the crime. "The word 'aid' does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the definition of the word 'abet' includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator, and counsel and encouragement in the crime." People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 492, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50. Or, as defined in State v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25, 15 South. 722, 737, cited by appellant: "The legal definition of 'aid' is not different from its meaning in common parlance. It means to assist, 'to supplement the efforts of another.' Rap. & L. Law Dic. p. 43. 'Abet' is a French word compounded of the two words 'a' and 'beter'—to bait or excite an animal; and Rapalje and Lawrence thus define it: 'To abet is to incite or encourage a person to commit a crime. An abettor is a person who, being present or in the neighborhood, incites another to commit a crime and thus becomes a principal in the offense.'" It would not be necessary for Carpenter to have communicated his purpose to appellant to make the latter chargeable as a principal. If, with the knowledge of Bond, Carpenter feloniously made the assault and the former voluntarily assisted in taking the life of the Indian, although he did not fire the fatal shot, both would be equally guilty. It would be absurd to say that if Bond knowingly contributed to the death of Junior he would not be an aider and abettor of whatever crime was committed. There is nothing opposed to this view in the decisions cited by appellant. For instance, in Walker v. State, 29 Tex. App. 621, 16 S. W. 548, the Court of Appeals of Texas said: "But again, in order to hold the defendant a principal where he did not participate in the actual infliction of the fatal wound, it is absolutely necessary for the state to show that he knew of Shearer's intent to commit the murder or fire the fatal shot, and that knowing this intent on the part of Shearer he aided it or encouraged him by acts or words to do so." Or, as it is stated in Lyons v. State, 30 Tex. App. 642, 18 S. W. 416: "If there be no conspiracy or agreement, each would be held responsible for his own acts. But, though there was no conspiracy to commit an offense, still if one commits an offense, and the accused was present and knew the intention of the other and aids by acts or encourages by words or gestures the person engaged in the commission of the offense, he would be guilty of the offense committed. But he would be guilty only to the extent of his knowledge or for the natural and reasonable consequences of the acts aided or encouraged by him."

There can be no controversy about the doctrine announced in Wilson v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 24 S. W. 409, and other similar cases cited by appellant, that "If two or more persons conceive the intention at the same time to strike B. without previous concert, and do strike him without knowing the intention of the other, each would be responsible for his own acts, but would not be an aider or abettor of the other. To apply this rule to this case, if appellant, without concert with Sam, and without knowledge of his intentions, conceived the intention to and did strike Bagley with a rock about the time that Sam stabbed him, he would not be responsible for said act; nor would he, in striking Bagley, be aiding or abetting Sam in his acts. But, notwithstanding this, if appellant assaulted deceased with the rock he would be responsible for the homicide; or, if the blow with the rock contributed materially to the death of Bagley, he would also be responsible."

Appellant's contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence cannot be upheld, therefore, for the reason that a rational conclusion may be drawn therefrom—either that he unjustifiedly fired the fatal shot, or wrongfully contributed to the death of the deceased, or that Carpenter made a felonious attempt to take the Indian's life, and appellant, with knowledge of such assault, aided in the consummation of the unlawful purpose and therefore became an aider and abettor of the crime.

Appellant complains because the court refused to charge the jury "That if no aiding and abetting by the defendant in the homicide, and no conspiracy between him and Carpenter had been shown, and if there existed a reasonable doubt as to which of them inflicted the wound from which the deceased died, the defendant was entitled to be acquitted." Nothing, however, seems to have been omitted that was necessary for the complete information of the jury. All the material elements of every degree of crime included in the charge were clearly defined, and the jury were instructed that, "Unless you believe from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that Robert Junior was killed by the defendant D. M. Bond and by no other person, or that he was killed by said defendant and another person who had conspired together to commit the crime, or that he was killed by some other person while said defendant aided and abetted such other person in killing him, it will be your duty to acquit the defendant." The foregoing was given at the request of the defendant and embodied a recognition of the three aspects of guilty participation as a principal in the commission of a crime which are described in section 31 of the Penal Code, as where one "directly commits the act constituting the offense, aids and abets its commission, or not being present has advised and encouraged its commission." There is no evidence in the record that prior to the killing the defendants "had conspired together to commit the offense," and therefore that portion of the instruction might well have been omitted, but appellant cannot complain, because he requested it, and, besides, it is clear that it could not have prejudiced the jury. It may be said, also, that it was not error for the court to refuse the instruction that "If there is not a conspiracy proven then the defendant did not aid and abet, and if you do not believe beyond a reasonable doubt that Bond's shot killed Robert Junior, then I instruct you that the defendant Bond is entitled to a verdict of acquittal." "Conspiracy" implies an agreement to commit the crime, while to "aid and abet" requires actual participation in the act constituting the offense. It is therefore manifest that one may "aid and abet" without having previously entered into a conspiracy to commit the crime.

The court declined to give to the jury the definition of conspiracy. There seems to have been no necessity for such definition. The only instruction in which the term appears is the one to which we have already referred, and we must assume that the average juror would know what the court meant by the expression "had conspired together to commit the crime." It is not open to the imputation, as claimed by appellant, "that the fact that the defendant and Carpenter had formed a joint or common purpose of arresting lawbreakers and of enforcing in a lawful manner the law passed for the protection of fish would have made them conspirators and liable for the acts of each other while in the execution of that purpose." The instruction, by necessary implication, excludes from consideration any agreement except one to commit "the crime." The "crime" referred to is clearly the felonious killing of the deceased. It is claimed that appellant was entitled to an affirmative charge upon the subject covered by said instruction, and Phipps v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. R. 608, 31 S. W. 657, is cited, wherein it is stated: "The charge of the court instructs the jury who are principals, and throughout, on behalf of the state, in instructing the jury as to each grade of the offense, the jury are told, if you believe that M. V. Phipps either alone or acting with Tom Phipps as charged in the indictment did certain acts, then he would be guilty of the offense, etc. But nowhere in the charge are the jury instructed affirmatively if Tom Phipps killed the deceased and the defendant did not act or utter any word in aid or encouragement of said Tom Phipps, then he would not be guilty of any offense. Inasmuch as the evidence in this case, as before stated, fails to show that M. V. Phipps did any act in aid of said homicide, at the time, such a charge was pertinent and was called for, and should have been given by the court in an affirmative and substantive manner." But here the jury were told unequivocally that they must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that one of these several conditions existed or else they must acquit. It is difficult to understand how the instruction could have more positively "affirmed" the duty of the people to establish one of these conditions to justify conviction.

It is further claimed that the instructions upon the question what would constitute justifiable homicide when committed by an officer in making an arrest were confusing and conflicting. The instructions complained of were: "A peace officer may arrest any one committing a misdemeanor in his presence, without a warrant. In the making of the arrest, or in preventing an escape after the arrest, the officer, when resisted by the offender, is not bound to retreat, but may use such physical force as is apparently necessary on the one hand to effect the arrest by overcoming the resistance he encounters, or on the other to subdue the efforts of the prisoner to escape, but he cannot in either case take the life of the prisoner, unless it appears to him as a reasonable man, from all the circumstances, that the taking of the life of the prisoner is necessary to prevent the infliction of great bodily injury upon himself or upon those acting with or under him, or to prevent the killing of himself or those acting with or under him," and again: "The defendant as an officer of the law, had a right, in endeavoring to arrest and retain the said Robert Junior, if said Robert Junior had committed a public offense in his presence, to use all the force that was necessary, or that appeared to him as a reasonable man to be necessary, to overcome all resistance, even to the taking of life, and if he use no more force than was reasonably necessary, or that appeared to him as a reasonable man to be necessary, to then and there overcome any resistance that was being made to him, he should be acquitted," etc.

The contention is that these instructions are irreconcilably conflicting inasmuch as in the former the jury were told that "the defendant was not justified in killing the decedent merely because this was necessary in order to arrest him," and in the latter that "if the decedent had committed a public offense in the defendant's presence the latter had a right 'to use all the force that was necessary or appeared to him as a reasonable man to be necessary to overcome all resistance, even to the taking of life.'"

The distinction made by appellant is, we think, more fanciful than real. We must, of course, read the whole of the instructions together, and so considered there is no conflict whatever. The proposition of law expressed in both of these instructions is that where the officer is authorized to make an arrest he may use whatever force is necessary to accomplish his purpose and overcome whatever resistance may be offered. Unless the resistance, however, should be of such a nature that it appeared to the officer as a reasonable man that he, or any one acting with or under him, was in danger of receiving great bodily injury, he would not be justified in killing the prisoner. The reason is plain; in such case he could overcome the resistance without killing the prisoner. A resistance that does not threaten great bodily injury can and should be overcome without a homicide. Therefore he may use all the force "that appears to him as a reasonable man to be necessary to overcome all resistance, even to the taking of life," as stated in the second quoted instruction, but this claim of resistance is not to be a mere subterfuge; the resistance must be such as appears to the officer likely to inflict great bodily injury upon himself or those acting with him. Otherwise there is no necessity to take life and it cannot be permitted.

But if there were any inconsistency or confusion in the quotations already made, it is entirely removed by the concluding portion of the second instruction, which we deem it unnecessary to set out in full. Even if we were to concede that the court used an inaccurate or incomplete expression in the foregoing we would still be required to hold that it was without prejudice, as when all the charge is considered we find that all the conditions concerning which the evidence relates and under which the right to take the life of deceased existed were fully and completely expressed. People v. Turpin, 10 Cal. App. 526, 102 Pac. 680. The theory of the defense, as formulated by counsel for appellant, was fully presented to the jury in the instructions, and we see nothing to criticise therein.

The court did not err in admitting in evidence the remnants of the shirt worn by deceased at the time of the homicide. It had been in possession of the sheriff from the time it was removed from the body, and the only objection made was that the proper foundation had not been laid. If appellant was relying upon the claim that it was not shown to be in the same condition as at the time it was removed, he should have called that to the attention of the court or interrogated the witness concerning it. It was probably an unnecessary piece of evidence. There is nothing in the record to show that there was anything in the appearance of the cloth to throw any particular light upon the tragedy, but it is clear as anything can be that we cannot say that the introduction of the fragment of the shirt influenced the jury against appellant. As far as we are advised, the effect could have been no different if a portion of any other garment worn by the deceased had been received in evidence. The case is not at all similar to the one cited from Mississippi, where the skull of the deceased was produced without sufficient preliminary proof.

Appellant assigns error in the ruling of the court "allowing Sheriff Boyd to testify that the bullet entered the left side of deceased, passed through his body and came out on the right side." The objection was that the "proper foundation had not been laid and the witness was not properly qualified." The witness had inspected the body, and was competent to describe what he had seen. If it should be said that the position of the place of entry and of exit involved expert knowledge, or that it was not a proper subject of expert testimony, the complete answer is that the other evidence shows without conflict that the bullet entered the left side, and this is the theory upon which appellant assails vigorously the testimony of the Indian woman. That the deceased was shot to death appears without controversy, and the answer to the said question, in view of the conceded facts, is favorable to appellant.

One Bramlett, a witness for the prosecution, was permitted to give his opinion that deceased was 70 years of age. The rule seems to be that "age is provable by the inference of any competent observing witness. This is true both in the case of human beings, whether they be adults, minors, or children, and in the case of animals or inanimate objects." 17 Cyc. 98. The witness showed he was qualified by testifying that he had known the deceased for something like 25 years. The jury, though, probably attached no importance to his testimony, as it was very much weakened on cross-examination, and the widow testified that her husband was strong enough to whip either of the defendants.

The court overruled the objection to the question asked in the cross-examination of the witness Pedlar: "Do you know whether that fish ladder was in working order at the time you were there?" The contention of appellant is that "this cross-examination and the introduction of evidence as to the condition of the fish ladder must have prejudiced the defendant's case to the extent of leading the jury to believe that fishing within the prohibited distance of a fish ladder which was not in working order would not be a misdemeanor." But, as pointed out by the Attorney General, this inference was obviated by the instruction of the court that the defendants were deputy fish commissioners, and while acting in such capacity "they placed deceased under arrest for the violation of the game and fish laws of California committed in their presence."

One Anderson had been arrested by defendants on August 19th for violating the fish law, and by him appellant sought to show that he had been properly treated by the officers. The court rightly sustained an objection to the proffered testimony. So far as we are informed, the conduct of defendant upon a different occasion has never been held pertinent evidence to disprove the commission of a crime of which he is being tried. If appellant desired to have the jury apprised as to his character or reputation in the community for the trait involved in the charge, the statute provides how that should be done. It is needless to say that the said attempt did not meet the requirement of the law.

Appellant complains because the court, without requiring the record to be shown the witness, permitted the cross-examination of the codefendant Carpenter as to his failure to testify at the coroner's inquest and the preliminary examination concerning certain matters related at the trial. The questions were: "I will ask you, Mr. Carpenter, if at the coroner's inquest, when you were detailing this affair before the inquest, if you testified to anything before the jury about hearing voices upon the bank?" and "Now, I will ask you if at the coroner's inquest you testified to anything about the peddler fishing there?" and "Now, I will ask you if both at the preliminary examination of this case and at the former trial of this case, if you didn't place my hand upon this gun and testify that that was the manner in which the Indian grabbed it?" As to the first two, they were merely preliminary for the purpose of impeachment and were properly allowed, although the transcript of the testimony of the witness was not first shown him. People v. Hart, 153 Cal. 261, 94 Pac. 1042. It is also clear that the matter is of so little importance and the answers were so satisfactory that no prejudice could possibly have resulted. It is not contended that the incident referred to in the last question was photographed, and we must assume that the record would have afforded no assistance. As to this, it may be said also that no unfavorable inference could have been drawn from the explanation of the witness.

Witness Carpenter was cross-examined as to whether he put his hand upon the shoulder of deceased when arresting him, and also whether the fish ladder was in working order. Appellant contends that this may have created in the minds of the jury an erroneous impression that the arrest of deceased was unlawful. But, as we have seen, this was obviated by the instruction given in reference to the arrest. The objection that they were not proper cross-examination to the questions asked of the defendant as to an agreement to see the deceased and his family home, and in reference to the distance from the right hind wheel of the wagon to the tree, was properly overruled. Besides, they related to trivial matters and the answers could not possibly have influenced the result.

The record has received our careful attention to the end that no injustice might be done, but, in our opinion, it cannot be said that the appellant did not have a fair trial or that there is not substantial support for the verdict.

To interfere with the conclusion of the jury and of the trial court would be, as it appears to us, a violation of the well-established principles governing the action of appellate tribunals.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Application by Henry I. Kowalsky for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of Santa Cruz County and Hon. Lucas F. Smith, presiding judge thereof. Writ granted.

Rothchild, Golden & Rothchild, for petitioner. Lent & Humphrey, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an original proceeding brought in this court to obtain a writ prohibiting the superior court of Santa Cruz county and the judge thereof from proceeding to hear or grant a motion made by the administrator of the estate of Margaret McLaughlin, deceased, for an order setting aside the allowance and approval of a claim of plaintiff against said estate theretofore made by the judge of said court. An alternative writ was issued, and the defendant made return thereto both by demurrer and answer.

From the record before us it appears that the plaintiff on the 25th day of June, 1907, presented to Frank McLaughlin, the then administrator of the estate of said Margaret McLaughlin, deceased, his claim for the sum of $1,955.49 upon a promissory note, executed by said Frank McLaughlin and indorsed by said Margaret McLaughlin; that said claim was approved by said Frank McLaughlin as such administrator on said day, and thereafter, on the same day, the claim was approved and allowed by the judge of said court and duly filed. Thereafter said Frank McLaughlin having died without completing the administration of said estate, Samuel N. Rucker was appointed administrator of said estate, and thereafter, to wit, on the 9th day of December, 1909, said Rucker, as such administrator filed and presented to the court a "full report and account of the administration of the estate of Margaret McLaughlin, deceased, from the commencement thereof to the 1st day of October, 1909"; that thereafter, on the 20th day of December, 1909, after due notice given, the said account was duly "settled, approved, and allowed." This order has not been attacked by appeal or otherwise; at least the record before us discloses no such attack. Neither has it been suggested in the oral argument or otherwise that an attack has as yet been made upon the order settling and approving said account. On the 2d day of March, 1910, said Rucker, as such administrator, gave notice of a motion for an order of the court setting aside the allowance made by the judge of said court June 25, 1907, of plaintiff's claim. It is the jurisdiction of the court to entertain and grant such motion that it attacked by this proceeding.

Defendant suggests that, if the court should grant the motion, plaintiff would have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal under section 963, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc., but a reading of said section discloses that no appeal is given thereby from an order vacating the allowance of a claim against an estate. We have been cited to no other provision of the law giving plaintiff any remedy against an order setting aside the allowance of a claim against an estate, and we know of none. Therefore, if defendant is proceeding without jurisdiction in the matter in controversy, plaintiff is entitled to the writ as prayed for.

Plaintiff claims that in no event may the administrator by motion made more than six months after the allowance of a claim procure the setting aside of such allowance; and that in the case at bar the allowance of plaintiff's claim has been placed beyond attack by any one by the order settling and approving the administrator's account, in which it is claimed this claim was exhibited as an allowed claim. In reply to the first proposition defendants cite Barker's Estate, 26 Mont. 279, 67 Pac. 942, and Cone v. Crum, 52 Tex. 348. Neither case is in point. In Barker's Estate the attack was by the widow of the decedent against a claim that had been allowed in favor of the administrator, and the attack was made upon the hearing of his account. Cone v. Crum decides that the administrator may maintain an action in equity, brought within a short time after the allowance of the claim, where the allowance was made by mistake and through inadvertence.

However, it is not necessary for us to pass upon the question as to whether or not the administrator may under any circumstances take action to set aside the allowance of a claim against the estate, for we think that by the allowance of the account presented by the administrator December 9, 1909, the claim of plaintiff passed into the category of claims "passed upon on the settlement of a former account" (section 1636, Code Civ. Proc.), and was thereby conclusively established against all persons interested in the estate, in the absence of any appeal from such order or attack thereon under section 473, Code Civ. Proc.

In all material respects the facts of this case are like those in Estate of McDougald, 146 Cal. 191, 79 Pac. 878, where it was said: "When an account is presented for settlement after due notice, as in this case, any creditor or person interested may contest the same, and may object to any item of charge or credit, or to any claim allowed and not passed upon on the settlement of any previous account, and may thereupon have his objection settled and determined. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1635, 1636. The settlement of an account and the allowance thereof by the court is conclusive against all persons in any way interested in the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1637. One whose claim has been rejected and who is prosecuting a suit upon it against the estate is a person interested who may make such a contest, and who is concluded by the settlement of a previous account. The first account of the administratrix set forth her claim as one of the allowed claims against the estate. This was sufficient to notify all persons interested that the validity of this claim would be determined and established by the settlement of the account as rendered. No objection or contest was made. The account was settled, allowed, and approved as rendered, and thereupon this claim, with the others mentioned in the list, passed into the class of claims passed upon in the settlement of a former account (section 1636) was conclusively established against all persons in any way interested, and its validity was not thereafter subject to attack upon the hearing of any subsequent account. A judgment or order of a court having jurisdiction is conclusive of all matters involved which might have been disputed at the hearing, although no objection was in fact made. This rule applies to the settling of accounts the same as to any other proceeding."

In the report containing the account presented by the administrator to the court December 9, 1909, three allowed claims are set forth. One of the three is the claim of plaintiff. As to this claim, it is there said: "That, after the said time for presentation of claims against said estate had fully expired, the claim of H. I. Kowalsky was presented for $1,955.47, claimed to be due on the promissory note of said Frank McLaughlin, such note purporting to have been indorsed by said Margaret McLaughlin by her writing her name across the back thereof at the time of its execution, to wit, November 30, 1904; that said last-mentioned note was made payable one year after date, to wit on November 30, 1905, and said claim therefor states that when said note became due, viz., November 30, 1905, the same was presented by claimant to and payment demanded of the maker, said Frank McLaughlin, who failed to pay the same; that said claimant thereupon, after presentation as aforesaid, and upon said 30th day of November, 1905, gave notice in writing to said Margaret McLaughlin of the said demand and the failure of said Frank McLaughlin to pay said note; that said Margaret McLaughlin's death had occurred prior to the said maturity of said note, to wit, on said 16th day of November, 1905; that it is further stated by claimant in his verification of said claim that he had been a resident of New York, and had not been in the state of California for more than two years continuously preceding the 23d day of April, 1907, the date of such verification; that said claim was allowed against said estate and filed therein on the 25th day of June, 1907, for the amount stated in such claim."

The statute requires that "every account must exhibit all debts which have been presented and allowed during the period embraced in the account." Section 1628, Code Civ. Proc. The setting forth of the particulars of this claim, and the manner of its presentation and allowance, was certainly an exhibit of the debt thus presented and allowed. It was not at all necessary that a separate list be made of the claims allowed, as is sometimes done. The statute only requires that the debts allowed be exhibited in the account. In this case the debts were listed and fully set forth in the report, which likewise set forth the amount of money received and expenses incurred and money expended. Everything done, including moneys received and expended, and expenses incurred but not paid, and debts allowed was submitted in the form of a report to the court. The report and account which is annexed to defendant's answer herein, purports to be "the full report and account of the administration of the estate of Margaret McLaughlin, deceased, from the commencement thereof to the 1st day of October, 1909." This particular claim and the action of the administrator and of the judge in allowing and approving it were thus presented for the final action of the court upon settlement of the account. Although the court found all the matters stated in the report to be true, which includes the statement that Margaret McLaughlin had died before the maturity of the Kowalsky note, the court approved the account as rendered. This was an approval of all allowed debts exhibited with the account, and included the claim of plaintiff, which thus passed beyond attack except by an appeal from such order, or other direct attack thereon. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1737, 473; Estate of McDougald, 146 Cal. 191, 79 Pac. 878.

The court therefore has no jurisdiction to grant the motion of the administrator to set aside the allowance of the claim and the writ must issue as prayed for.

It is so ordered.

HOUSE v. PONCE. (Civ. 753.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 43*)—OWNERSHIP—ALLEGATION OF—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Plaintiff in a suit to quiet title, having alleged ownership and right to possession, can recover only on showing title in himself, and cannot otherwise disturb even the possession of defendant, irrespective of whether defendant's paper title is perfect or not.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 224*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASER—NOTICE.

The grantee of one who refused to give any deed but a quitclaim, who received no consideration even for that, and who, in fact, had conveyed away the property and claimed no interest therein, was not within Civ. Code, § 1214, providing that every conveyance, except a lease for not more than one year, shall be void against any subsequent purchaser in good faith and for value, whose conveyance is first duly recorded.

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit to quiet title, evidence by the person under whom plaintiff claimed that he only signed a quitclaim deed to plaintiff's grantor, that he received no consideration, and that at the time he did not own the property, having disposed of the lots and given deeds for them, was properly admitted, it not being in the nature of declarations tending to impeach the title which he conveyed by the quitclaim deed, but was for the purpose of showing that he in effect had nothing to convey, and therefore conveyed nothing.

Action by A. E. House against J. P. Ponce. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Jarman, for appellant. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought for the purpose of quieting plaintiff's alleged title to certain lots described in the complaint as being in College Terrace in Santa Clara county. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll accompanied by a bill of exceptions.

The complaint alleged that the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the lots, and that defendant was in possession thereof, claiming some interest or estate therein. The answer denied the ownership of the plaintiff, and alleged the possession and right to the possession of the said lots in defendant. It further alleged that said lots were sold to the state of California on the 26th day of June, 1896, for delinquent taxes assessed and levied thereon for the year 1895; that thereafter, on the 27th day of August, 1901, in pursuance of such sale, a deed to said lots was duly executed by the tax collector to the state of California; that thereafter, on the 20th day of January, 1905, the state sold said lots according to law to defendant, who was the highest bidder, for the sum of $181, and, in pursuance of such sale, the tax collector executed and delivered to defendant a deed to said premises, which deed defendant has placed of record. The court found that the plaintiff was not at any time the owner nor entitled to the possession of said lots; that the defendant was the owner, in the possession, and entitled to the possession thereof. The court also found that all the proceedings as set forth in the answer from the said assessment up to and including the execution of the deed to defendant were regular, and that the tax deed was valid and conveyed a valid title to defendant.

Plaintiff contends that there were several irregularities in regard to the assessment, the notice of sale, the manner of sale, and the amount thereof sufficient to justify us in holding the tax deed void. In view of the conclusion, we have reached it is not necessary to examine nor to discuss the several alleged informalities in the proceedings by which the tax deed was finally executed and delivered to defendant. It is well settled that the plaintiff, having alleged that he was the owner of the lots and entitled to the possession thereof, was required to prove that he was such owner, and the burden was upon him to make such proof. He was entitled to relief only upon showing title in himself, for, if he had no title, he could not disturb even the possession of defendant, and it was not his business as to whether or not defendant's paper title was perfect. Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 195, 29 Pac. 491; Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 25 Pac. 407, 22 Am. St. Rep. 243; Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 819; McGrath v. Wallace, 116 Cal. 549, 48 Pac. 719.

It may be conceded that at the time of the assessment and also at the time of the sale to the state the lots were owned by one Alexander Gordon. The record shows that plaintiff in proof of his title introduced in evidence a deed of said Gordon to one Farley, followed by a deed from said Farley to plaintiff. It does not appear that the deeds were read in evidence; nor is there anything as to the date or contents other than the statement that the deeds conveyed the property described in the amended complaint. This statement, of course, can mean nothing more than that the deeds were correct in form and purported to convey the premises as described in the amended complaint. Defendant called Gordon as a witness, and he testified that about February, 1906, said Farley came to the witness' house claiming to represent some one else, and wanted to get a deed to the lots; that Farley presented a bargain and sale deed, which witness declined to sign, but he finally, after some conversation, signed a quitclaim deed to Farley; that witness received no consideration for the deed; that witness at the time he made said quitclaim deed to Farley did not own the lots, but had conveyed two of them to W. J. Walsh in May, 1888, two of them to John Robinson in April, 1889, and the other two to Levi Van Fossen in 1893; that witness had disposed of all of said lots and given deeds to them prior to 1895. These deeds, although it does not appear that they were recorded, were good as to all persons save a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee in good faith and for a valuable consideration (section 1214, Civ. Code). The evidence of Gordon is not contradicted, and plainly shows that no title was in him when he conveyed to Farley. There is not a word of evidence even tending to show that plaintiff paid any consideration for the lots, or that he was a bona fide purchaser. The fact that Gordon refused to make any other than a quitclaim deed was notice to Farley, and sufficient to put him upon inquiry. The grantee in said quitclaim deed assumed all risks as to title. He took, and knew he was taking, only such title as was left in Gordon. There being no title in Gordon, nothing was conveyed. There is no explanation as to why the plaintiff procured the quitclaim deed. If he did it for the purpose of acquiring a standing upon which to come into court and attack the defendant's tax title, such purpose does not commend itself to a court of equity. The defendant, being in possession under a deed from the state, regular in form, for which he paid a valuable consideration, and thus enabled the state and county to collect the taxes which had been assessed upon the lots, cannot be disturbed for light or trivial reasons, or by a stranger who has nothing but a quitclaim deed from one who had no title. The law aims to do justice and prevent wrongs. One claiming its affirmative aid to quiet his title must prove such title, and not rely upon a mere piece of paper made without consideration by one who had no title.

The testimony of Gordon was properly admitted. It was not in the nature of declarations tending to impeach the title which he had conveyed by the quitclaim deed, but was for the purpose of showing that he in effect had nothing to convey, and conveyed nothing at the time he made the quitclaim deed.

The judgment is affirmed.

MANNIX v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 5,582.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 480*)—Stay—Authority to Grant—Authority of Superior Court—Amount of Security.

The superior court does not have general power to stay execution after an appeal is perfected from its judgment, and it would not have authority to stay execution on a judgment for $4,000 upon the filing of an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $2,666.66.

2. Prohibition (§ 20*)—Grounds—Want of Jurisdiction—Sufficiency of Application.

A writ of prohibition will not be issued by the Supreme Court to prevent a stay of execution which it is claimed that the superior court is about to order after the perfecting of an appeal from its judgment, where the application does not show the filing of an undertaking on appeal and an application to stay proceedings.

In Bank. Application for prohibition by Thomas Mannix against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Fransisco. Application denied.

Naylor & Riggins, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The application to amend the petition for a writ of prohibition is denied.

After an appeal is perfected from a judgment of the superior court, that court does not have general power to stay the execution. It may be admitted, for the purposes of this case, that if, upon such appeal, an undertaking on appeal in double the amount is given as provided in section 942, Code Civ. Proc., the superior court would have power to compel the sheriff to respect and observe the stay of execution thereupon given by the statute. We cannot suppose, however, even if it has such power, that the superior court would order the sheriff to stay proceedings on an execution to enforce a judgment for $4,000 upon the filing of an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $2,666.66. Such an order would doubtless be without authority. But the proposed amendment shows that no such undertaking has been filed, and hence that the lower court cannot be about to order a stay of the proceedings as apprehended, at least until such inadequate undertaking has been filed and an application for such stay of proceedings has been made to it. Upon the facts stated, the case does not call for the interposition of the authority of this court by way of prohibition.

1. Corporations (§ 471*)—Indebtedness—Creation—Constitutional Provisions.

Const. art. 12, § 11, making void all fictitious indebtedness of a corporation, and providing that the bonded debt thereof shall not be increased except in pursuance of the general law, nor without the consent of the holders of the majority of the stock at a meeting duly called on notice, does not apply to a corporation free from bonded debt, which proposes to create a bonded debt, and does not require that a stockholders' meeting shall be held for the purpose of creating such debt or that notice shall be given, but the bonded debt may be created as authorized by Civ. Code, § 359, by the unanimous vote of the directors and the written consent of the holders of two-thirds of the subscribed capital stock without the formality of a stockholders' meeting called for that purpose on notice.

2. Corporations (§ 450*)—Bonded Indebtedness—Filing of Certificate with Secretary of State—Statutes.

Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting the directors of a corporation from creating any debt beyond the subscribed capital stock, does not justify the Secretary of State in refusing to file a certificate required by section 359, subd. 8, showing the adoption by a corporation of a resolution to create a bonded debt, on the ground that the proposed debt exceeds the subscribed stock, since the proposed debt is not created until the bonds are issued and delivered to third persons for a valuable consideration, and whether the stock is subscribed at or before the adoption of the resolution to create the bonded debt or filing of the copy of the certificate is immaterial, provided a sufficient amount of stock is subscribed as the bonds are sold.

William B. Bosley, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for Secretary of State.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff, by original proceeding in this court, asked for a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, as Secretary of State, to receive and file in his office a duly certified copy of a certificate duly made by the plaintiff for the purpose of creating a bonded debt.

The plaintiff is a private corporation, duly organized under the laws of this state. Its authorized capital stock is $2,000,000, divided into 20,000 shares of the par value of $100 each. Only 25 shares have been subscribed for or issued. By proceedings duly taken, in accordance with the provisions of the fifth subdivision of section 359 of the Civil Code, the corporation resolved to create a bonded debt of $1,500,000. A certificate showing the due adoption of this resolution, and all the facts required to be stated therein by subdivision 7 of said section, was duly executed by the proper officers of the corporation, and, as required in subdivision 8 of said section, it was filed in the office of the county clerk of the county in which the original articles of the corporation were filed. A copy of this certificate, duly certified by said clerk, was presented to the defendant, in his official capacity as Secretary of State, and he was requested to file the same, as required by said eighth subdivision. He refused to do so, assigning as his reason that, by section 309 of the Civil Code, corporations are forbidden to create any debts beyond their subscribed capital stock, and that it would violate section 11 of article 12 of the Constitution.

The aforesaid section of the Constitution merely declares that all fictitious indebtedness of a corporation shall be void, and that the bonded debt thereof shall not be increased, except in pursuance of a general law, nor without the consent of the holders of a majority of its stock, at a meeting duly called upon 60 days' notice. No fictitious debt is here proposed, nor any "increase" of the bonded debt. There is no existing bonded debt and the corporation proposes to "create" one, not to increase a bonded indebtedness already in existence. The statute (Civ. Code § 359) authorizes such creation of a bonded debt by the unanimous vote of all the directors and the written consent of the holders of two-thirds of the subscribed or issued capital stock, but without the formality or delay of a meeting of the stockholders called for that purpose upon 60 days' notice. The Constitution does not require that such meeting be held or that such notice be given, in order to create an original bonded debt, such as is here contemplated, and we do not think it applies to this case.

Section 309 of the Civil Code declares that: "The directors of corporations" must not "create any debts beyond their subscribed capital stock." If the bonded debt proposed could be considered as "created" when this certificate is filed by the Secretary of State, this section might justify the defendant's refusal to receive and file it. But no such bonded debt is yet created, nor would its creation be accomplished by such filing of the certificate. All that has been accomplished so far, and all that could be accomplished by the filing of the certificate, would be the mere authorization to the officers of the company to prepare, sign, and seal bonds of the company to the stated number and amount, ready for sale and delivery whenever such delivery may become lawful by reason of subscriptions for the required amount of stock. The debt represented by any bond would not exist nor be created until the bond is issued by the company; that is, delivered to a third person for a valuable consideration. Whether such stock is subscribed at or before the adoption of the resolution to create the bonded debt, or the filing of the copy of the certificate with the Secretary, is immaterial, provided a sufficient amount of stock is subscribed as the bonds are sold and delivered. The fact that such stock has not yet been subscribed is no ground for the refusal of the Secretary to file the certified copy of the certificate. For these reasons, the peremptory writ of mandate was issued.

1. Novation (§ 4*)—Substitution of New Agreement.

Where by a written contract plaintiff sold land to defendant, with the agreement that plaintiff should receive one-third of profits above that amount when the property could be sold for as much as $19,000, and subsequently defendant asserted that she would not take less than $21,000 for her share, and that plaintiff might take any amount received above that sum, and plaintiff attempted to make a sale on such terms but failed to get $21,000, there was a rescission of the written agreement, and a substitution of the parol contract, constituting a novation, defined by Civ. 2. Novation (§ 4*)—New Obligation.

Where by a written agreement plaintiff sold land to defendant, the plaintiff to receive one-third of the profits when the land could be sold for $19,000 or over, where defendant repudiated the agreement, asserting that she would not accept less than $21,000 as her share, the surplus to go to plaintiff, the plaintiff had the right to elect to stand upon the written agreement, but, having failed to do so and accepted the terms proposed by defendant, the latter were substituted for the written agreement, and, when there was a failure to sell the property according to the terms of the oral agreement, it was too late to seek a revival of the obligations of the written contract.

3. CONTRACTS (§ 10*)—MUTUALITY OF AGREEMENT.

Where by a written contract plaintiff sold land to defendant, the plaintiff to receive one-third of the profits when the land could be sold for $19,000 or over, the mere assertion of defendant that she would accept not less than $21,000 as her share was not such an interference with the freedom of appellant's choice as to deprive the contract entered into on his acceptance of the terms proposed by her of mutuality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 21–40; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 95*)—VALIDITY—DURESS.

The mere threat to withhold from a party a legal right which he has an adequate remedy to enforce is not duress, which will evade the execution of a contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 431–440; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

5. NOVATION (§ 4*)—CONSIDERATION.

Where a written contract provided that plaintiff should receive one-third of the profits on the sale of land for $19,000 or over, a new oral agreement whereby defendant was to receive $21,000, and plaintiff all that could be procured above that amount, was based on a sufficient consideration.

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 139*)—EFFECT—"EXECUTED CONTRACT."

Where an oral modification of a written contract provided that defendant was to receive $21,000 on the sale of land, and plaintiff all that could be procured above that amount, and plaintiff attempted to sell the land in accordance with the agreement, but failed to get an offer as large as $21,000, so that the deal was declared off, the contract was executed under Civ. Code, § 1661, providing that an executed contract is one the object of which has been fully performed, so as to be taken out of the statute of frauds.

7. BROKERS (§ 49*)—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

A written agreement whereby plaintiff was to receive one-third of the profits on the sale of land for $19,000 or over does not entitle plaintiff to commissions where under a subsequent oral agreement he attempted to sell the property, and received offers aggregating $20,400, which he refused in accordance with the terms of the oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

8. BROKERS (§ 54*) — COMPENSATION — PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES.

Before a broker can be said to have earned his commission, it must be shown that he provided a purchaser who was ready and willing to make the purchase in accordance with the terms imposed by the seller.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; P. J. Shields, Judge.

Action by D. J. Simmons against Mary Sweeney. From an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. R. Hughes and B. F. Howard, for appellant. J. W. S. Butler, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The action is for damages for the violation of a contract. In December, 1906, appellant procured from one Henderson an option on lots 5, 6, and east half of lot 7, bounded by M and N and Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets, in the city of Sacramento, for the sum of $16,000. Shortly afterward appellant entered into an agreement with respondent, whereby she was to purchase the property for $16,250, and give him one-third of the profits above $16,250 when the property could be sold for as much as $19,000. Accordingly appellant procured Henderson to deed the property to respondent for said consideration, $250 of the amount being paid to Simmons. In the spring of 1907 the parties herein reduced their agreement to writing, as follows: "Lots 5, 6, and east half of lot 7, M and N, 16th and 17th streets. Price paid $16,250, selling price $19,600. Mrs. Sweeney to receive ⅔ of the profit; D. J Simmons to receive ⅓ of the profit. [Signed] D. J. Simmons; Mary Sweeney." Appellant claims that "it is for the violation of said contract by respondent in preventing a sale of said property for $20,400 at an auction sale had April 23, 1908, and refusing to stand by the terms thereof and divide the profits, as provided in said contract, that damages are sought in this action." The court found that said written agreement was executed by appellant and respondent, and, further, that in "April, 1908, it was mutually agreed between the plaintiff and defendant that the plaintiff, who is an auctioneer, should advertise and sell said property at public sale, and that said property should not be sold at said sale for less than $21,000, and that if the bids for said property offered at said sale should not aggregate said sum of $21,000 said property should not be sold and should be withdrawn from sale, and that the plaintiff (defendant?) should have and receive as her portion of the purchase price of said property at said sale the sum of $21,000, and not less, and that defendant (plaintiff?) should receive all sums for which said property should be sold at said sale in excess of said sum of $21,000." It is further found that, in pursuance of said agreement, plaintiff advertised the sale to take place on Thursday, April 23, 1908, at 10 o'clock a. m.; that on said date, "in the presence of the defendant and in the presence of various persons who were assembled at said sale, stated to the persons present at said sale that he would offer the said property in subdivisions and would receive bids upon said subdivisions so offered, and that, after having offered all of said property in subdivisions for sale, he would then offer the property as a whole for sale and receive bids thereon, and that in the event the bids offered for said property, either in subdivisions or as a whole, did not aggregate the sum of $21,000, that the sale of the property as a whole or in subdivisions would be declared off and that said property would be withdrawn from sale"; that the property was thereupon offered for sale, and that certain bids were received for the subdivisions, aggregating less than $21,000; "that the said plaintiff, after he had received said bids as aforesaid, for said property in subdivisions, thereupon announced that he would offer the property for sale as a whole, and he thereupon did offer said property as a whole for sale, but received no bids therefor. Thereupon the said plaintiff, in the presence of defendant, and in the presence of said bidders aforesaid and the bystanders at said sale, declared that, inasmuch as the bids offered for said property did not aggregate the sum of $21,000, the said sale and the said sales of said subdivisions was and were off, and that the said property was withdrawn from sale, and the said bids or offers were, and each of them was, rejected." There is a finding, also, that none of said bidders made any tender to defendant or demanded a deed or renewed his bid or offer to buy said property or any of the subdivisions thereof.

The evidence is abundantly sufficient to support the finding that this parol agreement was made, and that plaintiff conducted said auction in accordance with its terms. The testimony of the plaintiff himself is to that effect. He testified that "at that meeting Mrs. Sweeney said she wanted $21,000 for her interest in the property. I said this, that I would go on and advertise it, pay all the expenses out of my pocket, and would endeavor to get—she said the property ought to bring $25,000, and she says, 'if it brings enough to cover my interest and my expense.' I told her I did not think it would bring that much, but that it would bring $22,500, and she told me that at that time she wanted $21,000, and she said at that time that all I got over $21,000 I could have. I advertised the property and said I would try and see. If the property brought $22,500 I was to get $1,500. If it brought $25,000 I was to get $4,000. If the property did not bring $21,000 the sale was not to go, and the sale was to be declared off; that was the distinct understanding. The day of the sale I cried the property in the usual way, offering the land in parcels. Before the sale, I told the bidders I was going to subdivide it and offer it in parcels or pieces, as I described them how I was going to offer them, and told them that the highest and best bidder would get them, provided that it brought a certain amount. I said this very clearly. I do not think I told them how much it was to bring. I might have said that it must bring $21,000, but I don't recollect. I then told the various bidders on the subdivisions or several parcels I would offer the piece of property as a whole, and that if it did not bring the sum required by Mrs. Sweeney that the sale would be off. I thereupon cried the parcels and obtained certain bids on them. At the conclusion of the sale, so far as the sale of the subdivisions was concerned, I offered it as a whole, stating that the property did not bring the price Mrs. Sweeney wanted. I received no bids upon the property as a whole, and I thereupon declared the sale off."

The terms of the agreement are recited in substantially the same way by respondent. She adds the statement that appellant declared he would take the responsibility on his own shoulders and pay the expenses of the auction sale, and Mrs. Sweeney was to get $21,000.

There is thus shown a rescission of the written agreement and the substitution of the parol contract. In other words, we have the clear case of a novation, "the substitution of a new obligation for an existing one." Section 1530, Civ. Code. Under the construction, we are bound to place upon the evidence there can be no controversy that after the execution of said written agreement, and, before any services were performed under its terms, the parties thereto entered into another and entirely different agreement concerning the same subject-matter. The only possible question that could arise would be whether this was intended to be substituted for the written agreement, and whether the subsequent conduct of appellant in attempting to sell the property is referable to said parol agreement. This was for the court to determine from all the facts and circumstances. While there was no express declaration that the parol contract was to supersede the written one, no other conclusion seems reasonable. The terms of these two contracts were entirely inconsistent, and could not be operative at the same time. But the evidence for respondent shows conclusively that everything done by appellant towards effecting a sale of the property was in pursuance of the said parol agreement. He followed its terms in advertising the property and announced to the bidders that their bids were rejected and the property withdrawn because it did not bring the said amount of $21,000. In fact, no one can read the evidence dispassionately without reaching the conclusion that the earlier agreement was entirely annulled by consent and, since appellant failed to sell the property for the sum agreed upon, he was entitled to no compensation. If appellant intended to rely upon the first contract, he should have declined to accept and act upon the proposition subsequently submitted by respondent. He was called upon to exercise his election, and he chose to take his chances of getting a larger compensation under this second arrangement.

The rule approved by our Supreme Court in Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 11, 96 Pac. 884, is stated as follows in Lake Shore, etc., Ry. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773, 30 L. R. A. 33: "Without further quotation from cases, it seems clear, both upon principle and by authority, that where one party to an executory contract refuses to treat it as subsisting and binding upon him, or by his acts and conduct shows that he has renounced it and no longer considers himself bound by it, there is, in legal effect, a prevention of performance by the other party, and it can make no difference whether the contract has been partially performed or the time for performance has not yet arrived; nor is it important whether the renunciation be by declaration of the party that he will be no longer bound, or by acts and conduct which clearly evince that that determination had been reached and is being acted upon. It would seem clear on principle that a mere declaration of the party of an intention not to be bound, or acts and conduct in repudiation of the contract, will not of themselves amount to a breach, so as to create an effectual renunciation of the contract, for one party cannot by any act or declaration destroy the binding force and efficacy of the contract. As said by Bowen, L. J., in Johnson v. Milling Co., 16 Q. B. Div. 460: 'Its real operation appears to be to give the promisee the right of electing either to treat the declaration as brutum fulmen and holding fast to the contract to wait till the time for its performance has arrived, or to act upon it, and treat it as a final assertion by the promisor that he is no longer bound by the contract, and a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he has entered. * * * If he does so elect, it becomes a breach of contract, and he can recover upon it as such.' Upon the election to treat the renunciation, whether by declaration or by acts and conduct, as a breach of the contract, the rights of the parties are to be regarded as then culminating, and the contractual relation ceases to exist, except for the purpose of maintaining the action for the recovery of damages. These views are amply sustained by numerous decided cases." It is difficult to conceive how any other position could be taken with any show of reason. In the case at bar, appellant not only failed to elect to stand upon the original contract and to regard the acts and declarations of respondent as a repudiation of its terms and entitling him to the commission provided therein, but he accepted respondent's new proposal, subsequently acted upon it, and thereby the rescission of the former contract was entirely consummated. It was then too late to seek a revival of the privileges and obligations of the written contract. They had disappeared as completely as though never existing.

The specific grounds upon which appellant attacks the second agreement and the conclusion of the trial court drawn therefrom are, as stated by him: "Said so-called agreement was invalid and of no binding force on the rights, duties, and obligations of the parties, or either of them, as laid down in the said written agreement, in this: (1) It was not a mutual agreement within the meaning of the law. (2) There was no sufficient consideration to support it. (3) It was an oral agreement conveying an interest in real property. (4) It was an unexecuted oral agreement changing the terms of a written agreement." None of these contentions can be successfully maintained. The want of mutuality is affirmed on the pretext that appellant was coerced by the assumption of authority on the part of respondent. He was confronted, so it is claimed, by the menacing declaration that respondent "must have $21,000 for her share or there would be no sale." But it is too plain for argument that there was no interference nor attempted interference with the freedom of appellant's choice. We are not aware of any authority holding that such a declaration amounts to menace or duress. The record does not disclose anything in the appearance or manner of respondent calculated to inspire fear in the mind of appellant or to influence unduly his judgment. "The mere threat to withhold from a party a legal right which he has an adequate remedy to enforce, is not, in the eyes of the law, duress. Certainly not such as will evade the execution of a contract." Cable v. Foley, 45 Minn. 421, 47 N. W. 1135; Taylor v. Ford, 131 Cal. 440, 63 Pac. 770; Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 10 Cal. App. 746, 103 Pac. 938. We find nothing to indicate either legal or moral duress.

It is equally clear that there was a sufficient consideration to support the agreement. Appellant acquired the right to retain whatever was received for the property in excess of $21,000. It was believed that the property could be sold for such an amount as would amply compensate appellant for his services. That subsequent events proved the parties to be mistaken in their judgment does not affect the question of consideration. If the property had been sold for a large amount in excess of the sum to be paid respondent, it would be equally as reasonable to contend that there was no consideration for the contract. The truth is, of course, that the opportunity for benefit to both parties and the expectation of realizing it growing out of the terms of the agreement are sufficient to make it binding. If we were willing to concede the soundness of appellant's position that the agreement in question purported to convey an interest in real property, it would signify nothing, as it is manifest that it was entirely executed, and therefore taken without the statute of frauds. "An executed contract is one the object of which is fully performed." Section 1661, Civ. Code. When it was found that the property would not bring $21,000, there was nothing left for appellant but to declare the bids rejected and the property withdrawn from sale. This was done voluntarily by appellant and the contractual relation terminated. It may be that he would have been authorized to advertise the property again and repeat the effort to sell, but that question is not involved, since appellant pursued the matter no further but treated the contract as at an end and brought suit for his commission.

But, in addition to the foregoing, it must be said that, if the parol agreement was invalid, appellant has not shown himself entitled to recover under the written agreement. Since he acquiesced in the new proposal, the most that could be claimed would be that the written contract is still operative. But, as a basis for any commissions under this, appellant must prove that he obtained a purchaser for the property. "Before a broker can be said to have earned his commission, it must be shown that he provided a purchaser who was ready and willing to make the purchase in accordance with the terms imposed by the seller." Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. 642. It cannot be said that this duty has been performed when the agent by his own act has dismissed the prospective buyer and acquitted him of any connection with the transaction and of any obligation to purchase.

There can be no doubt, we think, that the findings are supported by the evidence, and that no error was committed by the lower court.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

LOEFFLER v. WRIGHT et al. (Civ. 662.)

1. Landlord and Tenant (§ 83*)—Option to Renew—Breach—Damages.

In an action to recover damages for a landlord's failure to perform an agreement to lease for a period of years, plaintiff was bound both to allege and prove that he placed himself in such a position as to exact performance by exercising his option to continue the term or notify the lessor that he desired to exercise the privilege of extending the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 263, 264, 269; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. Specific Performance (§ 114*)—Sale of Land—Enforcement—Appeal.

A bill for specific performance of an option to purchase land was fatally defective where it contained no allegation of an offer to pay the consideration or willingness to do so, and that the contract was just and equitable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 367, 368; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. Bankruptcy (§ 152*)—Filing Petition—Caveat.

The filing of a bankruptcy petition is a caveat to all the world and in effect an attachment and injunction, and, on adjudication and qualification of the trustee, title to the bankrupt's property becomes vested in the trustee.

4. Bankruptcy (§ 387*)—Composition—Collateral Attack.

A composition in bankruptcy cannot be collaterally attacked in a state court; and hence a creditor of a bankrupt desiring vacation of an order of composition must proceed in the federal district court under the bankruptcy act, providing for the annulment of a composition once confirmed for fraud, where the fraud has come to the knowledge of the objector since the confirmation, and where he makes his application within six months.

5. Limitation of Actions (§ 100*)—Running of Statute—Fraud.

Where plaintiff signed a corporate trust deed as secretary for the corporation, grantor, he would be deemed to have had actual notice of alleged fraud consisting of misrepresentations as to the contents of the deed at the time it was signed, and therefore could not avoid the bar of limitations in a suit to set it aside for fraud on the ground that he did not discover the fraud until within three years prior to suit brought.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 492; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

6. Limitation of Actions (§ 100*)—Fraud—Right of Action—Accrual—Statutes.

While a cause of action to cancel a trust deed for fraud is deemed not to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, it must also appear that the discovery could not sooner have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence; plaintiff being presumed to have known all that reasonable diligence would have disclosed as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 492; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

7. Pleading (§ 225*)—Demurrer—Leave to Amend.

Where plaintiff had made three attempts to present properly his cause of action and at each time failed, the court was justified in concluding that the failure arose from want of facts rather than from lack of skill in stating them, and did not therefore err in sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend.

8. Pleading (§ 225*)—Leave to Amend—Discretion—Necessity of Request.

It is not an abuse of discretion to sustain a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, where no application to amend has been made.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. H. U. Brandenstein and J. C. Meyerstein, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. Several diverse and somewhat uncorrelated acts alleged to be fraudulent are made apparently the basis of appellant's claim for relief and much evidentiary matter is pleaded in the second amended complaint, but it is contended by him that "there is only one cause of action set forth therein, and that is to have plaintiff's lease and option to purchase declared valid and superior to the claims of all the other defendants, and for damages for depriving plaintiff of the possession of said land so leased and covered by his option to purchase and the valuable improvements thereon including his hotel, pickle factory, machinery, stock, and supplies."

Adopting this theory of the complaint, the essential facts may be somewhat briefly presented. The initial transaction was with a corporation known as the Jersey Island Packing Company. It is alleged: That three of the directors of said corporation who were the principal stockholders and are defendants herein on and prior to the 11th day of June, 1903, made certain false and fraudulent representations to plaintiff as to the financial condition of said corporation, and thereby induced plaintiff to purchase 3,060 shares of the capital stock thereof for the sum of $91,800, and to make valuable improvements upon the real estate belonging to said corporation known as the Jersey Island Tract, "and which was the same land that was thereafter leased to plaintiff for the term of 7½ years on the 16th day of December, 1903, and which on the same day the said corporation agreed to sell to plaintiff at any time during the aforesaid period of 7½ years, as fully appears in said lease and agreement to sell, a copy of which is hereto attached and marked 'Exhibit A.' That thereafter, on or about the ——— day of December, 1903, the said corporation * * * agreed to cancel the agreement whereby plaintiff purchased said stock and made said improvements upon said realty, and to return to plaintiff the purchase price thereof, save and except the sum of $3,000 and the cost price of said improvements, amounting to $26,000 more, which the directors claimed said corporation was unable to pay, and, in consideration thereof, the said corporation then and there agreed to and with plaintiff that it would lease to him said 100 acres of the aforesaid realty upon which said improvements were located for a period of 7½ years, and give him an option and agreement whereby he might purchase said land and improvements at any time within said period for the sum of $20,000; and that the plaintiff agreed to said proposition on the part of said corporation, and further agreed that upon the execution and delivery to him of said lease and agreement of sale he would return his stock which had been theretofore sold to him as aforesaid, to the officers of said corporation, and resign his position as director of said company; and that, after such agreement had been duly made as aforesaid, the said manipulators, W. H. Wright, Frank V. Wright, and H. Bendel, acting for and on behalf of said corporation, refused to make, execute, or deliver said lease to plaintiff, according to said agreement, for the reason that it would interfere with and take precedence of the fraudulent trust deed which said manipulators and wreckers had fraudulently designed to have executed, as hereinbefore set forth. That after the manipulators refused, as aforesaid, to carry out and execute said option to buy and agreement to lease, said fraudulent deed of trust was gotten up, as hereinafter set forth, and the same was placed on record on said 19th day of September, 1903, in order that the same might take precedence of said option and lease, without plaintiff's knowledge of its existence or recordation, and that thereafter, on the 16th day of December, 1903, the said corporation in pursuance of said agreement so previously made by and through its proper officers and in pursuance of the resolution of its said board of directors made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff in consideration of the facts and premises hereinbefore stated the lease and agreement to sell said real property as the same is fully set forth and described in said Exhibit A hereunto attached. That said agreement of sale and lease is still in full force and effect, and binding upon said corporation and all the parties hereto, and superior to said fraudulent deed of trust, all claims of the creditors of said bankrupt corporation, and the rights of said trustees to sell said Jersey Island Tract for any purpose whatsoever."

Certain difficulties arise from a consideration of these averments and of the said exhibit A attached to the complaint. It is averred, for instance, that the corporation agreed in December, 1903, to execute this lease and option to buy for a period of 7⅓ years, and that thereafter the directors refused to make, execute, or deliver said lease to plaintiff. In the very next paragraph it is positively alleged that the corporation, "in pursuance of said agreement so previously made by and through its proper officers and in pursuance of the resolution of its said board of directors, made, executed and delivered to plaintiff" the lease and agreement to sell said real property. It further appears by express allegation that on the 16th day of December, 1903, this land was leased to plaintiff for the term of 7½ years, and, when we turn to the said exhibit, we find it recited therein that "the owner of the land shall and will upon the premises and conditions herein stated suffer and permit the occupier (John Loeffler) to enter on and occupy from the date hereof until the 31st day of December, A. D. 1904," the said land. The lessee was granted the privilege, however, of renewing the lease "for a further period of ten years at the expiration of this lease."

For the refusal of the directors to execute said lease, the reason is assigned that it would take precedence of the said fraudulent trust deed. It appears that said refusal occurred in December, 1903, and it is alleged that afterwards said fraudulent deed of trust was gotten up without plaintiff's knowledge of its existence, whereas the fact is, and it is shown by the complaint, that said deed was signed and acknowledged by plaintiff as the secretary of said corporation on the 11th day of September, 1903, and recorded on the 19th day of the same month. Again, plaintiff claims the said lease was in full force and effect when the second amended complaint was filed in 1908, but by its terms it expired on December 31, 1904. There is no allegation that the lease was renewed or that plaintiff exercised his option to continue the term or notified the lessor or defendants that he desired to exercise the privilege of extending the lease. There is no allegation that he paid or tendered the rent that was due under the terms of said lease. The complaint is silent as to any offer to purchase said property on the part of plaintiff as he was authorized to do by said lease. Notwithstanding these omissions, plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the conduct of defendants in withholding the said property from plaintiff for the period of three years from the "21st day of March, 1904, up to and about ——— day of May, 1905, when the said corporation was adjudged a bankrupt," and from the latter date till the beginning of this action. It is clear that, since the right to the possession of said property is grounded in said lease, plaintiff by appropriate allegations must bring himself within its terms. The action is essentially to recover damages for a failure specifically to perform an agreement to lease for a period of years, and it is elementary that one seeking such relief must show that he placed himself in such a position as to exact performance from the other party. In Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 Pac. 537, it is said that, "where the contract between the parties is for a renewal as distinguished from an extension of the lease, it is incumbent upon the lessee desiring to exercise his option for renewal to give notice of his election before the expiration of the original term." So, if we regard that feature of the complaint relating to the option to purchase the land, the same condition is presented. There is no allegation of an offer to pay the consideration or the willingness to do so or that the contract was just and equitable. Again, it appears that the corporation in May, 1905, was adjudged an insolvent, and that the claims of plaintiff "against said corporation have been duly adjudicated and filed with the clerk of the United States District Court in and for the Northern District of California." It has been held that "the acts of Congress relating to bankruptcy, so far as are concerned matters within their purview, are paramount, and the jurisdiction of the federal courts in bankruptcy, when properly invoked in the administration of the affairs of an insolvent person or corporation, is essentially exclusive." In re Watts, 190 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 718, 47 L. Ed. 933. The filing of the petition in bankruptcy is a caveat to all the world and in effect an attachment and injunction, and, upon adjudication and qualification of the trustee, the bankrupt's property is placed in the custody of the bankruptcy court, and title becomes vested in the trustee. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 22 Sup. Ct. 269, 46 L. Ed. 405. It would seem from the foregoing postulates, as urged by respondents, that, when said corporation was adjudged a bankrupt, the said United States District Court immediately acquired full, complete, and exclusive jurisdiction of the corporation's property and to determine all controversies between that company and third parties affecting the assets in its custody. It is true, though, that it further appears that, after the adjudication of insolvency, a composition was confirmed by said District Court, and the proceedings there closed. The effect of this was to revest in the bankrupt title to all the property, and it would seem to follow that plaintiff was at liberty to pursue his remedy against the company and its assets, unless its assets had been formally transferred, which is not alleged. Plaintiff pleads, indeed, the irregularity of said composition, but it is not contended that this irregularity appeared on the face of the proceedings. Respondents' position, therefore, appears sound that this order of composition cannot be successfully assailed in this collateral way in a state court.

Desiring to have the order of composition set aside, appellant should have proceeded in said District Court under the bankrupt act providing for the annulment of a composition once confirmed upon the ground of fraud where the fraud has come to the knowledge of a party since the confirmation and where he moves within six months. In re Jersey Island Packing Co. (D. C.) 152 Fed. 839, 18 Am. Bankr. Rep. 417. As appears in the last cited case, this was in fact the course pursued by appellant, but his application to have the composition in question set aside was denied by the said District Court. In either aspect of the situation, therefore, whether the composition be valid or a nullity, it would seem that plaintiff cannot prevail in this proceeding.

But regarding only the transaction preceding the adjudication of insolvency and directing our attention to the allegations as to the disturbance by defendants of plaintiff's possession before the expiration of the year, for which the land was leased, we are involved in difficulty in determining what damage was suffered by plaintiff for the balance of the year, for the reason that this is not segregated from the whole loss alleged to have been incurred up to the time of said adjudication of insolvency, to wit, May, 1905. But if we could make the division there is an insuperable obstacle to recovery in the fact that prior to the execution of the lease, as we have already seen, a deed of trust was executed by said corporation of said property to certain of the defendants. If the property was conveyed to these grantees, according to the terms of said deed, in September, 1903, it would take precedence, of course, over the said lease executed by the grantor in December, 1903. It is true that plaintiff seeks to avoid said deed on the ground of fraud, but the action should have been brought within three years. Section 338, Code Civ. Proc. Plaintiff seeks to avoid the bar of the statute by alleging that he did not discover the fraud of which he complains till some time in January, 1905, but the fraud consisted in the misrepresentation as to the contents of said deed. He must be deemed to have had actual notice of this, as the deed was signed by him, and, in addition, by the recordation of the deed he would have constructive notice thereof. The date of the filing of the original complaint does not, indeed, appear, but the intendments being in favor of the ruling of the court below we must assume that the action was brought after the expiration of three years from the execution of said deed. Again, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that he did not discover the fraud till a certain date. The rule is that, while the cause of action to set aside an instrument on that ground is deemed not to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, it must also appear as well that the discovery could not have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence. And plaintiff is presumed to have known all that reasonable diligence would have disclosed. Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4; Simpson v. Robert Dalziel, 135 Cal. 599, 67 Pac. 1080. The foregoing defects in the complaint and others which we deem it unnecessary to consider are covered by the demurrer of respondents which we think was properly sustained.

Appellant also complains because the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. This is a matter, however, within the discretion of the lower court, and cannot be reviewed except for an abuse of that discretion. Plaintiff had made three attempts to present properly his cause of action. He had failed in each, and the court was justified in concluding that any further effort would be equally futile. Indeed, the inference would be natural and reasonable that his failure arose from the want of facts rather than from lack of skill in stating them. Besides, it does not appear that plaintiff invoked the favor of the court to the end that another amended complaint might be filed. The following quotations from the decisions of the Supreme Court are in harmony with this view: In Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 622, it is said: "We cannot say the court abused its discretion in disallowing plaintiff's motion to file a second amended complaint. It does not appear from the transcript that any proposed amendment was served or presented, or that the notice of motion pointed out the precise amendment which plaintiff would ask leave to make or file." In Dukes v. Kellogg, 127 Cal. 563, 60 Pac. 44, it is said: "The power of the court in allowing parties to an action to file amended pleadings is largely a matter of discretion. Here plaintiff had three opportunities to make a good complaint and failed. Three failures to make a good complaint fairly indicate that a fourth attempt would also be unavailing. The proposed amendment or proposed amended pleading was not tendered to the court for inspection, and we see nothing erroneous in the action of the court in refusing to allow further amendments. The failure to make a good pleading probably arises in a lack of facts rather than in the fault of the pleader." And the later expression, found in Stewart v. Douglass, 148 Cal. 512, 83 Pac. 699, is: "When a demurrer is sustained to a complaint, it is within the discretion of the court either to allow an amended complaint to be filed or to give judgment forthwith in favor of the defendant. The appellate court will in every such case sustain the action of the court below, whatever course it may take, unless it is made to appear by the record that there has been an abuse of discretion. The plaintiff merely asked leave to file an amended complaint, and, so far as the record discloses, did not show that there were any allegations of fact omitted from the complaint to which the demurrer had been sustained which, if inserted therein, would in any respect change its legal effect, nor make any statement whatever of the grounds or reasons for making the application for leave to amend. There was clearly no abuse of discretion shown. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 Pac. 516."

In the case at bar there is nothing to show that appellant indicated in the court below any desire to file another amended complaint. We must assume that he made no such application, and hence it is out of the question to say that there was any abuse of discretion in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

PEOPLE v. MOHR. (Cr. 1,561.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1023*)—APPEAL—ORDERS APPEALABLE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1237, authorizing an appeal from a final judgment of conviction, from an order denying a new trial, and from an order made after judgment affecting the substantial rights of the parties, an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2591; Dec. Dig. § 1023.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1134*)—APPEAL—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Under Pen. Code, § 1237, errors in an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment, may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment of convictions.

3. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 21*)—INFORMATION—REQUISITES.

An information alleging that accused with intent to defraud prosecutor drew and delivered to a third person a check on a bank, knowing at the time he had no funds in or credit with the bank to meet the check, states the offense denounced by Pen. Code, § 476a, prohibiting the drawing of checks with intent to defraud.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1165*)—APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where the evidence, though legally sufficient to support a conviction, was not so clear and convincing as to justify the conclusion that accused was not prejudiced by erroneous rulings, the errors were ground for reversal.

5. WITNESSES (§ 277*)—EXAMINATION—CROSS-EXAMINATION—EXTENT.

Where accused, charged with drawing a check on a bank in which he had no funds, merely identified a letter written after the transaction as one written and signed by him, and stated that his name was the name signed to the check, questions on cross-examination as to whether or not he had at different times assumed different names asked in such a manner as to indicate that the district attorney had in his hands at the time written data to support the questions were improper, because not in response to the direct examination, and because they were asked for the purpose of reflecting on the character of accused, and creating the impression that he was in the habit of using assumed names.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 376*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

One on trial for a specific offense may not be discredited in the minds of the jury by evidence of specific acts in his past life not connected with the specified offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 836; Dec. Dig. § 376.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1170½*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The error in permitting the state to show on the cross-examination of accused, not in response to his direct examination, that, after accused had been informed of the issuance of the warrant for his arrest, he took an assumed name, was prejudicial, necessitating a new trial.

Hanford, a banking association, knowing at the time that he had no funds in or credit with said bank to meet or pay said check upon its presentation. Upon this conviction he was adjudged to suffer imprisonment in the state prison for two years. This is an appeal from the judgment, the order denying a new trial, and the motion in arrest of judgment. The last-named order is not appealable (section 1237, Pen. Code; People v. Matuszewski, 138 Cal. 533, 71 Pac. 701), but errors in connection with the motion in arrest of judgment may be considered on the appeal from the judgment. We are satisfied that the information stated facts constituting the public offense defined by section 476a of the Penal Code, and that it was not subject to any of the objections specified in the demurrer. The demurrer was therefore properly disallowed, and the motion in arrest of judgment properly denied. The evidence introduced was legally sufficient to support a conclusion on the part of the jury that the defendant was guilty of the offense charged. A careful review thereof, however, satisfies us that the case against the defendant was not of such a nature that we can say that he was not prejudiced by certain rulings of the trial court which we are satisfied were erroneous; in other words, that the evidence as to his guilt of the offense charged was not so clear and convincing as to justify us in concluding that he was not prejudiced by such rulings.

The defendant was put upon the witness stand merely to identify a letter written by him to Harrington after the transaction as one written and signed by him. On his direct examination he merely stated that his name was H. J. Mohr, that he was the defendant, and that he wrote and signed the letter. On cross-examination, the district attorney was permitted by the court, apparently upon the theory that it was proper cross-examination in view of his statement that his name was H. J. Mohr, to ask such questions as: "Did you ever go under the name of Harold Miller?" "Did you ever go by the name of W. J. Wilbur?" "Did you ever register during the month of October as H. O. Miller?" "Did you ever go by the name of Harold Miller?" "Now, during the month of October, 1908, didn't you register at the Victor Lodging House under the name of H. O. Miller?" "Did you ever go by the name of E. H. Moore?" "Did you ever go by the name of H. E. Moore?" "Did you ever go by the name of W. J. Wilbur?" "Did you ever go by the name of E. J. King at Turlock, Stanislaus county, in this state?" These and other questions equally subject to objection as not proper cross-examination constituted the whole of the cross-examination, and all of them the defendant was required by the court to answer, although proper objections were made thereto. It appears, too, that these questions were asked in such a manner as to indicate that the district attorney had in his hands at the time he asked the questions written data to support the same. The conduct of the district attorney in asking these questions was objected to and excepted to by defendant's counsel, but the court apparently approved such conduct, refusing to direct that officer to desist, and directing him to proceed.

The questions above noted were all improper cross-examination. They were not in response to any portion of the direct examination and were obviously asked not for the purpose of discrediting defendant as a witness, but simply and solely for the purpose of reflecting upon his character as a man, and creating the impression in the minds of the jurors that he was in the habit of going under assumed names, a matter "not conducive to a good character for defendant" (People v. Arlington, 123 Cal. 356, 55 Pac. 1003. See, also, People v. Denby, 108 Cal. 54, 40 Pac. 1051), and certainly, upon such a charge as was here under investigation, affirmative answers to such questions would have been exceedingly prejudicial. There was no issue or dispute as to defendant's true name. The check was signed "H. J. Mohr," and the defendant had been informed against and was being prosecuted as "H. J. Mohr," which name, it must be assumed from the record, he had acknowledged on arraignment to be his true name. The questions were clearly directed solely, not to the proposition that his name was something other than H. J. Mohr, but to the proposition that, his true name being H. J. Mohr, he had on various occasions assumed a false name. The claim that they constituted cross-examination simply because he had testified that his name was H. J. Mohr was, under the circumstances, the merest pretense, and clearly without sound basis. If the defendant had testified on direct examination to the effect that he had never gone under an assumed name, such testimony, although inadmissible under the circumstances of this case, would have afforded sufficient ground for the questions asked by the district attorney, but there was no testimony of this nature on direct examination. It is elementary that a defendant on trial for a specific offense may not be discredited in the minds of the jury by evidence of specific acts in his past life not connected in any way with the matter under investigation, either offered in chief by the district attorney, or elicited on cross-examination of the defendant, unless the evidence given by him on direct examination was of such a nature as to warrant it as proper cross-examination. As said by Justice Temple in People v. Denby, supra, the proposed evidence "had no place in this case, and, if it were relevant testimony, it would have been improper to educe it from the defendant under the circumstances. It had no connection with the matters concerning which he had testified in chief." The Attorney General apparently does not contend otherwise, but seeks to avoid the effect thereof by the claim that the erroneous rulings were not prejudicial.

This claim is based on the fact that all of the questions as to assumed names, except those as to the name H. O. Miller, were answered in the negative. As to the name H. O. Miller, defendant answered in the affirmative, saying that on the night before his arrest, learning that there was a warrant out for his arrest, he registered at the Victor lodging house in Hanford as H. O. Miller. As to this, it is claimed that the answer was not prejudicial in view of the accompanying statement that it was after he was informed of the warrant of arrest, it being said that the taking of an assumed name would be regarded as natural and usual under the circumstances, and would not operate to his prejudice with the jury. We cannot say that this would be so. Such action on the part of the defendant might reasonably be regarded by the jury as inconsistent with innocence of the charge against him, and as indicative of a desire to conceal himself so as to avoid arrest, constituting practically evidence of flight. Such evidence could not properly be elicited from the defendant himself, except where proper cross-examination, which, we have shown, it was not. It amounted to the eliciting of positive evidence of facts tending to show guilt, thus virtually compelling the defendant to testify against himself, which our law does not permit.

In view of what we have just said, it is unnecessary to consider whether as to the other questions any prejudicial effect was obviated by the negative answers. It is doubtless true that generally an answer to an improper question that is favorable to the defendant is a complete reply to a claim of prejudicial error in the allowing of the question.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

OLDER v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR KERN COUNTY et al.

(S. F. 5,384.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 16*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.

The provisions of the Constitution must receive a practical common sense construction considered with reference to the prior state of the law, and with reference to the mischief intended to be remedied by the change.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 16; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 16*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION.

The court in aid of the rule that the provisions of the Constitution must be construed with reference to the prior state of the law, and to the mischief to be remedied by a change therein, may examine the debates in the constitutional convention at the time of the adoption of the part of the Constitution in question, and learn from the statements of the Constitution makers, if possible, their purposes and intentions.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 116*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 1, § 9, providing that criminal prosecutions for newspaper libel shall be tried in the county where the newspapers have their publication office, or in the county where the person libeled resided at the time of the publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause, adopted, as shown by the history of the section and the debates in the constitutional convention, to relieve newspaper publishers from the danger of prosecution in any county in which a libel may be circulated, does not regulate change of venue in such cases, but Pen. Code, § 1033, authorizing a change of venue on the application of accused on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county, controls the right of a newspaper publisher to a change of venue in a prosecution for libel, and the good cause referred to in the Constitution is the cause provided for in the Penal Code in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, and continued in force under article 22, § 1, because not inconsistent with the Constitution.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 29*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONSTITUTION — SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS.

A constitutional provision is not self-executing when it merely indicates principles without laying down rules by means of which those principles may be given the force of law, but to be self-executing the provision must supply a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed or protected or the duty imposed enforced.

Const. art. 1, § 9, providing that criminal prosecutions for newspaper libels shall be tried in the county where the newspapers have their publication office or in the county where the person libeled resided at the time of the publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause, is not self-executing, because it does not provide the machinery for transferring a case, but the subject of change of venue in such cases is left to be regulated by Pen. Code, §§ 1033–1038, inclusive.

In Bank. On rehearing. Reversed, and judgment of trial court affirmed.

Hiram Johnson, Sullivan & Sullivan, and Theo. J. Roche, for petitioner. J. W. P. Laird, Rowen Irwin, and John E. Bennett, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. The petitioner, Older, asked the District Court of Appeal of the Third appellate district to issue a writ of mandate compelling respondents to entertain and determine the right of said petitioner to a change of venue of an action for criminal libel pending in Kern county. The motion for change of venue was based upon grounds other than that mentioned in section 1033 of the Penal Code. After deciding preliminarily that, in spite of the fact that Kern county is in the Second appellate district, the District Court of Appeal of the Third district had jurisdiction to issue the writ, that court gave an alternative writ, and after full hearing granted a peremptory writ directing respondents to proceed with the hearing and decision of the motion for change of venue upon its merits. Upon consideration of a petition for rehearing filed by respondents and answered by petitioner, this court granted a rehearing of the matter.

In the opinion rendered by the District Court of Appeal at the time of issuing the alternative writ, that court explained that the reason for taking up a matter pertaining to a county within another district was one of convenience to the attorneys for petitioner. This language occurs in the opinion: "Counsel for petitioner declare, and we must assume, that all members of the bar at all times act in good faith with the court; that it would be inconvenient and in fact impracticable to present this application to the Second appellate district court; that they were limited in the time within which to prepare the elaborate petition which has been filed here; and that the actual trial of the petitioner is set for the 11th day of May, 1909—one day from that on which this application was presented. The Constitution (section 4, art. 6) confers upon the District Courts of Appeal the jurisdiction of hearing writs of mandate, and does not confine the issuance of such writs by such courts within their territorial jurisdictions. But, as a matter of comity, as we have declared, such writs should invariably be applied for to the court of the district in which the cause for the writ arises, unless there are shown, as there are here, special circumstances which justify the issuance of the writ by a court of another district."

Counsel for respondents are of the opinion that the District Court of Appeal for the Third district is in error in the conclusion that it has jurisdiction to issue writs of mandate to any part of the state. Section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution provides that: "The said courts shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and all other writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of their appellate jurisdiction." The jurisdiction of the District Court of Appeal, according to respondents, is either territorial or conferred-territorial in matters appealable to it from within the district in which it exists, and conferred in causes assigned to it by the Supreme Court. In the proceeding before us the District Court of Appeal of the Third district has issued mandate with reference to a motion in a case directly appealable to the district court of another district. Hence, according to the contention of respondents, the issuance of said writ was not necessary to the complete exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of that court. But the language of section 4 of article 6 of the Constitution is very general, and it may be urged with much force that the words "necessary or proper to the complete exercise of their appellate jurisdiction" modify not the words "mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, or habeas corpus," but refer exclusively to "other writs." This interpretation would give a District Court of Appeal jurisdiction to issue to any part of the state either of the four writs mentioned by name, but would limit its power as to those designated as "other writs." It is not necessary, however, to determine the exact meaning of this language, in view of the conclusion reached by us with reference to the constitutional question discussed by the District Court of Appeal concerning change of venue in cases of criminal libel. For the purposes of this case we may assume that the District Court of Appeal of the Third appellate district had jurisdiction to issue the writ, and that under the facts mentioned mandamus was the proper remedy. But we do not find it necessary to decide these matters, because we are unable to agree with the learned District Court of Appeal in the conclusion that section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution makes available, upon a motion for change of venue in a certain class of actions for criminal libel, grounds other than those mentioned in section 1033 of the Penal Code.

Certain informations are pending in the superior court of Kern county. In these informations one Fremont Older, editor, and R. A. Crothers, proprietor and publisher of a newspaper printed in San Francisco, are jointly charged with criminal libel. There is no question raised with reference to the county in which these actions were commenced, but the said Older moved for a change of the place of trial upon the grounds that "the convenience of witnesses and the ends of justice will be promoted by the change, and that the place of trial should be changed for good cause." There was no motion on the ground mentioned in section 1033 of the Penal Code "that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county." The petition of said Older alleges, and the answer of the judge presiding in the superior court of Kern county at the hearing of the motion for change of venue admits, that the judge announced, after argument and consideration of the matter, that he intended to deny the motion for the sole reason that he had no jurisdiction to grant it upon the grounds urged in said petition, nor for any reason other than that specified in section 1033 of the Penal Code. The question for our determination, therefore, is this: Has the defendant in an action for criminal libel alleged to have been committed by a publication in a newspaper, the right to a transfer of his case from a county in which it is properly pending by reason of any "good cause" for such removal other than that provided in section 1033 of the Penal Code? In other words, is section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution self-executing without any legislative definition of the words "good cause"? The section in question is as follows: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact. Indictments found, or information laid, for publication in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause." Admittedly, in all other prosecutions, defendants desiring change of venue are limited to the rule of section 1033 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "A criminal action may be removed from the court in which it is pending on application of the defendant, on the ground that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county."

Petitioner's counsel, however, contend that publishers and editors of and contributors to newspapers are singled out by the Constitution for special favor and privilege by being given the right to change of venue for any "good cause" which may appeal to the discretion of the judge. Not only is this a startling contention, but in our opinion there is nothing to support it, either in the language of the Constitution or the reported debates of the constitutional convention. The rule of the Constitution that there might be a change of venue for "good cause" in these cases was adopted after a spirited debate in which the conclusion was reached that the liberty of the press, so important in all free governments, would be better protected by limiting these prosecutions to the county in which the newspaper was printed or the county of the residence of the person charging the libel. It would seem monstrous and grotesque that a man indicted for murdering his neighbor or for stealing money would be limited to local prejudice as a reason for the removal of his case to another county for trial, and that one charged with the assassination of reputation or the filching of a fellow citizen's good name should have a wider privilege in that regard, and it would be still more wonderful that a constitutional convention should adopt such a rule and give it place in the organic law to be proposed for adoption by the people without one syllable being spoken indicative of such an intention.

In considering the intention of the framers of the Constitution with reference to change of places of trial in cases where prosecutions are pending for criminal libels published in newspapers, we must investigate the evils which were to be remedied, the reforms to be accomplished, and all other matters which assist in discovering the purpose of the members of the constitutional convention. As was well said in the opinion in the case of the People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 233, all the provisions of the Constitution "must receive a practical common-sense construction. They must be considered with reference to the prior state of the law, and with reference to the mischief intended to be remedied by the change." In aid of this canon of interpretation, we may also examine the debates which occurred at the time of the adoption of the part of the Constitution under analysis, and learn from the statements of the Constitution makers themselves, if possible, their purposes and intentions. Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626. Let us, then, see what abuse the framers of the Constitution of 1879 wished to eradicate. There can be no doubt that they desired to relieve the publishers of newspapers from the danger of prosecution in any county in which any alleged libel might be promulgated, no matter how far from the principal place of business of the newspaper such county might be. Under the old Constitution the publisher of a newspaper might be prosecuted in any county in which the libel was circulated. Desiring to correct this evil Mr. Ayres proposed an amendment to section 9 of article 1. That section in the Constitution of 1849 was as follows:

"Sec. 9. Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions or indictments, for libels, the truth may be given in evidence to the jury; and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact." At page 318, volume 1, of the Debates and Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention, we find the opening of the very interesting discussion which culminated in the adoption of the section which we are now examining. Mr. Ayres' proposed amendment was as follows: "Add to the section the following: Trial for libel against publishers of newspapers shall be held in the county where the newspapers and periodicals are published, subject only to the change of venue as in other prosecutions." Obviously there was no intention here to put these cases of criminal libel in a class by themselves with reference to change of venue. It was the intention of Mr. Ayres to place defendants charged with criminal libel published in newspapers under the provisions of section 1033 of the Penal Code which was then and for years had been in existence in substantially the form in which it now appears. His sole purpose was the removal of the privilege of prosecuting a publisher or editor at a selected location far distant from his place of business. This amendment was lost, and then the convention entered upon the discussion of an amendment which resulted in the substitution of the words "shall have a right to return a general verdict as in other cases" for the words "shall have the right to determine the law and fact."

Subsequently, Mr. Campbell proposed this amendment: "Indictments or informations for publications in newspapers shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, unless place of trial shall be changed for good cause." It will be seen that this amendment was almost identical with the one theretofore proposed by Mr. Ayres, except that the former applied only to publishers of newspapers while the latter included within its purview indictments for publications in newspapers, and in the latter the phrase "unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause" was used in lieu of the words "subject only to the change of venue as in other prosecutions." So nearly alike were these two amendments that several members made objections to considering Mr. Campbell's measure because, according to their recollection, it had been voted down. In the discussion which followed Mr. Campbell said nothing about the change in the phraseology whereby we could draw the inference that he wished change of venue in this sort of criminal libel cases to depend upon the discretion of the court as to what was "good cause." Indeed, all of the debaters, including Mr. Campbell, seemed to regard the amendment of Mr. Ayres and of Mr. Campbell as practically the same, differing only in the phraseology employed by the respective draughtsmen and small details, such as the exclusion of the word "periodicals" from Mr. Campbell's proposed amendment. Mr. Campbell, speaking to his proposed amendment, said in part: "The publisher may be brought to answer in Siskiyou, or in any part of the state in which that paper circulates, and you then have this state of things: That a man may be dragged eight hundred miles from his home to answer to a charge of misdemeanor before a selected judge, and before one whose political convictions and associations are such, or whose present associations are such, that the judge is the intimate friend of the prosecutor. The prosecutor may select any county in the state in which to bring the action, or all of the counties in the state, as has heretofore been attempted. They have their choice of all the judges in the state, and all the advantage which locality can give them. They can take the victim from one end of the state to the other, and there is no one to prevent them, no law to interfere, and you will then have what you are pleased to call the freedom of the press." After an extended debate upon the matter Mr. Shafter said: "When a man is charged with being a thief he has as much right to be vindicated at his own home as the newspaper has. I therefore move this amendment, which I think is eminently right and proper. It is to be added to amendment already presented by Judge Campbell, and I hope that gentleman will accept it, as a part of his amendment."

Thereafter the following proceedings were had: "The Chairman: Send up the amendment. The secretary read: 'Or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication.' Mr. Shafter: That will confine the trial to two places, either to the place where the paper is published, or to the place where the libeled party resided at the time of the publication. Mr. Campbell: I accept the amendment. Mr. Edgerton: Mr. Chairman, is an amendment in order? The Chairman: No, sir; there is already an amendment to an amendment. Mr. Campbell: I have accepted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter. The Chairman: If the amendment is accepted, then an amendment to the amendment will be in order. The gentleman from Sacramento will send up his amendment. Mr. Edgerton: I move to amend so as to read as follows: 'Indictments or informations for publications in newspapers shall be found and tried in the county where such papers have their publication office, or in the counties where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause.' Mr. Van Dyke: The amendment is unnecessary. Mr. Edgerton: I am opposed to the whole thing, but I suggest this merely. The Chairman: The question is on the adoption of the amendment. Mr. Shafter: I move to insert the words 'Indictment found or information laid.' Mr. McFarland: I would suggest that something be left to the Legislature when it comes to arrange the details." The entire section was then adopted as amended by the committee of the whole and afterward by the convention, except the jury was given the right to determine the law and the facts and was not limited to the power of returning a general verdict. Not one word of the debate conveys to us the idea that the members of the convention desired to put editors and publishers and writers for newspapers in a class by themselves subject to having prosecutions for criminal libel changed upon the discretion of a judge for what he might regard as "good cause," while other persons accused of libel not published in a newspaper or of any other crime, and being under indictment or information therefor, would be limited to the legislative enactment contained in the Penal Code, if they would seek change of venue in any given case. Indeed, the remark of Judge McFarland indicates that he at least considered some legislative action necessary to the complete operation of the constitutional enactment.

It is provided by section 1 of article 22 of the Constitution: "That all laws in force at the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force and effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature." By this section the rule announced in the Penal Code must be and remain in force if not inconsistent with section 9 of article 1. We can see no such inconsistency, and as that rule provides but one reason for changing the place of trial, we must regard it as the legislative measure of "good cause."

In the brief of petitioner's counsel, and in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, the belief is expressed that it was intended by the makers of the Constitution to take entirely from the Legislature the power of providing the grounds upon which an indictment or information for criminal libel arising out of the publication in a newspaper might be transferred for trial from the county in which the prosecution was instituted. As we have indicated, we can see no reason for such a rule. Why should such a special class be made of those who are charged with the most dangerous and public form of libel? Why should editors and publishers of and contributors to newspapers be freed from laws made by the Legislature and be given by the Constitution to the tender mercies of judicial discretion as exercised in the vague, dimly defined region of "good cause"? The constitutional provision which we are considering either bestows a right which is to be regulated and given definite operation by statute, or it takes the place of statutory enactment, and becomes itself a statute which may not be repealed by the Legislature. Only upon the latter theory can it be upheld as self-executing. This doctrine is well expressed by Judge Cooley as follows: "A constitutional provision may be said to be self-executing if it supplies a sufficient rule by means of which the right given may be enjoyed and protected, or the duty imposed may be enforced; and it is not self-executing when it merely indicates principles, without laying down rules by means of which those principles may be given the force of law." Cooley's Const. Lim. p. 121. The Supreme Court of Illinois has said: "Where the Constitution requires the performance of an act, but provides neither officers, the means or the mode in which the act shall be performed, in such a case there is no other means of carrying such a provision into effect but by appropriate legislation. In such cases the Constitution does not execute such provisions." Phillips v. Quick, 63 Ill. 448. See, also, Washingtonian Home v. Chicago, 157 Ill. 414, 41 N. E. 893, 29 L. R. A. 798. Applying the rule above expressed it becomes clear that the section of the Constitution which we are considering is not self-executing. If the members of the constitutional convention had intended to take the subject of change of venue in these cases entirely away from the Legislature, it seems most highly probable that they would have provided in the Constitution all of the machinery for transferring the case—the custody of the prisoner, the transmission of the records and all of those matters which are treated in sections 1033 to 1038, inclusive, of the Penal Code. In other words, if there had been an intention, for some undeclared reason, to provide for change of venue which would exclude legislative interference, all chance of misapprehension would have been obviated by expressing in the Constitution itself not only the reason which would justify a change but also all of the steps necessary to present the matter to the court and to give effect to its order. This was not done.

No reason appears to us in the language itself of section 9 of article 1 in the history of that section, nor in the nature of the actions to which it applies, which would justify the conclusion that it is or was intended to be self-executing.

It follows herefrom that the views expressed by the trial judge are sound in point of law, and that the petitioner is entitled to a change of venue, if at all, upon no other ground than that expressed in section 1033 of the Penal Code. Wherefore the application for mandate is denied.

(S. F. 5,482.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 35*)—CONSOLIDATION—EFFECT.

Act March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 184), provides (section 1) for the consolidation of contiguous municipal corporations into one "to be thereafter governed in the name and under the general municipal incorporation under which the greatest of them in population, by the last federal census, may be governed." By section 2, the question submitted to the electors in such case is whether such municipal corporations shall be consolidated into one municipal corporation, to be governed in the name and as a city of the class under the general municipal incorporation law, under which the greatest in population may be governed when such petition is so received. Section 3 provides that when the consolidation is complete the property shall ipso facto be vested in the new corporation, or in the officer or board thereof which has the power to hold or control such property under the law under which the greatest in population of the municipal corporations so consolidated was theretofore governed, and that all ordinances of the municipalities except those of the one having the greatest population shall be deemed repealed, and that those shall be ipso facto operative throughout the combined territory, and that cases pending in justice's court, police court, etc., shall be deemed ipso facto transferred to the appropriate court of the municipality of the greatest population. Held, that it was clearly intended that the consolidated corporation should exist and be governed, in accord with the law in force in the municipality having the greatest population, ascertained as prescribed by law when the petition for submission of the question of consolidation was presented, and not that the consolidated corporation should become a city of another class, or be governed in accordance with the class to which it would belong if classified pursuant to the classification act of March 2, 1883 (St. 1883, c. 17), as amended by St. 1899, c. 102, based on the aggregate population of the consolidated municipalities.

2. Statutes (§ 93*)—Special Laws—Consolidation of Municipal Corporations.

In so far as Act March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 184), relating to the consolidation of municipal corporations, provides that, regardless of the aggregate population of consolidated cities, the consolidated municipalities shall be of the class to which the municipality greatest in population belonged when the petition was filed, and be governed by the charter provided for cities of that class, it does not violate Const. art. 11, § 6, forbidding the creation of municipal corporations by special laws, but allowing the Legislature to provide by general laws for the incorporation and organization of cities and towns, and their classification in proportion to population, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed.

3. Statutes (§ 93*)—Special Laws—Consolidation of Cities—Powers of Legislature—Classes.

The Legislature may provide a general scheme of consolidation for municipalities desiring consolidation, involving the practical disincorporation of the smaller in population and the annexation of its territory to the greatest, as is done by Act March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 184), providing that a consolidated municipality shall be of the class to which the greatest in population belongs at the time of filing the petition and be governed by the charter provided for cities of that class.

4. Statutes (§ 93*)—Classification for Government—Changes in Population—Effect.

Conceding a corporation must, on its original incorporation under the general act, necessarily take the organic act of the class to which it belongs by reason of its population, it retains that act regardless of changes in population, till its electors decide on reorganization under another act, and there is nothing requiring otherwise in Const. art. 11, § 6, forbidding creation of corporations by special laws, but allowing the Legislature to provide, by general laws, for incorporation, organization, and classification in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, and repealed, and providing for the organization under general laws of cities and towns before organized, and that all charters framed or adopted by authority of the Constitution, except in municipal affairs, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.

5. Constitutional Law (§ 48*)—Unconstitutionality of Statute—Determination.

6. Elections (§ 32*)—Consolidation—Election of Officers—Time Therefor.

The provision in section 2 of Act March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 184), for holding a special election to elect officers for a consolidated municipality within 90 days after filing in the office of the Secretary of State an abstract of the result of an election in favor of consolidation, is directory only, so that, though the time therefor may have gone by without a proper election, it may still be held on proper notice.

In Bank. Mandamus by J. R. Williams against the Board of Trustees of the City of Bakersfield and F. G. Munzer and others, trustees of such city. Peremptory writ denied, and alternative writ discharged.

E. L. Foster and E. G. Knapp, for petitioner. Matthew S. Platz, City Atty., for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an original proceeding in mandate, instituted by a resident, elector, and taxpayer of the town of Kern in Kern county, to obtain a writ requiring the defendants to set off the combined territory of the town of Kern and the city of Bakersfield in said county into six wards, and to call an election therein for the election of officers of cities of the fourth class.

The city of Bakersfield and the town of Kern are contiguous municipalities On October 18, 1909, proceedings were commenced for their consolidation under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the consolidation of municipal corporations," approved March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 282), providing for the consolidation of two or more contiguous municipal corporations into one, "to be thereafter governed in the name and under the general municipal incorporation law, or freeholders' charter, as the case may be, under which the greater or greatest in population of such municipal corporations, as shown by the last federal census, may be governed." Section 1. The town of Kern was at such date a city of the sixth class, organized and existing under the provisions of the general municipal corporation act. St. 1883, p. 93, and amendments. According to the last federal census it had a population of 1,291. In 1907 an enumeration of the inhabitants had been made by the trustees under the provisions of section 3 of the act to provide for the classification of municipal corporations, approved March 2, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 24), which showed 3,242 inhabitants. The city of Bakersfield was a city of the fifth class, organized and existing under the same act, with a population, according to the last federal census, of 4,836, and with a population, according to an enumeration made by the trustees thereof in 1907, of 7,338. The classification act, as amended, provided that cities having a population of more than 10,000 and not exceeding 15,000 shall constitute the fourth class, that cities having a population of more than 3,000 and not exceeding 10,000 shall constitute the fifth class, and that those having a population of not exceeding 3,000 shall constitute the sixth class. Section 1. Under both the federal census and the special enumeration Bakersfield was thus a city of the fifth class, and Kern had taken no proceedings under its special enumeration to reorganize as a city of the fifth class (section 3), and was confessedly a city of the sixth class. The result of the special election held in these municipalities in accord with the law upon the question of consolidation was in favor of the proposition, and an order was regularly made declaring the result, and the proper abstract was filed in the office of the Secretary of State. It is not questioned that all of the proceedings up to this point were in strict accord with the provisions of the consolidation act. Under the provisions of this act, where the municipality having the greater or greatest population, "ascertained as hereinbefore provided," is not operating under a freeholders' charter, the consolidation is not complete until a special election shall have been held in the combined territory "for the election of the officers required by law to be elected in corporations of the class to which the consolidated municipal corporation shall belong when such consolidation is completed," the returns thereof canvassed, and the result declared and entered. Section 2. In accord with the requirements of the statute in that regard, the trustees of the city of Bakersfield regularly ordered such an election to elect officers as designated for cities of the fifth class, the theory being that the consolidated municipal corporation will be a city of the fifth class. The claim of plaintiff is that, by reason of the fact that according to the special enumeration of 1907 the combined territory has a population of over 10,000, viz., 10,580, the consolidated municipality will be a city of the fourth class, and will operate under the charter provided by the Legislature for cities of that class, and that the election should be for officers of a city of that class, instead of a city of the fifth class, the elective officers of the two classes differing in many respects. A division into wards is also essential in cities operating under charters provided for cities of the fourth class. Accordingly plaintiff seeks the writ of mandate hereinbefore described. The facts stated appear in plaintiff's petition. The matter has been submitted for decision upon a demurrer thereto.

It is apparent that plaintiff is entitled to no relief if the consolidated municipal corporation is to be governed by the provisions of the charter provided by the Legislature for cities of the fifth class. If the plain language of the consolidation act is to control in this matter, it appears clear to us that such corporation will be governed by such charter. As we have seen, the sole provision for a consolidation is for a consolidation "into one municipal corporation, to be thereafter governed in the name and under the general municipal incorporation law, or freeholders' charter, * * * under which the greater or greatest in population of such municipal corporations, as shown by the last federal census, may be governed." Section 1. By the express terms of section 2, the question submitted to the qualified electors of each of the municipalities is "whether such municipal corporations shall become consolidated into one municipal corporation to be governed in the name, and under the freeholders' charter, or as a city of the class under the general municipal incorporation law, as the case may be, under which the greater or greatest in population of such municipal corporations ascertained as hereinbefore provided, may be governed at the time such petition is so received." Section 3 provides that, when the consolidation is complete, the property of the former corporations shall ipso facto be vested in the new corporation, "or any officer or board thereof which has the power to hold or control such property under the freeholders' charter, or other law under which the greater or greatest in population of the municipal corporations so consolidated was theretofore governed." The same section provides that upon such consolidation being effected, all ordinances of the municipalities except those of the one having the greater or greatest population shall be deemed repealed, and that the ordinances of the municipality having the greater or greatest population shall ipso facto operate throughout the combined territory, and also that all cases then pending in any justices' court, police court, recorder's court, etc., of any of the other municipalities shall be deemed ipso facto to be transferred to the appropriate court of the municipality of the greater or greatest population. There is absolutely nothing in the act that detracts from the effect of these provisions, and the act clearly shows the intent that the consolidated municipal corporation shall exist and be governed in accord with the law in force in the municipality having the greater or greatest population, ascertained in the manner prescribed by law, at the time the petition for the submission of the question of consolidation was presented to its legislative body. Under the provisions of the act it is immaterial whether or not the special enumerations by the trustees of the respective cities in 1907 control the federal census of 1900, but we do not desire to be understood as intimating that such special enumerations may be looked to at all in proceedings under this act. Both under the federal census and the special enumerations, Bakersfield was, at the time of the filing of such petition, the greater city in population, had a population of not less than 3,000 nor more than 10,000, and was in fact governed as a city of the fifth class under the general municipal incorporation law, the class to which it would belong by reason of its population if it was being incorporated for the first time, under the provisions of such law. If the language of the consolidation act is to govern, the consolidated municipal corporation will therefore operate under the charter provided by the Legislature for cities of the fifth class.

It is claimed by counsel for plaintiff that if the consolidation act be construed in this manner, it is in violation of section 6, art. 11, of our Constitution, in so far as it provides that, regardless of the aggregate population of the consolidated cities, the consolidated municipality shall be of the class to which the municipality greater or greatest in population belonged at the time of the filing of the petition and be governed by the legislative charter provided for cities of that class. This amounts to a claim, as well put by counsel for defendant, that in view of section 6, art. 11, of the Constitution, the Legislature has no power, by general law, to give "to the electors of two or more municipal corporations, the right to decide, by their votes, whether or not those two or more municipal corporations shall be consolidated, to be thereafter governed" until they see fit to change their government in a legal manner, by a law which, in effect, constitutes the charter of the city greater or greatest in population at the time of the initiation of the consolidation proceedings. In the absence of constitutional inhibition, there can, of course, be no question as to the absolute power of the Legislature in this regard. We shall assume, purely for the purposes of argument, that the special enumerations prevail over the federal census, and that the aggregate population of the two cities at the time of the initiation of these proceedings had been officially ascertained to be 10,580.

The constitutional provision, so far as material, is as follows: "Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended or repealed."

We do not think that this provision inhibits such legislation as is here involved. It is clear, of course, that the consolidation act of March 11, 1909, is in no sense of the word as used in our Constitution, a "special" law. Its provisions are applicable in every case of contiguous municipalities desiring to consolidate into one municipality, and have a uniform operation in all such cases. It is appropriate, and, in fact, necessary that such an act shall contain provisions as to the government of the consolidated municipality, made up of two or more municipalities having different organic acts, until such time as the electors thereof may, if entitled by reason of their population to do so, reorganize under other laws. A very natural and reasonable provision for such cases would appear to be the one made by the Legislature in this act, viz., that the consolidated municipality shall have the name, ordinances and organic act of the municipality greater or greatest in population, whether the organic act of that municipality be a freeholders' charter, or one of the charters created by the general municipal corporation act. Under the method here adopted, while the proceeding is styled a "consolidation" of two or more municipalities into one, it is practically and substantially an annexation of the municipality or municipalities having the lesser populations to the municipality greatest in population, just as much an annexation as we have where unincorporated territory is annexed to an existing municipality. The name, laws, and organic act of the greatest in population continue in force, and, by reason of the proceedings taken, become effectual throughout the new territory. We do not think that it can be disputed that the Legislature may provide a general scheme of consolidation for municipalities desiring to consolidate, involving the practical disincorporation of the smaller in population or the municipalities to be consolidated and the annexation of the territory included therein to the municipality greatest in population. This is what, in our judgment, they have done by the act under consideration. If there is in the proceeding provided by this act any creation, incorporation, or organization of a new corporation, it is so only in a most limited sense, and not at all in the sense that requires such corporation to adopt the organic act of the class of municipal corporations to which, by reason of its population, it may be entitled. So far as practical effects are concerned, the result of the proceeding given by the act is the same as it would have been had there first been a disincorporation of the smaller municipality, and a subsequent annexation of the territory incorporated therein to the municipality greater in population. We do not understand that it is claimed that where a municipality existing under the general municipal incorporation act attains a population entitling it to reorganize as a city of the higher class, whether by reason of the annexation of additional territory or any other cause, it ipso facto becomes subject to the organic act of cities of such higher class. The classification act itself expressly provides that this result can be accomplished, where the increase is shown only by a special enumeration and not by a federal census, only by a vote of the electors of the municipality on the question of reorganization at a general or special election, after a petition for the submission of that question, signed by not less than one-fifth of the qualified electors (section 3, Classification Act), and that such a vote is necessary in all cases to effect such a change of organic act is fully recognized by all the opinions in the case of Ex parte Fedderwitz, 130 Cal. xviii, 62 Pac. 935, a case very much relied on by counsel for plaintiff. Even in the opinion of the Chief Justice therein, specially relied on by plaintiff, it is said: "A city of the fourth class, organized under the charter of that class, retains its charter notwithstanding an increase of population which put it in the third class." While, therefore, it may be conceded that in the case of an original incorporation under the general municipal corporation act, the municipality must necessarily take the organic act of the class to which it belongs by reason of its population, under the views expressed in the case last cited, it retains that organic act regardless of changes in population, until its electors decide upon reorganization under another act, and there is nothing in section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution requiring otherwise. In the concurring opinion of Justice Henshaw, in Ex parte Mitchell, 120 Cal. 390, 392, 52 Pac. 799, cited in Ex parte Fedderwitz, supra, it is declared that the class originally fixed for a municipality continues, notwithstanding future fluctuations and changes in population, until further legislative action changing the class has been adopted, and that such a condition of the statute is in accord with the sense and meaning of the constitutional injunction requiring a classification of cities by population. If there is nothing in the constitutional provision inhibiting laws warranting such conditions, in view of what we have already said, we are unable to see therein any inhibition of such provisions of the consolidation act as those under discussion. As we have said, for all practical purposes the conditions are the same. It is a rule emphatically declared by this court on very many occasions that an act of the legislative department of the state will not be declared by the courts to be opposed to the state Constitution unless its violation of some provision thereof is clearly made to appear. We are satisfied that no such condition confronts us in the case at bar.

There are other points made by defendants against plaintiff's claim for a writ of mandate, but, in view of our conclusion on the matter already discussed, it will be unnecessary to notice them here. It should perhaps be further said, in view of what is said in the briefs as to the necessity of holding the election for officers within a designated time, that we regard such provision as directory only, so that, although such time may now have passed without a proper election being held, the election may still be held on proper notice thereof. See Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 241, 92 Pac. 353.

The application for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied and the alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged.

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1910.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 40*)—Consolidation—Election of Trustees—Division into Wards.

Act March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, c. 184), relating to consolidation, provides (section 2), that after a favorable vote and the canvass and filing of abstracts thereof, the legislative body of the municipality having the greater or greatest population, if not governed under a freeholders' charter, shall call a special election to be held in all of them to elect officers required in the class to which the consolidated corporation belongs when consolidation is completed. It provides further for canvass of the returns and entry of the result on the minutes of the body calling the election, and, further, that from and after such entry the consolidation shall be deemed completed and the corporation be deemed consolidated into a new one. Held, that in calling an election the only powers of the trustees, who are the agents of the state to effectuate the intent of the electors and who exercise powers specially delegated to them by statute, were those expressly conferred by the act or necessarily incident thereto, and they have no authority to divide combined territory into wards to elect the trustees therefrom, and neither does subdivision 14 of section 764 of the municipal corporation act (St. 1883, c. 49, and amendments [St. 1897, c. 136; St. 1901, c. 218]) giving such discretionary power to the board of trustees of cities of the class similar to that of a consolidated city authorize such division, and the election of trustees should be at large, and if, after the consolidated city is established, its trustees see fit to so divide its territory they may in their discretion.

2. Elections (§ 41*)—Consolidation—Election of Board of Education.

Where a consolidation will result in a city of the fifth class, government of which by Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, c. 49) § 751, includes a board of education of five members, a call to elect officers, required by law to be elected in corporations of this class, made pursuant to the consolidation act (St. 1909, c. 184), must include a call to elect such a board, though it will result in the destruction or dissolution of an existing school district, that being a matter entirely in the control of the Legislature.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§§ 3, 27, 51*)—CREATION, ALTERATION, AND DISSOLUTION—CONTROL OF LEGISLATURE.

Creation, alteration, and dissolution of municipal or other subordinate public corporations is a matter entirely in the control of the Legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions on special legislation.

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 40*)—CONSOLIDATION OF CITIES — CREATION OF NEW DISTRICT—EFFECT ON EXISTING DISTRICT.

Creation of a new school district from territory of consolidated cities will not necessarily destroy an existing district including one of them, and much less will the mere election of a board of education for the new city have this effect, but it will merely withdraw from it a part of its original territory.

5. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§ 40*)—CONSOLIDATION OF CITIES — CREATION OF NEW DISTRICT—EFFECT ON EXISTING DISTRICT.

Evil possibly arising from withdrawing part of a school district where part within a city is detached when a new city is created by its consolidation with another is obviated by Pol. Code, § 1576, and Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, c. 49) § 795, authorizing the county board to annex outlying territory to the city for school purposes.

In Bank. Mandamus by T. F. Allen against the Board of Trustees of the City of Bakersfield, and F. G. Munzer and others, trustees of such city. Peremptory writ ordered to issue as prayed.

C. E. Arnold, for petitioner. Matthew S. Platz, City Atty., for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The petitioner, a resident, elector, and taxpayer of the city of Bakersfield, applied for and obtained from this court an alternative writ of mandate requiring the trustees, in calling an election for the election of officers for a consolidated city composed of said city of Bakersfield and the town of Kern, to call the election of the board of trustees of such consolidated city at large and not from wards, and also to embrace in their call a board of education. The facts alleged in the petition are, for the purposes of this hearing, admitted, the respondents relying solely upon a demurrer. The proceedings heretofore taken for the consolidation of the two municipalities under the act approved March 11, 1909 (St. 1909, p. 282), are set forth in the opinion in Williams v. Board of Trustees of Bakersfield (S. F. No. 5,482) 109 Pac. 482. It was there held that the consolidated city was to be organized as a city of the fifth class. This is the class to which the city of Bakersfield belonged under its prior incorporation. Kern has been a town of the sixth class.

1. It is averred, in the petition now before us, that neither municipality was, prior to January 31, 1910, divided into wards, and that all elections held in either for officers have been at large. On said 31st day of January, 1910, following the determination that a majority of the electors of Kern and of Bakersfield had, at an election called for that purpose, voted in favor of consolidation, the board of trustees of Bakersfield, the body charged, under the law, with the duty of calling an election for the election of officers of the consolidated city, adopted an ordinance dividing the territory of the combined municipalities into five wards. On the same day they adopted an ordinance calling an election of officers of the consolidated city, and designating, among such officers, "a board of trustees to consist of five members, one to be elected from each ward, by the qualified electors resident in such ward of said consolidated city." The petitioner contends that the said trustees were without power to so divide the combined territory into wards, or to call an election of trustees by wards.

The power of the board of trustees of the city of Bakersfield to call the proposed election of officers for the consolidated city is derived from section 2 of the consolidation act above cited. That section provides (St. 1909, p. 286) that, after a favorable vote upon consolidation in each of the cities proposed to be consolidated, and the due canvassing of the votes and the filing of certain abstracts thereof, the "legislative body of the one of such municipal corporations so proposed to be consolidated having the greater or greatest population," if it be not governed under a freeholders' charter, "shall proceed to call a special election to be held in all the municipal corporations so proposed to be consolidated, for the election of the officers required by law to be elected in corporations of the class to which the consolidated municipal corporation shall belong when such consolidation is completed." The section further provides for the canvass of the returns of such election, and the entry of the result thereof on the minutes of the body calling the election. Then follows the further provision that, "from and after the date of such entry, such consolidation shall be deemed to be completed, and such municipal corporation shall be deemed to be consolidated into a new municipal corporation." It is apparent that, inasmuch as the new or consolidated corporation is not brought into existence until the entry of the returns of the special election of officers, the board of trustees of the larger city are not, in calling such election, acting as the legislative body of the new or consolidated city. They are taking one of the steps necessary to the complete formation of such consolidated city, and in so doing are exercising an authority specially delegated to them by the statute providing for consolidation. They may be said to be the agents of the constituent municipalities, or, rather, of the state, for the purpose of carrying into effect the declared intent of the electors of the two cities. That they are the legislative body of one of the cities is a merely accidental circumstance, which adds nothing to their powers. The Legislature might, if it had seen fit, have confided the duty of calling a special election to the county board of supervisors, or to some other board or officer. It follows that the only powers possessed by the board of trustees in connection with calling a special election are those conferred by the act in express terms, or such powers as are necessarily incident to those conferred. The consolidation act nowhere gives authority to divide the combined territory into wards for the purpose of electing trustees from wards. The respondents seek to find authority for such division in the municipal incorporation act (St. 1883, p. 93, and amendments). Section 764, subd. 14, of that act, gives to the board of trustees of cities of the fifth class power "in its discretion to divide the city, by ordinance, into a convenient number of wards, not exceeding five" and, when such division has been made, to designate the number of trustees to be elected from each ward. But this is a power conferred on the board in its capacity of legislative body for the municipality. The trustees of the existing city of Bakersfield are not exercising such power for the proposed consolidated city. They are authorized merely to call an election of officers for the city to be. If such election, in cities of the fifth class, were required to be by wards, the power to call an election might well be said to carry with it, by necessary implication, the power to divide into wards. Since, however, such division is not essential, but rests in the discretion of the legislative body of the city when formed, we can find no warrant for the contention that the trustees of the existing city of Bakersfield have authority, in calling an election of officers to govern the consolidated cities, to divide the territory of both into wards. The election of trustees should be at large. If, after the consolidated city is established, its trustees see fit to divide its territory into wards, they may, in their discretion, do so.

2. The call issued fails to provide for an election of members of a board of education for the consolidated city. There are now existing two school districts, which include the territory of the present cities of Kern and Bakersfield. The Sumner school district embraces all the territory within the town of Kern, and also a large territory without the corporate limits of said town. The Bakersfield school district embraces all the territory within, and much territory without, the corporate limits of the city of Bakersfield. It is alleged in the petition that the Sumner school district is the owner of large amounts of real and personal property all of which is situate within the corporate limits of the town of Kern. This district existed prior to the incorporation of said town, and, as is averred, no separate school district was ever in fact formed out of the territory embraced within the town of Kern.

The consolidated city, for which officers are to be elected, will be a city of the fifth class. The municipal corporation act provides that the government of cities of this class shall be vested in various officers, including a board of education, to consist of five members (section 751); and that from and after the organization of each of such cities, the same shall constitute a separate school district, which shall be governed by the board of education of such city. Section 795; Board of Education v. Board of Trustees, 129 Cal. 599, 62 Pac. 173, 605. Section 1576 of the Political Code likewise provides that "every city or incorporated town unless subdivided by the legislative authority thereof, shall constitute a separate school district, which shall be governed by the board of education or board of school trustees of such city or incorporated town. * * *" It is questioned by counsel for respondents whether a town or city of the sixth class (e. g., the town of Kern), which is not, by the terms of the municipal incorporation act, given a department of education, is intended to be included within the operation of this Code section. We do not regard this question as important to the determination of the present controversy. Let it be assumed that the incorporation of the town of Kern did not ipso facto create such new school district, and that the Sumner school district continued to be de jure, as well as de facto, a district comprising territory within as well as without the corporate limits of Kern. The proposed consolidation, when completed, will result in a city of the fifth class, composed of the territory within the corporate limits of the present municipalities of Bakersfield and Kern. Under the plain terms of the statutes above cited, such city will form a school district, to be governed by the board of education of such city. A board of education, composed of five members, is a part of the governmental machinery of cities of the fifth class, and it would, therefore, seem plain that a call for the "election of the officers required by law to be elected in corporations" of this class (St. 1909, p. 286) must include a call for the election of five members of the board of education. The respondents seek to avoid this conclusion by the claim that the Sumner school district constitutes a distinct and independent body politic, free and independent of any control by either of the existing municipalities, and that the electors of the cities of Kern and Bakersfield cannot, by voting to consolidate, destroy, or dissolve said Sumner school district. If the proposed consolidation would result in such destruction or dissolution, the contention would be sufficiently answered by the statement that the creation, alteration, and dissolution of municipal or other subordinate public corporations is a matter entirely in the control of the Legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions on special legislation. Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 Pac. 1067. We have just held, in Williams v. Board of Trustees, supra, that the consolidation act of 1909 is a general law, and if it, together with the municipal incorporation act and the Political Code, has the effect of ending the life of existing school districts, the result is one due to the action of the Legislature acting within its proper sphere. But, in fact, the creation of a new school district, comprising the territory of the consolidated city will not necessarily destroy the Sumner school district. Much less will the mere election of a board of education for the new city, which is all that is sought by the present proceeding, have this effect. If the Sumner school district now exists as a valid corporate entity, exercising jurisdiction over territory within and without the town of Kern, the incorporation of the territory within said town into a new district will not dissolve the old one. It will merely withdraw from it a part of the territory originally comprised within its boundaries. Such was held, in Bay View School Dist. v. Linscott, 99 Cal. 25, 33 Pac. 781, to be the effect of incorporating a city with boundaries including a part of the territory of an existing school district. "The portion of Bay View district which was included within the exterior boundaries of the city," says the court, "has ceased to constitute a part of that district." See, also, Vernon School Dist. v. Board of Education, 125 Cal. 593, 58 Pac. 175. The situation is similar where a portion of a school district is added to an adjacent municipality by annexation (see Kramm v. Bogue, 127 Cal. 122, 126, 59 Pac. 394), or where, as here, the territory of two municipalities is, by the process of consolidation, brought into a single municipality. Hancock v. Board of Education, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 44, cited by respondents, is not in point. The court was there discussing the extent to which the adoption of a freeholders' charter by a city may affect the existence of a school district formed under the general law. No such question arises here, where every right claimed is based upon a general law.

The respondents urge the hardship that will be worked upon the inhabitants of those parts of existing school districts not included within the new city. The law furnishes a method of obviating such evil by authorizing the board of supervisors of the county to annex outlying territory to the city, for school purposes. Pol. Code, § 1576; Mun. Corp. Act, § 795.

A peremptory writ will issue as prayed.

PEOPLE v. HOLMES. (Cr. 154.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 576*)—DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION—GROUNDS—FAILURE TO FILE INFORMATION.

Pen. Code, § 1382, authorizing the court to dismiss a prosecution on failure to file the information within 30 days after commitment, prescribes a penalty for the failure of the district attorney to comply with section 809 by filing the information within 30 days after the examination and commitment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1301; Dec. Dig. § 576.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 41*)—FILING OF NEW INFORMATION—STATUTES.

Pen. Code. § 809, requiring the district attorney to file an information within 30 days after commitment, does not fix the time within which a new information may be filed, and, where the first information was filed before the expiration of the 30 days, the filing of a new information pursuant to the order of the court for the purpose of giving a more complete statement of the facts must be presumed to be based on the examination before the magistrate, and no preliminary examination was necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 576*)—DELAY IN BRINGING ACCUSED TO TRIAL—EFFECT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1382, authorizing the court to dismiss the prosecution, where accused was not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, a motion to dismiss a prosecution because accused was not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the original information, though within 60 days after filing of a new information, on which the trial was had, was properly denied, where it was shown that the accumulation of business in the criminal courts made it impossible to bring the cause to trial at an earlier date, though it be assumed that the date of the filing of the original information was the one which should be considered on the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1297; Dec. Dig. § 576.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 576*)—DELAY IN BRINGING ACCUSED TO TRIAL—EFFECT.

Where accused and his counsel were present in court at the time the case was set for trial, and no objection was made to the setting of the case for trial on a date more than 60 days after the filing of the information, the court properly refused to dismiss the prosecution under Pen. Code, § 1382, for failure to bring accused to trial within 60 days.

5. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 48*)—DEFENSES—GOOD FAITH OF ACCUSED.

Pen. Code, § 511, providing that it is a sufficient defense to a charge of embezzlement that the property was appropriated openly and avowedly, and under a claim of title, preferred in good faith, is predicated on an avowed claim in good faith of the entire title to the property appropriated, and a charge on a trial for the embezzlement of notes and a mortgage that, if accused transferred his interest therein openly and avowedly, he was not guilty, was properly refused because it failed to include the element of claim of title in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 72–75; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

6. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 48*) — DEFENSES — GOOD FAITH OF ACCUSED.

An instruction that if accused believed that the notes and mortgage were a part of a copartnership fund belonging to himself and prosecutor he should be acquitted was properly refused under Pen. Code, § 511, for failing to include the essential element of claim of title preferred in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 72–75; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

7. EMBEZZLEMENT (§ 48*)—DEFENSES—GOOD FAITH OF ACCUSED—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for embezzlement of notes and a mortgage, the evidence authorized the inference that accused's right to the notes and mortgage did not ripen until certain property had been purchased, and that he merely held the notes and mortgage in trust as an earnest of the prosecutor's good faith that he would become a partner when the purchases were completed, which contingency never occurred, and there was no evidence that accused ever gave any consideration for the notes and mortgage, or that he made any purchase of any property, or that he made any effort to close any transactions on which his rights to the notes and mortgage depended, and the evidence showed that as soon as he converted the property he immediately left the state, there was no evidence on which good faith and belief of ownership could be predicated, and an instruction in the language of Pen. Code, § 511, relating to the good faith of accused, was properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

S. G. Barker, Charles E. Williams, and G. M. Spicer, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of embezzlement charged to have been committed in the county of Los Angeles on March 5, 1909, by appropriating and converting to his own use three promissory notes of the value of $150 each and a mortgage for $450 executed to him by one Nellie Messinger and which had been intrusted to his control and possession. An information was filed July 17, 1909, on which defendant was arraigned and to which he filed a demurrer which was overruled; and thereafter he entered a plea of not guilty and the trial of the cause was set for September 20, 1909. August 10, 1909, a new information was filed by order of the court, on which defendant was arraigned and given until August 18, 1909, to plead. On that day, and before entering a plea, he made a motion to set aside the information on the ground that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate, and also a motion to dismiss the action because the new information had not been filed within 30 days after he had been held to answer. Both of these motions were denied, whereupon he filed a demurrer to the new information, which being overruled he entered a plea of not guilty to the charge contained in the new information, and thereupon, by consent of defendant, the trial of the cause was set for September 17, 1909. In the minutes of the court for September 17, 1909, appears the following order: "The district attorney with the defendant and his counsel being present in court, and this being time set for trial of this cause, and the time of the court being occupied with other matters, trial of this cause is set for September 27, 1909, at 10 a. m." On September 27th defendant filed a motion to dismiss the prosecution of the action on the ground that the cause had not been brought on for trial within 60 days after the filing of the information. Leave and time were given to the district attorney to file affidavits excusing the delay in bringing the cause to trial, and to the defendant to file counteraffidavits if he desired. No showing other than the record was made by the latter, but the attorney in charge of the cause filed his own affidavit setting out the foregoing matters, the accumulation of business in the criminal courts and the conditions of the calendar and facts tending to show that it was not possible to bring the cause to trial at an earlier date. The motion was overruled and the cause proceeded to trial and the defendant was found guilty as charged. After his motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were overruled, he was sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison for five years; the defendant appealing from the judgment in open court.

The rulings of the trial court upon all the foregoing motions made by defendant were excepted to and are assigned as error for review on this appeal. Only the two motions to dismiss the prosecution, made under the provisions of section 1382 of the Penal Code, however, are specially presented, and the only authority cited in support of appellant's contention in respect to these is the section itself. Defendant also assigns as error the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury two certain instructions requested by him. The first of these reads as follows: "You are instructed that, if the evidence shows that the defendant sold, assigned, and transferred all his right, title, and interest in and to the notes and mortgage openly and avowedly, the defendant believing he had the right so to do, that you should acquit the defendant." The second as follows: "You are instructed that if the evidence shows that the defendant believed the notes and mortgage was a part of a copartnership fund belonging to the defendant and Mrs. Messinger that you should acquit the defendant."

The motion to dismiss a prosecution because the information has not been filed within 30 days after the defendant is held, which may be made under section 1382 of the Penal Code, is but a penalty prescribed for a violation of section 809 of the Code, which requires the district attorney to file the information within 30 days after examination and commitment by the magistrate, but this section has nothing to do with the time within which a new information may be filed. People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 216, 221, 76 Pac. 1028. The first information was filed in this cause before the expiration of the 30 days, and the new information was for the same offense, giving a more complete statement of the facts, for the purpose of supplying a defect in the original. The latter was filed upon the order of the court, and, for the purpose of this motion, must be presumed to be based upon the examination before the preliminary magistrate. No new preliminary examination is necessary. Ex parte Nicholas, 91 Cal. 643, 28 Pac. 47.

In presenting the motion to dismiss because the cause was not brought on for trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, the date of the filing of the original information is relied upon by appellant, instead of the date of the filing of the information upon which the trial was had. If it be conceded that the date of the filing of the original information is the one which should be considered in connection with this motion, the motion was nevertheless properly denied. The affidavit filed and showing made by the district attorney in excuse of the delay was sufficient to justify the court in denying the motion as the matter in the affidavit showed "good cause to the contrary." Section 1382, Pen. Code; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 56, 77 Pac. 777. In addition to this, it does not appear from the record that the defendant objected to the setting of the cause for trial on a date more than 60 days after the filing of the information, he and his counsel being present in court at the time when the case was set for trial on September 27, 1909. People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1, 4, 34 Pac. 490.

The first instruction refused by the court was no doubt an attempt to state the law covered by section 511 of the Penal Code: "Upon any indictment for embezzlement, it is a sufficient defense that the property was appropriated openly and avowedly, and under a claim of title preferred in good faith, even though such claim is untenable." The instruction fails to include the transactions intended to be covered by section 511. It contains no element of claim of title in good faith by the defendant, but informed the jury that if defendant transferred his interest in the notes and mortgage, believing that he had the right to transfer his interest therein, he should be acquitted. Section 511 is predicated upon an avowed claim in good faith of the entire title to the property appropriated. We think, also, there is an absence of any express claim upon the part of defendant that he in good faith owned the notes and mortgage at the time he converted them to his own use, and of evidence from which a reasonable inference to this effect could be drawn.

The second instruction was only another way of stating the same legal proposition attempted to be covered by the first, but limiting the claim of title to a special or copartnership right in the property. There is the same failure to include the essential element of claim of title preferred in good faith which is apparent in the first instruction. Whether we accept the theory of the prosecution that the deposit of the notes and mortgage with defendant related to the purchase of only one rooming house, or that of the defendant that it also included the purchase of others or another, the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence is that the defendant's right to the notes and mortgage did not ripen until the rooming house or houses had been purchased, and that he merely held them in trust as an earnest of the complaining witness' good faith that she would become a partner when the purchase or purchases were completed, and this contingency never occurred.

There is no evidence that defendant ever gave anything as a consideration for the notes and mortgage. He never made any purchases of any rooming house, and, according to the uncontradicted evidence of the witness best qualified to say, he never even had an option on the property in connection with which he claimed the right to use the complaining witness' notes. He made no effort to close up any of the transactions upon which his right to the notes depended, and, as soon as he converted the property which he is charged with embezzling, he immediately left the state. We are unable to see any evidence upon which good faith and belief of ownership could have been predicated, if either of the instructions had been within the letter of section 511.

No cause for a reversal being presented, the judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the Estate of Joseph Goetz, deceased. From an order denying petitions for partial distribution, Louis Bartlett appeals. Affirmed.

Louis Bartlett, for appellants. P. A. Bergerot and Jellett & Meyerstein, for respondents Louis A. and Joseph Goetz. Loewy & Gutsch, for respondents Camille, Marie, and Chas. Goetz.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying petitions for partial distribution of the above-named estate. Joseph Goetz by his last will, executed May 11, 1904, bequeathed to his nephew Jules Lesage the sum of $30,000. Toward the end of that year Jules Lesage died. Three years later the testator died. The appellants are children of Jules Lesage and the respondents are the executors of the will and certain beneficiaries thereunder. The provisions of the will involved in this appeal read as follows:

"Third: I give and bequeath to Jules Lesage my nephew who resides in the city of Mulhausen Alsace Germany the sum of Thirty thousand dollars ($30,000)."

"Twelfth: and devise so bequeathed by me should die, prior to my death the legacies, to them mentioned in this will shall lapse, and such legacies shall form a part of my residuring estate."

At the time of the execution of the will, and at the time of the death of Jules Lesage, section 1310 of the Civil Code provided that a devise to a relative of the testator, in case of the death of the devisee before that of the testator, should be taken by the lineal descendants of such devisee; but the section was silent in the case of a legacy under the same conditions, and consequently, following the general rule of law, such legacy lapsed. Estate of Ross, 140 Cal. 282, 73 Pac. 976. Two years before the testator's death this section was amended so as to prevent the lapsing of such legacies, and it now reads as follows (the portion added by the amendment being indicated by italics): "When any estate is devised or bequeathed to any child, or other relation of the testator, and the devisee or legatee dies before the testator, leaving lineal descendants, such descendants take the estate so given by the will, in the same manner as the devisee or legatee would have done had he survived the testator."

Appellants' chief contentions are (1) that the will took effect at the death of the testator, and that under the section of the Code above quoted, as amended in 1905, they are entitled to the legacy bequeathed to their father; (2) that clause 12 of the will is less clear and distinct than is the so-called legacy to the children of Jules Lesage, and that therefore, under section 1322 of the Civil Code, the legacy is not affected by clause 12. Independently of what may be the correct solution of appellants' first contention, we think the order of the trial court in denying the petition for partial distribution should be affirmed on the ground that from the twelfth clause of the will it satisfactorily appears that the testator intended that legacies given to persons who predeceased him should lapse, and such intention under the circumstances of this case must control. Although this clause of the will is not as clear as could be desired, nevertheless, the intention that the testator sought to express therein can be readily ascertained. In order to learn his intention the whole will may be examined, and words may be interpolated or transposed. Mitchell v. Donohue, 100 Cal. 202, 34 Pac. 614, 38 Am. St. Rep. 279; Estate of Stratton, 112 Cal. 513, 44 Pac. 1028; Estate of Wood, 36 Cal. 75. And in this connection it is also important to remember that the words "devise," "bequeath," and corresponding terms, are not invariably used with technical accuracy, but on the contrary they are frequently employed interchangeably, and especially by testators who are not lawyers, and who draw their wills. In re White, 125 N. Y. 551, 26 N. E. 909; Logan v. Logan, 11 Colo. 44, 17 Pac. 99; People's Trust Co. v. Smith, 82 Hun, 494, 31 N. Y. Supp. 522. In Underhill on Wills, volume 1, page 498, it is said: "Some words are so frequently misused by testators that very little argument is needed to move the court to reject them and to substitute others in their place. Thus, for example, the words "devise and bequeath and 'devise and legacy,' 'heir,' 'legatee or devisee' are used interchangeably in common parlance, and very frequently are incorrectly employed by testators unfamiliar with technical language who write their own wills." See, also, 14 Cyc. 28.

In the will before us in clauses 4 and 5, in referring to real estate the testator uses the words "bequeath" and "bequeathed." In clause 12 he places the words "devise" and "bequeathed" in juxtaposition. The word "devisee" is not correctly spelled anywhere in the whole will. In the 14th clause the testator provides that if "any person" named in this will should contest the same, the legacy or bequest made to the person so contesting shall be canceled; and in lieu thereof the sum of $50 shall be given to said person so contesting. It is evident to us that the testator, by the use of the words "legacy or bequest" in this provision of his will, meant to include a devise also. The testator was a man advanced in years and a foreigner by birth, and the instances just given, as well as many others which might be referred to, show that he was unable to express himself in the English language with technical or even ordinary accuracy. In clause 12 presumably the testator wanted to use the word "devisee," but spelled it "devise." Again, this clause is in a part of the will which deals with contingent events, and we think the testator intended this clause to commence with the word "if," and that the word "and" at the beginning of the clause was intended for the word "any." In fact it is not seriously disputed that the clause should read: "If any devisee * * * should die prior to my death, the legacies to them in this will shall lapse," etc. At all events, upon a consideration of the law and of the whole will we do not hesitate to hold, as did the trial court, that the testator intended that clause 12 should at least apply to all the legacies mentioned in the will, including that to Jules Lesage. But appellants claim that clause 12 cannot affect the legacy said to belong to the children of Jules Lesage, because that clause is not as clear and distinct as the legacy to them. This position is based on section 1310 of the Civil Code already quoted, and on that portion of section 1322 of the Civil Code which reads as follows: "A clear and distinct * * * bequest cannot be affected * * * by any words not equally clear and distinct, or by inference or argument from other parts of the will."

Section 1322 lays down a rule of construction of a will, to be applied where a clear and distinct devise or bequest is sought to be affected by a provision of the will not equally clear and distinct; and it is obvious that it has no application whatever to the question under consideration, for here the language of clause 12 does not affect or modify the legacy to Jules Lesage, but merely directs the disposition of the fund constituting the legacy in case the legatee should predecease the testator. The argument of appellants is based upon the theory that the legacy was to the children of Jules Lesage, or that the statute makes them the beneficiaries of the legacy, in case of the death of their ancestor, in spite of the intention of the testator expressed to the contrary. Here there was no legacy to the children, clear and distinct or otherwise; and section 1322 does not provide that when one may be entitled to a legacy by force of statute, any intention of the testator to prevent the operation of such statute must be as clear and distinct as the statute itself. That section does not come into play as between provisions of the law and clauses of a will, but it is a rule of construction of the will itself under the circumstances plainly stated in the section. Assuming that a will made prior to the amendment of 1905 (St. 1905, c. 155) to section 1310 falls under the operation of the amendment, still the statute can only be applied where there is no intention to the contrary expressed by the testator in his will; and it is sufficient if that intention can be fairly ascertained from the language used, and it need not be in clear and precise terms. Here such an intention is expressed, and it is incontrovertible, we think, that that intention must control, and that section 1322 is inapplicable.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CROWLEY et al. (Cr. 115.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 231*)—Preliminary Examination — Informing Defendant of Right to Counsel.

Pen. Code, § 858, providing that the magistrate, before whom one is brought for preliminary examination shall inform him of his right to counsel, is satisfied by simply informing him of the right; appointment of counsel, or sending for one without request, not being required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 480, 481; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 351*) — Evidence — Attempt to Escape.

On a trial for an offense, evidence that defendant after being arrested therefor made an attempt to escape, with the circumstances thereof, is admissible.

3. Criminal Law (§ 351*) — Evidence — Attempt to Escape Arrest Without Warrant—Felony.

The offense for which one was arrested being a felony, a warrant of arrest was not necessary, so that his being arrested without a warrant did not justify his attempt to escape.

5. ROBBERY (§ 30*)—PUNISHMENT.

Twenty years' imprisonment for the defendant the more culpable, and 15 years' for the other, was not excessive punishment for waylaying and assaulting a somewhat intoxicated old man, and severely injuring him, and robbing him of all he had.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Daniel Crowley and Frank Wilson were convicted of robbery, and appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. B. Finnegan, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendants were convicted upon an information charging them jointly with the crime of robbery. Defendant Crowley was sentenced to imprisonment at Folsom for the term of 20 years, and defendant Wilson was sentenced to imprisonment at San Quentin for the term of 15 years. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

1. The first point made by appellants is that the court erred in denying defendants' motion to set aside the information for the reason that at the preliminary examination, they "were not fully informed of their rights by the magistrate as to their right to counsel." Citing section 858, Pen. Code. Conceding that the failure of the magistrate to comply with the provisions of said section is cause for setting aside the information (People v. Napthaly, 105 Cal. 643, 39 Pac. 29), we think the record shows sufficient compliance therewith. The following proceedings took place before the magistrate: "The Court. Q. What is your name? A. Dan Crowley. Q. What is your name? A. Frank Wilson. There is a complaint filed in this court charging you with a felony. The district attorney will read the complaint. The complaint was then read by Mr. Rutherford. The court then said: 'You and each of you have a right to a preliminary examination, and the right to procure counsel and the right to be admitted to bail, pending the examination. When will you be ready to proceed with the examination?' To this the defendants replied: 'We will be ready at any time.' The Court: 'Mr. Rutherford, what time?' Mr. Rutherford: 'Two o'clock this afternoon.' The Court: 'Very well. In the meantime you will be held in bonds of $8,000, to appear here at two o'clock this afternoon for examination. You will be in the custody of the officer until you give such bail. It is ordered that you attend at the coroner's inquest as witnesses.'" Having been thus informed of their rights they should have asked time in which to obtain counsel, if they so desired. Instead, however, they answered, when asked when they would be ready to proceed with the examination, "We will be ready at any time." The statute does not require the magistrate to appoint counsel on the request of defendant at the preliminary examination, as is the case upon his arraignment (section 987, Pen. Code); but provides that "upon the request of the defendant, require a peace officer to take a message to any counsel in the township or city the defendant may name."

2. Error is assigned in that the court permitted proof to be made of "the commission by defendants of another crime, separate and distinct from the one on which they were being tried and committed after it." While defendants were in jail Constable Schumpf went to the prison with a young man named King, the latter carrying with him the breakfast for the prisoners confined in the jail, there being others besides the defendants. The evidence showed that after the constable had opened the door leading to the prisoners, defendant Wilson stood beside defendant Crowley near the door. Schumpf testified: "I opened the large padlock and opened the swinging door. I unlocked that and pulled it back and opened the door and I stepped inside the door here. It swings to my right and I stepped outside of the door to let the young man pass in the with the tray of meals. He no more than got inside than Crowley stepped up to me and he says 'throw up your hands.' He stepped up to me like this, and he says 'throw up your hands' and I made the remark 'go to hell' and I tried to throw the bolt against the door and he throwed the gun against me like that. The door was open and I could not close the door; the door was open about two feet and a half, and I hollered for help; I cried for help, and I made a grab for his gun and caught it." It appeared further that Schumpf drew his own gun and shot Crowley, the ball passing through his body and killing King. The facts relating to this encounter and its regrettable result came out in connection with the attempt of defendants to make their escape and for that purpose alone. The evidence was admissible. In State v. Wrand, 108 Iowa, 73, 78 N. W. 789, a somewhat similar case, the court said: "The sheriff detected the defendants, while in jail, attempting to escape by sawing the iron bars of their cell. They insist that evidence of this was inadmissible, because tending to prove a distinct offense. True, the commission of another crime may not be proven for the sole purpose of showing that the defendant would be the more likely to have committed that charged. State v. Rainsbarger, 71 Iowa, 746, 31 N. W. 865. See State v. Brady, 100 Iowa, 191, 69 N. W. 290, 36 L. R. A. 693, 62 Am. St. Rep. 500. But, if the evidence is material and relevant to the issue, the mere fact that it tends to establish guilt of a crime other than the one alleged furnishes no ground for its rejection. People v. Place, 157 N. Y. 584, 52 N. E. 576. That an attempt to escape is a circumstance proper to be shown and considered by the jury, is put beyond controversy by the authorities. State v. James, 45 Iowa, 412; State v. Arthur, 23 Iowa, 430; State v. Ruby, 61 Iowa, 86, 15 N. W. 848; State v. Stevens, 67 Iowa, 558, 25 N. W. 777." The fact that defendants were arrested and confined without warrant did not justify their attempt to escape. A warrant of arrest was not necessary, the crime for which they were arrested being a felony. The arrest was made late on Saturday night, July 3d, and the occurrence above mentioned took place the next morning.

3. It is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. Two witnesses testified to having seen defendants in the act of "going through" their victim and watched them until they came past the witnesses where it was light, saw them both plainly and at once looked up Constable Schumpf and with him found the men shortly afterwards. The evidence was ample to warrant the verdict.

4. It is urged that "the sentences imposed were excessive and disproportionately severe in light of the crime committed." The crime consisted of waylaying and assaulting a somewhat intoxicated old man and severely injuring him and while prostrated on the ground, robbing him of all the money he had—"three five dollar gold pieces" and "a silver cased watch." There was evidence tending to show that defendant Crowley was the more culpable and got no more than he deserved, and that Wilson got less is not matter of which either can complain.

5. It is claimed that the venue was not proven. In this defendants are mistaken. There was evidence that the crime was committed in the town of Truckee and in the county of Nevada.

6. It is also urged that "the instructions of the court to the jury were unfair to the defendants; more especially for the reason that the court assumed that the defendants had been legally arrested and charged with crime, and made an attempt to escape." The court instructed the jury as to the statute law under which a peace officer may make an arrest, but went no further in its instruction. The court also instructed the jury that an attempt to escape by one under arrest, accused of crime "is a circumstance to be weighed by the jury as tending in some degree to prove consciousness of guilt, and entitled to more or less weight, according to the circumstances of the particular case. In this particular case, whether or not the defendants did attempt to escape from the jail at Truckee after being placed therein by the officers and whether if any attempt was so made, such attempt tends in any degree to show a consciousness of guilt of the crime alleged in the information, are matters for you to decide." And the court instructed the jury that the acts surrounding the alleged attempted escape are to be considered by you for one purpose only, namely—whether or not they proceeded from a consciousness of guilt on the part of defendants or either of them, of the crime alleged in the information. We discover no error in these instructions.

PEOPLE v. HOLDEN. (Cr. 122.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 29, 1910.)

1. Robbery (§ 17*) — Information — "Assault" with Intent to Rob.

Pen. Code, § 950, requires an information to contain "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended"; and section 952, subd. 3, provides that "the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense" must be stated. Section 211 defines robbery as the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." Section 240 defines an assault as "an unlawful attempt, coupled with a present ability, to commit a violent injury on the person of another." Held, that an information under section 220, providing that "every person who assaults another with intent to commit * * * robbery * * * is punishable," etc., need not allege how or by what means the assault was made, nor set forth the means used to constitute force or excite fear, nor that the prosecuting witness was in possession of personal property, and that an information was sufficient which charged that the assault was made with force and violence, and that the intent was to feloniously, and by force, violence, and intimidation, steal, take, and carry away the property of the prosecuting witness, and against his will.

2. Criminal Law (§ 829*)—Instructions—Requests.

Where the jury were instructed that they must look alone to the evidence, it implied that they were not at liberty to act on their "own unaided suspicions," or on account of "any prejudice they may have conceived prior to or during the trial," and defendant was not prejudiced by the refusal of an instruction which was but an elaboration of the instruction given as to such implications.

3. Criminal Law (§ 829*) — Instructions — Requests.

Where a jury were correctly and fully instructed as to what constitutes a reasonable doubt, there was no error in refusing to repeat the instruction.

4. Criminal Law (§ 829*)—Instructions—Requests.

Accused was not prejudiced by refusal of an instruction correctly stating the law as to circumstantial evidence, when the jury were many times and in various forms told that they must be guided wholly by the evidence, and such instructions embraced both direct and circumstantial evidence.

5. Criminal Law (§ 784*)—Instructions—Circumstantial Evidence.

When the jury are fully instructed that they must be guided entirely by the evidence, and must be convinced by it beyond a reasonable doubt, the instruction goes to both direct and circumstantial evidence, and it must be assumed the jury will so apply it.

6. Criminal Law (§ 784*) — Instructions — Circumstantial Evidence.

7. Criminal Law (§ 807*)—Argumentative Instruction.

An instruction opening with the declaration that "with respect to all verbal admissions it may be observed that they should be received with great caution" was properly refused as argumentative.

8. Criminal Law (§ 1178*)—Appeal—Waiver of Alleged Errors.

Where there is no oral argument, and the alleged errors, in admitting evidence which appellant in his brief states were to be dwelt on more fully in the opening argument, are not shown in any brief, it must be assumed that they have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Edward Holden was convicted of an assault with intent to commit robbery, and he appeals from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

L. L. Chamberlain, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, and Charles A. Tuttle, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant and one Edward Hansen were jointly charged with the crime of an assault with intent to commit robbery upon one John Connolly on September 28, 1909. A demurrer to the information was overruled, and defendant Holden was tried separately and found guilty as charged. A motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in San Quentin for three years. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The information charges the crime of felony as follows: "Assault with intent to commit robbery, committed as follows: The said Edward Holden and Edward Hansen on or about the 28th day of September, A. D. 1909, at the said county of Placer, in the said state of California, and before the filing of this information, in and upon one John Connolly, feloniously and with force and violence did make an assault with intent the money, goods and chattels of the said John Connolly, from the person and immediate presence and against the will of him, the said John Connolly, then and there feloniously and by force, violence and intimidation to steal, take and carry away, contrary to the form," etc.

1. It is urged that the demurrer should have been sustained, first, because the information does not state that the prosecuting witness had any "money, goods and chattels" upon his person or in his immediate presence at the time of the alleged assault; second, that the circumstances of the assault are not set forth nor what kind of force or violence or intimidation was used. Section 220, Pen. Code, provides: "Every person who assaults another with intent to commit * * * robbery * * * is punishable," etc. Section 950 requires "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended"; and section 952, subd. 3, provides that "the particular circumstances of the offense charged, when they are necessary to constitute a complete offense" must be stated. "Robbery is the felonious taking of personal property in the possession of another, from his person or immediate presence, and against his will, accomplished by means of force or fear." Pen. Code, § 211. "An assault is an unlawful attempt coupled with a present ability to commit a violent injury on the person of another." Id. § 240

The argument is that the crime charged is a composite crime (Pen. Code, § 220)—an assault coupled with the intent to rob being the complete offense—and hence the particular circumstances of the offense charged must be set forth in the information and that it is not sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute. Citing People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 581, 75 Pac. 170; People v. Mahony, 145 Cal. 104, 78 Pac 354; People v. Shearer, 143 Cal. 66, 76 Pac 813. People v. Perales is claimed "to be almost a parallel case." The charge there was "assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury," the means described being "with a heavy wooden stick." The court held that there was "no proper or particular designation of the means which it is claimed were used in its commission." The court laid down this rule: "Where the words or terms used in the statute have no technical or precise meaning, which of themselves imply the offense, or where the particular facts or acts which shall constitute it are not specified, but, from the general language used, many things may be done which may constitute an offense, it is then necessary, in charging an offense claimed to be embraced within the general language of the statute, to set forth the particular things or acts charged to have been done, with reasonable certainty and distinctness, so that the court may determine whether an offense within the statute is charged, or one over which it has jurisdiction, and so that the defendant may be advised of the particular nature of it, in order to defend against it, and to plead in bar a judgment of conviction or acquittal thereof, if subsequently prosecuted." It is urged now that it is impossible "to tell whether defendant is charged with having made an assault with a weapon; whether he knocked the prosecuting witness down with his fist; whether he intimidated him by threats of prosecution for some crime by holding a loaded revolver at his heart, or an ax over his head. There is absolutely nothing to show what means or force were used to intimidate him." In People v. Weir, 10 Cal. App. 460, 102 Pac. 539, the information charged that the assault was made with "deadly weapon," to wit, a "revolver," and was held sufficient in following the language of the statute.

In the case here the crime charged is "assault with intent to commit robbery," and is unlike the Perales Case, supra. It was not necessary to allege how or by what means the assault was made. Nor was it necessary to set forth the means used to constitute force or to excite fear. Neither was it necessary to aver that the prosecuting witness was at the time in possession of personal property. Highwaymen do not first ascertain whether their victim has money or other property before attacking, and it would be unreasonable to hold that an intent to rob could not be shown without averring and showing that the victim had something of which he could be robbed. The crime consists of the assault with intent to rob. The information charged that the assault was made with force and violence, and also charged that the intent was to feloniously and by force, violence, and intimidation, steal, take, and carry away the money, goods, and chattels of the prosecuting witness and against his will. The information was sufficient.

2. Defendant asked an instruction (marked "6") to the effect that the jury must be guided according to the law as given by the court. It was refused and without prejudice, for it was substantially given elsewhere.

3. Instruction marked "11" was refused, and, it is claimed, to defendant's prejudice. This instruction is but an elaboration of the instruction elsewhere given that the jury must look alone to the evidence. By this is implied that they were not at liberty to act upon their "own unaided suspicions," or on account of "any prejudice they may have conceived prior to or during the trial." We must assume that the jury were intelligent men, and when told that they must be governed by the evidence and that only, we cannot say that they acted otherwise because not particularly cautioned not to be influenced by prejudice or by their suspicions.

4. The modification of instruction 12 by omitting a portion of it did not detract from its force, or fail to distinctly state that the defendant was entitled to the individual judgment of each juror.

5. The jury were correctly and fully instructed upon what constitutes a reasonable doubt. It was not error to refuse to give it again as was asked by instruction 19.

6. Instruction 20, asked by defendant and refused by the court, correctly stated the law as to circumstantial evidence, but we do not think that the defendant was prejudiced because not given. They were many times and in various forms told that they must be guided wholly by the evidence, and such instructions embraced all the evidence, direct and circumstantial. Where the case rests entirely or chiefly upon circumstantial evidence, it is desirable that some direction be given the jury as to the necessity for establishing each fact, beyond a reasonable doubt, which is essential to complete the chain of circumstances tending to establish the crime charged. But we are not prepared to say that a refusal to give such an instruction would necessarily be prejudicial error, for the law makes all competent evidence admissible, whether direct or circumstantial, and leaves the jury to determine its relative weight in each case. When, therefore, full instructions are given that the jury must be guided entirely by the evidence, and must be convinced by it beyond a reasonable doubt, the instruction goes to both classes of evidence, and it must be assumed that the jury will so apply it. Furthermore, in the present case, substantially all of the evidence of defendant's guilt was direct, and there was no call for an instruction upon circumstantial evidence. Instructions 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25 were along the same line and need not be further noticed.

7. Instruction 26, asked by defendant, was properly refused. It is argumentative, and is an instruction concerning matters of fact. The instruction opens with the declaration that "with respect to all verbal admissions it may be observed that they should be received with great caution." In Goss v. Steiger Terra Cotta, etc., Wks., 148 Cal. 155, 82 Pac. 681, a similar instruction was refused and the court held that it was not prejudicial error. The cases on the point are there reviewed. Instructions 27 and 29 were in substance given elsewhere. In instructions 45, 49, and 50 we discover no error.

It is suggested in the brief of the defendant that the court erred in admitting certain testimony, and states that "these errors are specifically pointed out in the motion for new trial, and will be dwelt upon more fully in the opening argument." There was no oral argument, and the alleged errors are not shown to us in any brief. We must assume that they have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Steth A. Scott was convicted of arson, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Carl E. Lindsay, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of arson of the second degree and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the period of 10 years. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The fire occurred on the third story of a building situated at No. 25 Third street in San Francisco on February 21, 1909, shortly after 1 o'clock in the afternoon. For some time prior to that date one Miss Williams conducted a shorthand and typewriting school in rooms situated upon said third floor, and the defendant was the manager of the school and an instructor under Miss Williams. It is conceded that a portion of the premises was burned and that the fire was of incendiary origin; but the defendant contends that the verdict convicting him of the crime of arson is not sustained by the evidence. We have carefully examined the record with a view to determining this point, and are constrained to hold that the evidence is sufficient. The theory of the prosecution was that the defendant set fire to the premises in order to enable Miss Williams to collect on her policy of insurance. Evidence was introduced showing a close and strong friendship between defendant and Miss Williams. On the subject of the fire itself two painters, who were at work painting on the third floor of the building, testified that the defendant was there as late as 12:45 p. m., which was shortly before the discovery of the fire, although defendant claimed that he left there an hour earlier. Another witness who knew the defendant testified that when the fire engines and other fire apparatus were being hurried to the scene of the fire, the defendant was at a point within two blocks of the place and going away from it. The defendant on the other hand testified that at that time and for half an hour prior thereto he was a mile away, taking luncheon with Miss Williams and another woman. When Miss Williams insured the furniture and equipment of the school originally, and again when she increased the amount of her policy, the defendant was present and took an active part in the transactions; yet after the fire he disclaimed to the fire marshal having any knowledge at all on the subject of her insurance, and in an investigation into the origin of the fire, the defendant, in order to account for his whereabouts from the time he claimed to have left the building until he arrived at Larkin and Ellis streets for luncheon, stated that he had an engagement with one W. F. Berrill, and that he walked to the place of appointment at Seventh and Howard streets, and failing to find Berrill that he walked from there to Larkin and Ellis streets. Berrill, however, testified that he had no engagement with the defendant on that day. Other circumstances in the case pointing to the guilt of the defendant are that although it was desired that the painted portions of the third story should dry as quickly as possible, so that a session of school might be held on Tuesday, February 23d, the defendant, against the advice of the painters, ordered the window curtains drawn, the windows left open six inches from the bottom, the inner doors open and the outer doors locked. Immediately after the fire a certain book was found on the defendant's desk, with a leaf turned down at a part of the book entitled, "How to collect insurance." The evidence is wholly circumstantial, and while it appears from a reading of the entire record that the case is a close one, nevertheless, we think that it is sufficient to sustain the verdict.

Appellant complains of the action of the trial court with regard to certain instructions. The first instruction requested by defendant was marked by the court "Given"; and, although, according to the reporter's transcript of the proceedings, it was not given in the exact language proposed, yet it was given in substance, and the subject-matter thereof was fully covered. As to the other instructions criticized, it is sufficient to say that it clearly appears that the jury was fully and fairly instructed by the trial judge on every phase of the law appertaining to the case. No error was committed in the admission or rejection of evidence.

The verdict finding the defendant guilty was rendered on May 11, 1909. The pronouncement of sentence and judgment was continued from time to time until June 14, 1909, and upon that date was again continued until June 22d (being 41 days from the finding of the verdict) when sentence and judgment were finally pronounced. Section 1191 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1909 (St. 1909, c. 589), provides in part that the court must pronounce judgment within not less than 2 nor more than 5 days after the verdict or plea of guilty, but that, for the purpose of hearing and determining a motion for a new trial, this time may be extended not more than 10 days, etc. In Rankin v. Superior Court, 106 Pac. 718, it was held that unless the trial court pronounced its judgment within the 5 days specified in the section, or within an extension of time therein authorized, the defendant is entitled to a new trial. The verdict of the jury in the present case was rendered before the amendment to section 1191 became law, the amendment being approved April 14, 1909, and becoming effective June 13th following. The continuances prior to the one of June 14th were under the old law and were regular. The judgment was pronounced and the appeal taken after the amendment in question became operative; and it becomes necessary to consider the effect of the last order of continuance, viz., that of June 14, 1909.

This appeal was taken under section 1191 of the Penal Code as amended, and the record does not show that the continuance of June 14th (which was for more than five days) was made for the purpose of hearing and determining a motion for a new trial. Defendant therefore contends that he is entitled to a new trial. But such motion was in fact heard and denied; and in the absence of a showing by the record to the contrary we will presume that the court acted regularly, and that the continuance of June 14th was ordered for the purpose of enabling the court to hear and determine such motion. People v. Russell, 105 Pac. 416.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 28, 1910. On Petition for Rehearing May 28, 1910; Denied by Supreme Court June 27, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 837*)—Questions Reviewable—Matters of Law.

The incompetency of parol evidence to vary a writing may be considered on appeal as a matter of law, though no objection was made in the trial court to the introduction of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3275; Dec. Dig. § 837.*]

2. Appeal and Error (§ 1195*)—Law of the Case.

The decision of the court, on appeal from a ruling on a demurrer to the complaint in an action on an instrument that the instrument was nonnegotiable but assignable, is the law of the case on a subsequent trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4661–4665; Dec. Dig. § 1195.*]

3. Bills and Notes (§ 275*)—Indorsement—Nonnegotiable Instruments — Rights of Indorsee.

Under Civ. Code, § 1459, authorizing the transfer by indorsement of nonnegotiable contracts to pay money, subject to equities in favor of the maker at the time of the indorsement, the indorsee of a nonnegotiable instrument obtains no better title than his indorser had, though indorsed before maturity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 738; Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

4. Banks and Banking (§ 154*)—Deposits—Right to Recover—Promise to Pay Certificate of Deposit.

The right to recover the amount of a certificate of deposit, based on an agreement by the bank receiving the deposit and issuing the certificate to pay the amount thereof, provided a judgment is obtained, and the judgment is obtained, is founded on estoppel in the form of a new cause of action, and to be available must be pleaded; and the holder of the certificate who seeks a recovery on the theory of an express or implied contract may not recover on the new cause of action.

5. Judgment (§ 724*)—Res Judicata—Findings—Conclusiveness.

A finding in a suit, dismissed without prejudice, which is not necessary to the judicial action taken by the court, does not affect the rights of either of the parties.

6. Banks and Banking (§ 152*)—Certificate of Deposit—Assignment—Liability of Bank.

A bank receiving a deposit and issuing a certificate therefor, which the depositor assigns, is concerned only in knowing before paying to the assignee that the assignment binds the assignor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 478; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 411*)—OFFICERS—POWERS.

The general manager of a corporation intrusted with the management of its affairs may assign the choses in action of the corporation to its creditors, either in payment of or as security for the payment of a precedent, corporate debt, without express authority from the board of directors.

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 411*)—OFFICERS—POWERS.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 2300, 2317, providing that an agency is ostensibly created when the principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent, and that the authority of such an agent is such as the principal allows third persons to believe the agent possesses, the court, in the absence of bad faith of a third person performing services for a corporation at the request of its manager and taking a certificate of deposit in the name of the corporation in payment for the services, must presume that the third person became a bona fide assignee of the certificate and stood in the place of the corporation as owner, subject only to such equities as the bank issuing the certificate might set up against the corporation.

9. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 152*)—CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT—LIABILITY OF BANKER.

Where a bank received a deposit from a corporation through its managing officer, and issued a certificate of deposit therefor stipulating that the money could not be withdrawn unless the certificate was returned signed by the depositor, etc., an oral contract, made between the bank and the managing officer to the effect that the managing officer must show his authority to act for the corporation before the deposit can be withdrawn, did not prevent the corporation or a bona fide assignee from collecting the deposit, without complying with the oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 471, 478; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

10. EVIDENCE (§ 441*) — PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING TERMS OF WRITTEN AGREEMENT.

Contemporaneous parol agreements between parties to a written obligation to pay money, as to the manner of its negotiation, may not be set up as a defense against payment under the contract in an action by the payee, or his assignee, for such agreements are within the parol evidence rule, which applies whether the instrument is negotiable or nonnegotiable.

11. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 18*)—ACTIONS—INDEMNITY.

Where it can be shown that the party liable on a lost instrument may be injured if he pays it, he may require an indemnity bond; but he cannot require such a bond in any other case.

12. LOST INSTRUMENTS (§ 18*)—ACTIONS—INDEMNITY.

A bond will not be required before entering judgment on a lost instrument where the instrument is not negotiable, or where, though negotiable, it is payable to order and is unindorsed or specially indorsed, or where the instrument is clearly shown to have been destroyed, or where it has been traced to the maker's custody, or where the maker is protected by limitations.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The error, if any, in permitting a witness to state conclusions is not prejudicial where the conclusions were accompanied by a statement of the facts from which the same were drawn.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4161, 4162; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

14. DAMAGES (§ 125*)—CONTRACTS FOR THE PAYMENT OF MONEY — MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where demand for the payment by a bank of a certificate of deposit was regularly made by the holder, the damages for failure to pay are regulated by Civ. Code, § 3336, providing that the detriment caused by the wrongful conversion of personalty is presumptively the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with interest from that time, etc., so that the holder may recover the market value of the certificate when payment was refused, together with interest.

15. EVIDENCE (§ 384*)—PAROL EVIDENCE TO VARY WRITING—GROUNDS FOR EXCLUSION.

The proposition that in the absence of objection secondary evidence is sufficient to support findings based thereon, does not apply to the use of parol evidence to vary a written instrument, since whether a contract in writing may be varied by parol is a question of substantive law, while the question of admission or rejection of secondary evidence is governed by the rules of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

16. EVIDENCE (§ 442*)—PAROL EVIDENCE TO VARY WRITING — WRITTEN CONTRACTS — PRIOR AND CONTEMPORANEOUS NEGOTIATIONS.

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 1625, a contract reduced to writing, whether required by law to be in writing or not, supersedes all negotiations and stipulations; and where the terms as agreed on are not all reduced to writing, the omitted terms can only be supplied by an appropriate proceeding or under proper allegations, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1856.

17. TRIAL (§ 105*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EFFECT OF ADMISSION — PAROL EVIDENCE VARYING WRITING.

Parol, or secondary evidence, unobjected to, may show the terms of a contract reduced to writing, and so furnish sufficient proof to sustain a finding; but parol evidence is not admissible to vary the writing, and if admitted without objection, it is insufficient to support a finding varying the writing.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Lloyd M. Robbins, George J. Leovy, and Platt & Bayne, for appellant. J. Wade McDonald, for respondent. Puterbaugh & Puterbaugh, for defendant Lamme.

TAGGART, J. This is an action by the assignee of the indorsee of a deposit receipt to recover the value in United States money of 2,000 Mexican dollars deposited with the banking house of the defendant corporation, located in Hongkong, China. Judgment was for plaintiff against the banking corporation, and the latter appeals from the judgment and the order denying its motion for a new trial.

The depositor, the American Commercial Company, was incorporated in the District of Columbia for the purpose of doing a general brokerage business wherever such business could be lawfully conducted. Its certificate of incorporation, dated August 13, 1904, provides that "the concerns of the company for the first year shall be managed by not less than three nor more than fifteen directors, namely" (naming five persons as to whom it is important here to say only that one is "E. Edwards"). The main office is fixed in the city of Washington. So far as the record in this case discloses, it has never done any business except in China. On November 26, 1904, Mr. E. Edwards, accompanied by two of the other directors of the American Commercial Company, their names not being disclosed, deposited with the branch bank of the defendant corporation located at Hongkong, China, 2,000 Mexican dollars, receiving therefor a receipt as follows: "Notice of withdrawal given 26 November, 1904, due 26 November, 1905. International Banking Corporation. Deposit Receipt. Not transferable. Hong Kong, 26 November, 1904. 2,000 Locally. Received from Messrs. The American Commercial Company Dollars Two Thousand Locally as a deposit repayable here, bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. per annum, to remain until twelve months notice on either side expires. No. 3/134. For the International Banking Corporation. L. L. Fespner, Accountant. Chas. C. R. Scott, Manager."

On the back of said receipt were the following words in print: "N. B. The within sum cannot be drawn, unless this receipt is returned, signed by the depositors; nor can the amount be drawn against in separate sums by cheque or draft. The interest will cease at the expiration of notice of withdrawal." From the deposition of Manager Scott, who signed the foregoing receipt, it appears that when Mr. Edwards called, accompanied by the other gentlemen as above stated, he, Scott, acting on behalf of the defendant corporation, at first refused to receive the money because "Mr. Edwards could show me no authority for acting as managing director of the American Commercial Company. He, however, declared that he would be able to produce the necessary papers, which I told him would have to be signed by the British or other foreign consul in the United States before he could withdraw the money, and he made the deposit on that understanding." No objection was made to the introduction of this testimony, but the incompetency of parol evidence to vary a writing may be considered as a matter of law.

Through transactions had with E. Edwards, acting in the name of the American Commercial Company, the latter became indebted to the defendant Lamme who, in an action brought in the United States consular court at Shanghai, China, on July 27, 1905, recovered judgment against the American Company in the sum of 2,150 Mexican dollars, with interest. On October 2, 1905, he also procured from the same court what is designated as a "supplemental decree and order of satisfaction of judgment," wherein it is recited that the deposit receipt above set out "was by the defendant duly assigned, transferred, and delivered to the plaintiff by the defendant on or about the 10th day of March, 1905, to secure the debt due from the defendant to plaintiff upon which the judgment in this cause was rendered." It is further recited that plaintiff is willing to take the instrument in satisfaction of the judgment, and ordered that the title of the plaintiff in the receipt and the money evidenced thereby be confirmed and quieted in him, and the same credited on said judgment in full payment and satisfaction thereof. The recital in the judgment in this consular action as to service of summons and acquiring jurisdiction of the defendant is as follows: "That the defendant has been duly served with summons by delivering a copy of the same to Edward Edwards, the vice president, a director and agent of said defendant, he being the highest officer of said defendant company found within this jurisdiction, and the said defendant having appeared by said Edwards and filed its answer herein, admitting all the allegations of plaintiff's complaint." The only showing of jurisdiction to enter the "supplemental decree" is that which appears in the original judgment roll resulting in the judgment in favor of Lamme against the American Company.

The "deposit receipt" indorsed: "The American Commercial Company, by Edward Edwards, (Per) Manager," was thereupon presented at its maturity to the defendant bank at Hongkong, on behalf of Lamme, accompanied by a copy of the consular judgment and decree above mentioned, but payment was refused because no showing was made of Mr. Edwards' authority to indorse for the company, and thus give the bank a legal discharge. Afterwards, to wit, on December 29, 1905, Lamme brought another action in the consular court of Shanghai against the International Banking Corporation and the American Commercial Company. The former appeared and the latter defaulted (there being a recital in the "Findings and Judgment" that the American Company had "been duly served with summons" and failed to appear). In this action the court found all the facts substantially as above set forth as to the indebtedness of the American Company to Lamme, the making of the judgment of July 27, 1905, and the decree of October 2d; the presentation of the receipt and the defendant bank's refusal to pay; also, that no one else had made any claim upon the money; that there were no liens, claims or demands against it, and that the bank had no set-off or demands against it, but "that the said money having been so deposited with the said International Banking Corporation at Hongkong and the said deposit receipt being nonnegotiable, the same is collectible only under adequate authority from the said American Commercial Company." Only inferentially is it found that adequate authority was not shown, but the court's conclusion of law is that plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action, and the judgment is that the action be dismissed without prejudice to the plaintiff in bringing any other on account of the subject-matter of this action. The date of this judgment, as stated in the record, is February 24, 1905, but it is apparent that it should be 1906. No appeal was ever taken therefrom.

Subsequently the receipt of deposit was lost (March, 1907) and later (January 2, 1908), the rights of defendant Lamme in the instrument in question and the funds which it represented were assigned to plaintiff, and, after demand made by plaintiff on the San Francisco house of defendant, this action was brought to recover the value of the Mexican money in United States gold coin at Hongkong on the date of the demand made by Lamme (November 27, 1905), together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from November 26, 1904.

The instrument in question was by this court declared to be an assignable instrument but not negotiable in the sense that the term "negotiable" is used when applied to commercial paper. Dollar v. International, etc., 10 Cal. App. 83, 101 Pac. 34. By the law of the case, then, the instrument must be considered as nonnegotiable, and while it might be transferred by indorsement, the indorsee obtained no better title to the instrument than his indorser, notwithstanding it was indorsed to him before maturity. Civ. Code, § 1459. It was also held by this court, passing upon the allegations of the complaint, that, although the instrument was payable at Hongkong, yet after proper demand had been made at that place and payment refused, suit might be brought in this state "where the parties enter an appearance and question only the sufficiency of the pleading as stating a cause of action."

Whether or not proper demand was made at the place of payment becomes important in determining the right to bring the action in a court of this state, as well as in ascertaining upon what basis the value of the "money" so deposited is to be fixed, if the plaintiff is entitled to recover. The judgment of the consular court of July 27, 1905, even if it were conceded to be based upon proper service on the American Commercial Company, established no more than that that company was indebted to Mr. Lamme in the sum named in the judgment. The so-called "supplemental decree" whereby the court attempted to transfer the title of the American Company to the receipt to Mr. Lamme was ineffective for that purpose and did not affect the contract between that company and the appellant. The only possible application it could have would be in connection with the testimony of Mr. Lamme to the effect that Mr. Scott made a statement under oath that he had a conference with General Bragg, the latter acting on behalf of Mr. Lamme, wherein there was "practically" an arrangement, and Scott consented, that if the judgment in the consular court first above mentioned were obtained and the certificate applied upon it "that the money would be paid on presentation." Such an estoppel being in the form of a new cause of action should have been pleaded to become the basis of a recovery. If plaintiff recovers in this action he must do so on the theory of an enforcement of the express contract made by Edwards, or the implied contract of a depositor, no estoppel being pleaded.

Both appellant and respondent rely upon the "findings and judgment" in the second consular action which were rendered on February 24, 1906. No finding made therein, however, which was not necessary to the judicial action taken by the court, can affect the rights of either of the parties, and the judgment, as above stated, is one of dismissal without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to bring another action. Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 509, 29 Pac. 121. The findings made on behalf of the plaintiff are conclusive upon no one, and there is no express finding of fact from which it can be determined that the judgment of dismissal was rendered because the authority accompanying the presentation of the instrument was not adequate. It is only argumentatively that this can be assumed to be the basis of the court's dismissal. Neither can this be implied or presumed from the judgment itself.

It appears from Mr. Lamme's testimony on the trial that he knew from dealings had by him with Edwards in the name of the American Commercial Company, from papers and documents seen by him while acting as attorney for the company on the employment of Edwards, from his knowledge that Edwards appointed agents and subagents for the corporation in Canton, Shanghai, and other places in China, and created debts against the company and paid them in its name, and from the fact that no other person acted as its agent in these places during this time, and that he never heard the authority of Edwards questioned except in this transaction, as well as from Edwards' own statement, that he (Edwards) was the vice president, one of the directors of and the general manager for the American Commercial Company in China. It is not shown that any of this information was brought home to the defendant bank, or that the bank had any other way of knowing that Edwards had such authority or occupied such a position, but from Mr. Lamme's testimony it appears that Mr. Scott stated at the trial before the consular court that "the only reason for refusal to pay the money was that there had been no power of attorney presented at the bank showing the authority of Edwards," etc. "He wanted a resolution of the board of directors."

The defendant bank is concerned only in knowing that the assignment of the evidence of debt or chose in action is of such character as to bind the assignor. Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 323, 33 Pac. 913. If the American Commercial Company had itself presented the deposit receipt, no compliance with the oral contract as to the evidence of authority of Edwards could have been made a condition precedent to payment, if it be assumed in this connection that such a parol contract was admissible in evidence, or, being in evidence, could be considered by the court. Indeed, it could not well be contended that, in the absence of this contract, Mr. Edwards could not himself, in his capacity of manager, have withdrawn the money upon signing the name of the American Commercial Company, or have made a valid assignment or indorsement of the instrument as manager. As said in McKiernan v. Lenzen, 56 Cal. 61, 64: "The result of the cases seems to be, that where the management of the affairs of a corporation is intrusted to a general managing agent, he has power to assign the choses in action of the corporation to its creditors, either in payment of, or as security for the payment of, a precedent debt of the corporation, without express authority from the board of directors, and an assignment so made is valid. The presumption is that the assignment was made by one having competent authority." No special resolution authorizing him to act in this respect was necessary. Tuller v. Arnold, 98 Cal. 523, 33 Pac. 445; Greig v. Riordan, supra, page 323 of 99 Cal. (33 Pac. 913).

An ostensible agency is created when the principal intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be his agent who is not really employed by him. The authority of such an agent is such as the principal allows such persons to believe the agent to possess. Civ. Code, §§ 2300, 2317. There is no attack here made upon the good faith of Mr. Lamme in performing services for the American Commercial Company at the request of Mr. Edwards, or in taking the receipt in full payment for his services so rendered, and this must be assumed in considering the question before us. Mr. Lamme then stood in the shoes of the American Commercial Company as owner of the paper, subject only to such equities as the bank might set up against that company. If the oral, contemporaneous agreement as to what should constitute a showing of Mr. Edwards' authority would not constitute a defense against the demand of the company, neither would it against the demand of Mr. Lamme. The latter being the bona fide assignee of the Commercial Company, his acquittance to the bank would be sufficient defense to any subsequent demand made upon the bank by such company. Contemporaneous parol agreements made between the parties to a written obligation to pay money, as to the manner of its negotiation, cannot be set up as a defense against payment of the money under the contract in an action by the payee or his assignee. Such agreements come within the rule that written contracts cannot be varied by parol agreements, and the rule is applicable to such agreements, irrespective of whether the instrument be negotiable or nonnegotiable in character. Johnson v. Washburn, 98 Ala. 258, 13 South. 48; Erwin v. Saunders, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 249, 13 Am. Dec. 520; Frost v. Everett, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; Dow v. Tuttle, 4 Mass. 414, 3 Am. Dec. 226; Knox v. Clifford, 38 Wis. 655, 20 Am. Rep. 28; Reed v. Reed, 11 U. C. Q. B. 28; Gorrell v. Home Life Ins. Co., 63 Fed. 371, 11 C. C. A. 240, 246.

It also appears from the written opinion of the trial judge found in the record that the findings as to the rights of plaintiff were predicated to some extent, at least, upon the showing that if there had been any real question as to the authority of Edwards to act in the premises, his principal would have made known its objections to the defendant bank within the time that elapsed from the date of the deposit of the money until the bringing of the action. So, also, in this connection may be considered the materiality of the evidence of Lamme tending to establish, not only that Edwards was the manager, but that there was no other representative of the company in China, and that no one questioned his authority to act in this sole and unrestricted manner. There was no showing upon the part of the defendant bank with respect to the absence of authority of Edwards or any denial of his powers generally, and the evidence mentioned tended to show that all the business of the company in China was performed by him or those whom he appointed and directed, and was competent for that purpose.

No indemnity bond was essential in giving judgment, on account of the loss of the instrument sued on. The rule as to indemnity is simply that if it can be shown in any way that the defendant may be wrongfully injured by paying, he may require security, but only then. The rule in courts of equity that a bond will be required before entering judgment upon a lost instrument has several well-recognized exceptions, to wit: (1) Where the note is not negotiable; (2) where, though negotiable, it is payable to order and unindorsed, or specially indorsed; (3) where the instrument is clearly shown to have been destroyed; (4) where the lost instrument has been traced to the defendant's custody; and (5) when it is shown that the defendant is protected by the statute of limitations. Daniel on Neg. Inst. (5th Ed.) § 1481. The evidence would justify a finding that the instrument in this case has been lost, but no finding in this regard was made; however, it is clear that the instrument itself is nonnegotiable in character.

The testimony of the witness Lamme as to his knowledge of the capacity in which Edwards was acting for the American Commercial Company contained some things which were in the nature of conclusions or inferences, but these were accompanied by a statement of the facts from which the inferences were drawn, and we do not think the evidence objected to could have prejudiced appellant's case before the trial court.

The demand for payment having been regularly made by Lamme at Hongkong on November 27, 1905, the damages for failure to pay are to be computed under the rule declared in subdivision 1 of section 3336 of the Civil Code. This would entitle plaintiff to the market value at Hongkong when payment was refused, together with interest as allowed in the judgment. Indeed, it would not have been unwarranted had the court allowed interest at 7 per cent. after the date of maturity of the receipt, but no complaint is made by respondent in this respect.

Judgment and order affirmed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Appellant presents a petition for a rehearing on this appeal wherein, among other things, exception is taken to the following language contained in the opinion of this court, filed April 28, 1910, to wit: "No objection was made to the introduction of this testimony, but the incompetency of parol evidence to vary a writing may be considered as a matter of law." In support of the contention that this is not a correct declaration of the law, a number of cases are cited to sustain the proposition that, in the absence of objection, secondary evidence is sufficient to support the findings of a court based thereon. The rule declared by this court is entirely distinct from that applied in those cases. Whether or not a contract in writing may be varied by parol evidence is a question of substantive law, while the admission or rejection of secondary evidence is governed by the rules of evidence. Greenleaf on Evidence (16th Ed.) vol. 1, § 305a. Where a contract is reduced to writing, whether required by law to be written or not, the writing supersedes all other negotiations and stipulations concerning the matter made at the time or prior thereto. Civ. Code, § 1625. If the terms as agreed upon have not all been reduced to writing, these can be supplied only by an appropriate proceeding, or under proper allegations. Section 1856, Code Civ. Proc; Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 595, 96 Pac. 319. By way of illustration of the distinction between the rule declared by this court and that cited by appellant, it may be said that parol or secondary evidence, unobjected to, might supply the terms or purport of a contract which had been reduced to writing, and, in this form, furnish sufficient proof to sustain a finding; but parol evidence would neither be admissible to vary this contract, nor, if admitted without objection, be sufficient to support a finding which was in conflict with or which in any manner varied the original written contract which the parties entered into. The purpose of the rule relating to the varying of a writing by parol evidence is to prohibit this from being done, while the rule relating to the admission of secondary evidence goes only to the form in which the evidence may be introduced. These rules are in no way inconsistent, and the rule as to secondary evidence is not applicable here. The other matters presented were duly considered in the original opinion.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; H. M. Alberry, Judge.

Action by the Colusa Milling Company against the Draper Dray & Storage Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It appears that judgment was made and entered in the above-entitled cause on November 30, 1909, in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $557.50, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from said date, together with costs taxed—$63.62; that on December 13, 1909, defendant moved to vacate and set aside said judgment, and on said last-mentioned date the court made and entered its order denying said motion; that on January 29, 1910, defendant filed in said court its notice of appeal to this court from said judgment and order, which said notice of appeal was duly served upon plaintiff, on January 29, 1910; that "no statement on appeal or bill of exceptions has been made, settled or filed in said cause"; that no proceedings are pending for the settlement of any proposed statement or bill of exceptions in said cause; and that appellant has not requested the clerk to certify to a correct or any transcript. Defendant also claims that the undertaking is defective in certain essential particulars.

The grounds for the motion to dismiss the appeal are: (1) That no sufficient undertaking on appeal has been given by appellant; (2) that no transcript of the record in said cause has been made or filed in this court.

No bond on appeal was required to give this court jurisdiction. Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 154 Cal. 731, 99 Pac. 202; Russell v. Banks, 11 Cal. App. 450, 105 Pac. 261.

Rule 2 requires the transcript in a civil action to be filed within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, except under certain circumstances not here made to appear. Rule 5 provides that the appeal may be dismissed on motion, upon notice given, if the transcript be not filed within the time prescribed.

The appeals from the judgment and order are dismissed.

Rehearing Denied July 14, 1910.)

1. TAXATION (§ 872*)—INHERITANCE TAX—COMPUTATION OF AMOUNT—EXEMPTION.

St. 1905, c. 314, § 1, imposes a tax on the market value of all property passing by will, etc., but only on the excess over exemptions allowed in the act. Section 2 fixes the rates when the property exceeds in value the exemption, and does not exceed $25,000. Section 3 fixes an increasing scale of rates, based on those fixed by section 2, for property in excess of $25,000. Section 4 allows exemptions of different amounts to various classes. Held, that all the property over $25,000, including the exemption, is taxable at the rates prescribed by section 3. and the exemption is deducted from the first $25,000, taxable at the rate prescribed by section 2.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 229*) — EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW—INHERITANCE TAX—EXEMPTION.

St. 1905, c. 314, §§ 1–4, construed as requiring the deduction of the exemption from inheritance tax from the first $25,000, taxable at the lowest rate, rather than from the total amount of a legacy, does not discriminate against persons succeeding to larger amounts, since it creates a uniform exemption.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

In the matter of the estate of Henry Timken, deceased. From an order fixing the amount of inheritance tax, the State appeals. Reversed, with directions.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. S. Utley, Dist. Atty., for the State. Haines & Haines, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Appeal by the state from an order fixing the amount of inheritance tax payable on certain legacies and devises.

By the will of Henry Timken $5,000 was given to Cord Ringen, a nephew of the decedent, and the residue of the estate to the testator's five children in equal shares.

After determining that the net value of the interest passing to each child was $63,736.40, the court deducted from such amount the exemption of $4,000, and computed the tax on the balance of $59,736.40 as follows:

Tax on $25,000.00 at 1½%..........	375 00
Tax on $ 9,736.40 at 2 %..........	194 72
Tax on $59,736.40 share of each child	$819 72

The contention of the appellant is that the exemption of $4,000 should have been deducted from the first $25,000, instead of from the distributive share as a whole. The result of this would have been to tax $21,000 at the rate of 1 per cent., $25,000 at the rate of 1½ per cent., and $13,736.40 at the rate of 2 per cent., thereby adding $40 to the tax upon the share of each child, or $200 in all. Such was the method of computation employed in Estate of Bull, 153 Cal. 715, 96 Pac. 366. The precise point here involved was not, however, raised in that case. While the decision cannot, therefore, be regarded as authoritative for the present purpose, we are satisfied that it illustrates the proper interpretation of the statute.

Section 1 of the act imposing the tax (St. 1905, p. 341), after declaring that all property passing by will, etc., shall be subject to a tax, provides that "the tax so imposed shall be upon the market value of such property at the rates hereinafter prescribed and only upon the excess over the exemptions hereinafter granted." Section 2 fixes certain rates, varying according to the degree of kinship between the decedent and the successor, "when the property * * * exceeds in value the exemption hereinafter specified and shall not exceed in value twenty-five thousand dollars." Section 3 declares that the "rates in section 2 are for convenience termed the primary rates," and fixes an increasing scale of rates, consisting of multiples of the primary rates, for property in excess of $25,000. Section 4 allows exemptions of different amounts to various classes of persons and corporations.

The position of the appellant that the exemption should be deducted from the amount to which the primary rates are applied is based upon the language of section 2. Under that section those rates are to be effective when the property exceeds in value the exemption but does not exceed $25,000. It is clear that, for the purpose of determining whether the property is within this class, the entire value, including the exemption, is to be considered. If, for example, the gift be to a widow, whose exemption is $10,000, a gift of $35,000 could not be treated as subject to the primary rate, on the theory that $10,000 thereof was exempt, and but $25,000 remained subject to taxation. The language of the section excludes such idea. The primary rate is made to apply where the gift exceeds the exemption but does not exceed $25,000.

The entire amount, whether exempt or not, is considered for the purpose of fixing the rate of taxation. It follows necessarily that where the property, including the exemption, exceeds $25,000, the excess is taxable at the increased rates declared by section 3. Sections 2, 3 and 4 are to be read together, and, where the gift exceeds $25,000, the amount thereof which comes within the limits of section 2 is to be taxed at the primary rate. Estate of Bull, supra. The only way in which this can be accomplished is by deducting the exemption from the first $25,000, rather than from the entire gift. The latter method, which is the one followed by the trial court, results in applying the primary rate to so much of the gift as equals $25,000, over and above the amount of the exemption. But, as we have seen, such rate is to be applied only to the first $25,000, inclusive of exemptions.

The computation of the tax payable by the several children should, accordingly, have been fixed as follows:

Tax on first $25,000.00 (less exemption) 1%..........................	$210 00
Tax on $25,000.00 to $50,000, 1½%..	375 00
Tax on $50,000.00 to $63,736.40, 2%..	274 73
	$859 73

It is urged by the respondents that this construction is inconsistent with the provision of section 1 that the tax is imposed only upon the excess over the exemptions. There is no such inconsistency. The exemptions are allowed under either method of figuring. The only difference is that under the one the exemption is allowed on that part of the property which pays the lowest (primary) rate, while, under the other, it is deducted from the part paying the highest rate. In any view, the exemption is a matter of grace on the part of the Legislature, and cannot be claimed beyond the extent to which the lawmaking body has seen fit to allow it.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It will be observed, further, that the rule herein declared has the advantage of making the exemption uniform in amount, regardless of the extent of the property passing. If there were no exemption at all, the additional tax payable by the beneficiary would, in every case, be measured by the primary rate on the sum which is, under the act as it now reads, declared exempt. The person receiving the property is relieved of the payment of taxes to this amount. Under the method contended for by the respondents, the recipient of an amount exceeding $25,000 would obtain a deduction equivalent to a tax at a higher rate upon the amount exempt. There is therefore no foundation for the contention that the interpretation contended for by the appellant works any improper discrimination against persons succeeding to larger amounts.

The order is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter an order in conformity with the views herein expressed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 450*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENT DISTRICTS — PROPERTY INCLUDED.

Inclusion of two district sections of a city, separated at their nearest points by nearly one-half mile, in an assessment district for district street improvements, is not authorized by the local improvement act of February 26, 1901 (St. 1901, c. 38), which authorizes the inclusion of "one or more streets in the same proceeding," such provision applying to improvements constituting an entirety.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 513*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENTS — OBJECTIONS.

Objection to the improper inclusion of distinct parts of a city in a single street improvement district is available in a suit to enjoin collection of the assessment for the improvement, though not made before the city council.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 296*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — ENGINEER'S REPORT — ESSENTIALS.

Under the local improvement act of 1901 (St. 1901, c. 38, §§ 3, 5), permitting a street improvement to proceed only after filing of the engineer's report, substantial compliance with the requirements of section 4 respecting such report is necessary.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 296*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — DESCRIPTION — ESSENTIALS.

In a street improvement proceeding under the local improvement act of 1901 (St. 1901, c. 38), the description in the engineer's report and in the subsequent proceedings of the exterior boundaries of the benefited district should be as definite as possible.

Action by Franklin B. Southwick and others against the City of Santa Barbara and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This case involves the question of the validity of certain proceedings for the doing of street work in the city of Santa Barbara had under the act of February 26, 1901, known as "The Local Improvement Act of 1901." St. 1901, p. 34. It is an action by certain property owners assessed for the contemplated street improvements to enjoin the further carrying on of the proceedings on the ground that, because of alleged failures to comply with certain provisions of the statute, the assessment made for the improvement is void. A portion of plaintiffs' complaint was stricken out on motion of defendants, and a demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Judgment was thereupon given for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal from such judgment.

The general scheme of the act involved is as follows: The legislative body of the city or town may include in one proceeding thereunder practically any of the street work described in the general street law known as the Vrooman act, to be done upon "one or more streets." Before ordering any work done, it must, by resolution, refer the proposed work to the city engineer, instructing him to make a report in writing containing his recommendations as to the best method of doing the work. The engineer is required to file such report, and annex to it certain exhibits, showing, among other things, a description of the exterior boundaries of the district which will be benefited by the proposed improvement and should be specially assessed to pay the cost thereof, an estimate of the expense of said improvement, a map showing the district above referred to and also the subdivisions of the property therein as ascertained by the engineer, each of which subdivisions shall be given on said map a separate number in red ink, a list referring to said subdivisions by said numbers and showing the names of the owners if known, the valuation of each as the same appears on the last assessment roll or as estimated by the engineer, also "the dimensions, areas, and his estimates of the benefits which the respective parcels will receive from said improvement." "After the report" has been filed, the legislative body shall consider the same, and "have the power" to adopt it as filed or as modified by it and "levy the assessment accordingly." The legislative body must by the same resolution give all parties interested an opportunity to be heard by fixing a day, hour, and place "when and where all persons may appear before the legislative body and show cause * * * why said improvement provided for in said resolution should not be carried out in accordance therewith," which shall be at least 30 days after the passage of the resolution, and shall also give therein a description of the exterior boundaries of the district declared by it to be benefited by the improvement and assessed therefor. Notice of this resolution must be posted and published, which notice shall contain, among other things, "a description of the district covered by the resolution by the exterior boundaries thereof * * * in bold face type." Any person objecting must file his verified written objections, stating the ground thereof. A hearing must be had thereon, at the close of which the legislative body shall pass a resolution setting aside, modifying or confirming the previous resolution. Where the same is confirmed or modified, the lien of the assessment provided for therein shall immediately become attached to the respective parcels of land in accord with the confirmed or modified resolution. "Any action to contest an assessment" must be commenced within 30 days thereafter. Upon the expiration of said 30 days if no such action has been brought, or upon the determination of such actions as are so brought, the clerk shall transmit the map and list, as modified by the legislative body, to the tax collector, who shall proceed to collect the amounts shown due thereby. The act makes elaborate provision for the collection of such amounts, providing for the sale of the property for nonpayment or the taking of installment agreements from the owners, which agreements include a waiver of all objections to the proceedings, and against which installment agreements bonds may be issued and sold. When, as a result of these proceedings, the funds for the work are actually in the hands of the treasurer, contracts for the work may be let. If the first assessment prove insufficient a second may be made, and if an assessment shall realize a larger sum than is necessary, the excess shall be refunded, pro rata, to the parties by whom it was paid. It appears to be conceded that this action was commenced within 30 days after the making of the order disposing of objections filed and confirming the assessment as modified by the legislative body, and it is in effect an action to contest the assessment.

In plaintiffs' brief several particulars are referred to as alleged in the complaint wherein the proceedings are claimed to have been at variance with the requirements of the act to an extent sufficient to require the whole proceedings to be held invalid. It appears from the complaint that the engineer reported as "the district to be benefited by said improvement," which improvement consisted of grading, curbing, guttering, and paving two separate and distinct sections of the city that are not contiguous, and that are alleged to be separated at their nearest points to one another by nearly one-half of a mile, giving the exterior boundaries of each section. It is further alleged that the portions of some of the streets on which the work is to be done are wholly within one of these sections, and the remainder wholly within the other section. It is further alleged that these two sections have no community of interests, and that the real property of either one of said sections will not receive any benefit from street improvement made in the other. The city council adopted this part of the engineer's report, apportioning the total cost of the proposed work on all the streets as estimated by him, $104.793.29, to the real property in the two sections. In this connection it is further to be noted that the complaint shows that the character and cost of work to be done on some of the streets in one section was different from that in the other section. For instance, there was to be grading on some streets and none on others, and the cost of grading on different streets was different, and there was to be asphalt paving on some of the streets and petrolithic paving at less than half the cost on others. We are satisfied that the inclusion of these two widely separated sections of the city in one assessment district, all the property of which is to be specially assessed to pay the aggregate cost of all the improvements proposed, was not authorized by the act.

It was never designed by the authorization to "include one or more streets in the same proceeding" to empower the legislative body to so include in one proceeding street work in widely separated sections of a city as to result in imposing a portion of the cost of improving a street in one of such sections on property not benefited thereby, situated in the other section, simply because it is benefited to some extent by an improvement made upon another street in the section in which it is located. That this might well be the result under the procedure here adopted is very clear. It is manifest in view of the allegations of the complaint and the engineer's report, which is set out in full in the complaint, that the projected improvements in one section have no connection with those in the other section, and that the property in the other section can receive no special benefit therefrom. The proposed improvements in one section are a matter of no special concern whatever to the property owners in the other section. Yet the cost of all the improvements is necessarily taken into consideration in fixing the amount of assessment on each lot; that aggregate cost being apportioned to each lot in one section in proportion to the special benefit it will derive from the improvements to be made in that section alone. The cost of the latter improvements should alone be considered with reference to such property. The projected improvement may be much more costly in one section than it is in the other, while the benefit to the property in each section from the improvements made therein may be as great in the one section as in the other. In such a case the cost of all being apportioned according to the benefit to each parcel of land in both sections would necessarily result in imposing a portion of the expense of the more costly work upon the property of the section in which it is not located. If the first assessment prove insufficient to complete the whole improvement, a second may be made in the same manner as nearly as may be. Section 20. Such insufficiency may be due wholly to a greater expense in doing the work in one of the sections, and yet the property of the other section will be called upon to assist in supplying the deficiency, the proportion of benefit from the whole improvement having already been established by the proceedings on the first assessment. If a larger sum is realized from an assessment than is necessary for the whole improvement, the excess is to be refunded "pro rata, to the parties by whom it was paid." Section 21. Such an excess may be entirely due to an overestimate as to the improvements in one only of the sections. In such event, unless the property owners in the other section have already paid something on account of the work in the former section as to which the overestimate occurred, they should not, of course, participate in the return. We mention these things to show the impracticability under the act before us of uniting in one proceeding and assessment improvements in two widely separated sections of a city, where the property of one section derives no special benefit from the improvement in the other section, in a manner that would place the cost of the improvement upon the property in proportion to the special benefit accruing from the improvement. To our minds no such construction was contemplated by the act. Learned counsel for the city necessarily relies on the provision in subdivision 1 of section 4, calling for a description of the work in the engineer's report, that "said work may include one or more streets in the same proceeding." In view of the other provisions of the act we think the provision referred to means no more than this: It was contemplated that some particular improvement, constituting what might reasonably be called an entirety but including more than one street, might be of special benefit, as distinguished from the general benefit to all the property of the city, to property in its immediate vicinity, and that it would be proper to authorize the formation of an assessment district including all such property. Hence the authorization to include more than one street in the same proceeding. But clearly there is to be but one "district" in any proceeding, and, as we understand the word "district" in the connection in which it is used, it means a single portion of the territory of the city set off as being specially benefited by a street improvement to be made therein. Learned counsel relies somewhat on the fact that it has been held that in the case of improvements under the Vrooman act work on different streets may be included in one resolution of intention. But it was declared in the first opinion so holding that the work on each street was a distinct and several improvement, and that its distinct and several character is to be observed in the subsequent proceedings. Bates v. Twist, 138 Cal. 52, 54, 70 Pac. 1023. It may be that under the act before us various streets in widely separated sections of the city may be included in the preliminary resolution referring the work to the engineer for consideration, but it seems clear to us that, if he finds that the work to be done embraces in the matter of special benefit separate and distinct districts, he must make a separate report as to each of such districts, so that the expense of the work in any one district may be apportioned to and borne by the property of that district alone.

We have no doubt that the objection we have considered is available to the plaintiffs in this action, notwithstanding their failure to make objection before the legislative body. Such a report by the engineer as is contemplated by section 4 of the act is essential to the jurisdiction of the legislative body to proceed in the matter of levying the assessment. By the express provisions of sections 3 and 5 it is only "after" such a report has been filed that such body "have the power" to proceed. A substantial compliance, at least, with the provisions of section 4 in the matter of such report, is certainly essential to jurisdiction. In view of what we have heretofore said, the report here was defective in matter of substance.

Other points are made against these proceedings which may easily be obviated in any new proceeding and hence the question of their validity need not be determined on this appeal. It is proper to say, however, that the description in the engineer's report and the subsequent proceedings of the exterior boundaries of the district which will be benefited and is to be specially assessed should be as certain and definite as it can be made. It is likewise proper to say that the law requires the engineer to state in the list provided for by subdivision 6 of section 4, the "dimensions" and "area" of the various subdivisions shown on the map provided for by subdivision 5 of the same section. These are matters expressly required to be contained in the report, and it may well be doubted whether we could hold that any of such requirements is without "semblance of benefit to the owner." See Dehail v. Morford, 95 Cal. 460, 30 Pac. 593. It is further proper to say that, if it is determined by the city that any part of the cost of a projected street improvement is to be paid out of the treasury of the municipality, the amount so to be paid should be deducted from the estimated cost and the remainder only assessed against the property of the district specially benefited.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer of defendants herein.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by the Musick Consolidated Oil Company against Burdette Chandler and others. From an interlocutory judgment of partition, and from an order denying a new trial, said Chandler appeals. Reversed.

A. J. King, R. V. Bouldin, and C. P. Kaetzel, for appellant. M. E. C. Munday and W. H. Spencer, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Appeals from an interlocutory judgment of partition and from an order denying Chandler's motion for new trial. The complaint asks partition of certain oil lands, known as the Musick Consolidated Petroleum & Asphalt placer mining claim, containing some 718 acres. The court found that the plaintiff owns $^{31}/_{48}$ of the land, that Burdette Chandler owns $^{8}/_{48}$, that Bernard Sinsheimer owns $^{6}/_{48}$, and that Abraham Stone and four others, as heirs of Jacob Stone, own $^{3}/_{48}$. (There were 20 average acres to be taken from the plaintiff's share and added to Chandler's share, concerning which there is no dispute.) Chandler claims, in addition, an interest of $^{4}/_{48}$, to be taken from the shares allotted to Sinsheimer and the Stone heirs.

Prior to October 23, 1899, the defendant Burdette Chandler and one A. B. Hasbrouck had become the owners of the lands in controversy which at that date were unpatented. The principal controversy in the case arises over the claim of Chandler to an undivided $^{4}/_{48}$ of the property. To facilitate an understanding of the points in the case, we state the history of the title as disclosed in the record. On October 23, 1899, Hasbrouck and Chandler executed a contract to Parcels and his associates whereby it was agreed that the Parcels parties should within 12 months thereafter expend at least $4,000 in putting down oil wells for the development of the property, and that, in consideration of said work, Hasbrouck and Chandler would convey to Parcels and his associates an undivided two-thirds interest in the land. On October 30, 1899, Parcels and Holden conveyed a $^{1}/_{48}$ interest to J. Alex. Brown, and on December 26, 1899, Brown conveyed the same to Jacob Stone. This interest still remains in the heirs of Stone, and no controversy has arisen over it. Its effect was to reduce the interest of the successors of Parcels and others to $^{31}/_{48}$. The plaintiff company now holds this $^{31}/_{48}$. On May 19, 1902, the patent was issued from the United States to Chandler and Hasbrouck. On June 2, 1902, Hasbrouck conveyed to Jacob Stone an undivided one-fourth interest, and on the same day Stone conveyed to Bernard Sinsheimer an undivided one-eighth interest in all the land. A dispute arose between Parcels and his associates, on the one hand, and Hasbrouck and Chandler, on the other, concerning the performance of the Parcels' contract. Parcels and his associates brought an action against Hasbrouck and Chandler and the persons then interested in the property to enforce their contract for the conveyance of the two-thirds, alleging that they had performed the contract on their part. Judgment in that action was given in favor of the plaintiffs on February 9, 1907, and, in pursuance thereof, the undivided $^{31}/_{48}$ of the land was conveyed to the plaintiffs in the action, and they afterwards conveyed to plaintiff in this action. Jacob Stone died on August 5, 1905, and whatever interest he had in the property at that time has been distributed to his heirs above mentioned. While the action of Parcels v. Hasbrouck was on trial and before the decision was rendered, to wit, on January 18, 1907, Hasbrouck executed a deed purporting to convey to Chandler all his interest in the property. The disputed point in the case depends upon the effect of this conveyance.

For the purpose of showing that at the time of this conveyance to Chandler Hasbrouck still retained an interest in the land, the defendant Chandler filed a cross-complaint. Therein he alleged that on October 23, 1899, the Parcels' contract was executed, stating its terms; that on June 2, 1902, Hasbrouck and Stone entered into a contract by which it was agreed that Stone should furnish one-half, to wit, $500, of the expense which Hasbrouck would have to pay or had paid to secure the patent from the United States, in consideration whereof Hasbrouck and Stone should become partners in the half interest in the property which Hasbrouck then held; that for the purpose of carrying out this agreement Stone paid the $500 and Hasbrouck executed the deed of date June 2, 1902, conveying to Stone a one-fourth interest in the property in controversy; and that they thereby became equal joint owners and copartners in the one-half interest in the land formerly held by Hasbrouck, and that, when the contract to Parcels and others was enforced, they remained the joint owners as partners of an undivided one-sixth thereof.

If this partnership had been effected as thus alleged, the result would be as claimed by Chandler; that is to say, Stone and Hasbrouck would be equal partners in the half interest formerly held by Hasbrouck, and, when the Parcels' contract was enforced, the two-thirds thereby transferred to those parties would be taken equally from the interests of both Stone and Hasbrouck, and they would remain equal partners in what was left of the one-half, namely, a one-sixth interest. In that case the subsequent conveyance of Hasbrouck to Chandler would convey to Chandler an undivided one-half of the one-sixth interest belonging to the partnership of Stone and Hasbrouck, and he would thus become the owner of an undivided one-twelfth interest in the land. The effect of the conveyance from Stone to Sinsheimer of an undivided one-eighth of the land on June 2, 1902, would depend on Sinsheimer's knowledge of the equities between Hasbrouck and Stone. If he knew of the partnership, he would take no greater interest than Stone had to convey. If he was ignorant thereof, and paid a valuable consideration for the conveyance of one-eighth, he would hold the one-eighth free from any equities existing between Stone and Hasbrouck. That conveyance, however, included only one-eighth of the land. If its effect was to convey that interest absolutely to Sinsheimer, there still remained the difference between ⅙ and ⅛, namely, $^{2}/_{48}$, belonging to the partnership existing between Stone and Hasbrouck. The defendants who claim as heirs of Stone would have no higher right than Stone himself possessed. The result of this would be that this $^{2}/_{48}$ interest would remain the partnership property of Hasbrouck and Stone's heirs, and it would follow that the deed from Hasbrouck to Chandler would transfer to Chandler a $^{1}/_{48}$ interest in the property. If the Sinsheimer deed was taken by Sinsheimer with knowledge of the relations between Hasbrouck and Stone, the deed of Hasbrouck to Chandler would convey to him the $^{4}/_{48}$ interest which he claims. If there are partnership accounts to be settled, of course, the firm property should be set off in one body.

Upon the trial, Hasbrouck was called as a witness on behalf of Chandler, and was asked to testify as to the partnership alleged to exist between himself and Stone at the time of the conveyance from Hasbrouck to Stone of the undivided one-fourth. Objection was made to this evidence upon the ground that it was incompetent and immaterial, and not the best evidence. The objection was sustained. No evidence was allowed to be introduced to prove the allegations of the cross-complaint of Chandler concerning the partnership between Stone and Hasbrouck in the lands in controversy. The court found that no such partnership existed, and that the allegations of the cross-complaint relating thereto were untrue. This ruling and the finding are assigned as error.

We are satisfied that the issue tendered was a legitimate one and that the evidence offered was competent and material proof of the allegations. The objection that the agreement of partnership was not in writing is not well taken. A partnership in lands may be formed by an agreement in parol. Such parol agreement is valid, and may be enforced between the parties. Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 787, 90 Pac. 135, and cases there cited. The ruling of the court below seems to have been based upon the theory that no proof could be made of this character, unless the agreement was in writing. In view of the decisions above referred to, this theory was erroneous. The evidence should have been admitted. There was no allegation that Sinsheimer received his conveyance from Stone of the undivided one-eighth with notice of the partnership existing between Stone and Hasbrouck. An amendment to the answer of Chandler was offered at the time of the trial, alleging a mistake in the drafting of that conveyance, and claiming that the intention was to describe the property conveyed as the undivided one-half of Hasbrouck's interest, instead of as the undivided one-fourth interest in the property. At the time this deed was executed, Hasbrouck owned the legal title to an undivided one-half of the property, and the conveyance of one-fourth would make Stone an equal partner, in so far as the legal title was concerned. It was, of course, subject to the Parcels' contract. It was alleged that Stone understood the Parcels' contract and took subject thereto. The court refused to allow the amendment stating the mistake. It did not allege notice on the part of Sinsheimer. Furthermore, it did not give any particulars concerning the discovery of the mistake. Whether the proposed amendment was rejected for this reason or not we cannot determine, but, in view of the fact that the case must be reversed because of the refusal to receive the evidence of the partnership aforesaid and in view of the probability that some similar amendment may be offered before another trial, we think it proper to call attention to the rule governing applications for such relief as stated in 5 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 36: "The party who appeals to the conscience of the chancellor in support of a claim, when there has been laches in prosecuting it, or long acquiescence in the assertion of adverse rights, should set forth in his bill specifically what were the impediments to an earlier prosecution of his claim, how be came to be so long ignorant of his rights, * * * and how and when he first came to a knowledge of the matters alleged in his bill; otherwise the chancellor must refuse to consider his case upon his own showing without inquiring whether there is a demurrer or formal plea of the statute of limitations contained in the answer." Upon this condition of the record and the possibility that there may be evidence of notice on the part of Sinsheimer, we consider it inadvisable to express any opinion concerning his rights. Conceding that he had no notice and would take free from the equities arising from the partnership, the fact would still remain that, if the partnership did exist, Chandler would have an undivided $^{1}/_{48}$ interest in the land, and the judgment appealed from did not award it to him.

The court made an order that the property be divided by a surface petition and refused to order a sale. The appellant strenuously asserts that this sort of partition cannot be made in the case of mining claims. As the case must go back for trial and a different judgment may be had and a sale ordered, we do not express any opinion on this subject. We note, however, that the authorities are not uniform. It has been decided in this state that a mere mining right is not an estate which may be made the subject of a partition. Smith v. Cooley, 65 Cal. 48, 2 Pac. 880. It has also been decided that the question whether a placer mine can be divided according to area so as to make a just partition between tenants in common is a matter of fact for the trial court. Mitchell v. Cline, 84 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 164. Other authorities expressing various opinions on the proposition are the following: Hall v. Vernon, 47 W. Va. 295, 34 S. E. 764, 81 Am. St. Rep. 791; Dangerfield v. Caldwell, 151 Fed. 558, 81 C. C. A. 400; Smelting Co. v. Rucker, (C. C.) 28 Fed. 223; Conant v. Smith, 1 Aikens (Vt.) 67, 15 Am. Dec. 669; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 410, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Kemble v. Kemble, 44 N. J. Eq. 454, 11 Atl. 733; Adam v. Briggs, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 366.

DOUDELL v. SHOO et al. (S. F. 5,613.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 16, 1910.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 382*)—BOND—AMOUNT.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 945, do not give the Supreme Court jurisdiction to fix the amount for which appellants shall give an undertaking where the judgment appealed from directs the delivery of both real and personal property, but the trial judge must fix the amount in such cases, and, if he refuse, the remedy is to apply to the Supreme Court for writ of mandate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. C. Church, Judge.

Action by John Doudell against John J. Shoo and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Application for an order fixing the amount for which appellants shall give undertaking. Application denied.

Carter & Carter and Carl F. Wood, for appellants. C. K. Bonestell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application of the appellants for an order of this court fixing the amount for which the appellants shall give an undertaking on appeal, under sections 943 and 945 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is denied. The judgment appealed from directed the delivery of both real and personal property. In such cases the above-named sections require the judge of the court from which the appeal is taken to fix the amount of the undertaking to be given to obtain the statutory stay of proceedings on that part of the judgment. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to fix the amount for such undertaking. If the judge of the court below refuses to perform his plain statutory duty in this respect, the remedy of the appellant is to apply to this court for a writ of mandate to compel him to do so.

BYRON JACKSON MACH. WORKS v. DUFF. (L. A. 2,507.)

SALES (§ 179*)—DELAY IN DELIVERY—WAIVER—ACCEPTANCE.

A sale of certain pumps provided for delivery at a certain time if not delayed by conditions over which plaintiff had no control, and it was agreed that they should show a certain mechanical efficiency to be tested in the seller's factory in the presence of the buyer's engineer or representative. After some delay, excusable within the contract, the buyer urged the shipment of the pumps, and on their receipt they were installed without question as to their efficiency or without test, and no objection made until more than three months afterwards. Held, in an action for the price, that damages for the delay were waived.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Edwin A. Meserve (Paul H. McPherrin, of counsel), for appellant. Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action brought to recover the price of certain pumps and pumping machinery furnished defendant by plaintiff. The claim of plaintiff amounted to $6,580.48, being for three pumps at an agreed aggregate price of $6,400 and certain other articles, less $1,200 paid in cash on November 28, 1906, and $164.40 in merchandise, or $5,216.08, for which last-named sum, with $803.76 interest, judgment was awarded plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The controversy on the trial was as to the pumps, and principally as to the first two pumps furnished, defendant claiming to have been damaged in a large amount by reason of the nondelivery of such pumps at the time originally agreed on, and by reason of the alleged fact that such pumps did not show a mechanical efficiency to the extent guaranteed.

The agreement for the first two pumps was made about January 31, 1906. It consisted of a written proposition by plaintiff, accepted by defendant. It was for two 10-inch special Jackson vertical centrifugal pumps, with necessary fittings, at an agreed price of $4,000, to be constructed, delivered and installed on or before April 1, 1906, "if not delayed by elements or conditions over which they [plaintiff] have no control." It was agreed that said pumps "shall show a mechanical efficiency of not less than 72% when working under the conditions named herein, same to be tested in our [plaintiff's] factory in the presence of your engineer or representative." No question appears to be raised on this appeal as to the third pump, the agreed price of which was $2,400. The first pump was not delivered on the ground until June 11, 1906, or installed until July 14, 1906, on which date it was accepted by defendant without objection of any kind either on account of delay in delivery or lack of efficiency, and has ever since been used and operated by him. The second pump was delivered on the ground on July 20, 1906, and installed August 11, 1906, when it was likewise accepted by defendant without objection or claim of any kind, and has ever since been used and operated by him. No claim of any damage by reason of delay or lack of efficiency or anything else was ever made until after the payment of the $1,200 on account. It was found that at the time of the great San Francisco fire, April 18, 1906, the two pumps were practically ready for shipment, but were destroyed by such fire, and that defendant being notified by plaintiff of all the facts acquiesced in and agreed to their subsequent reconstruction. The evidence clearly indicated that the delay occurring prior to such destruction was with the full acquiescence of defendant. The findings of the trial court in regard to the matter of the delay in delivering the pumps, so far as attacked, are sustained by the evidence, and warranted the conclusion that defendant had waived any and all claims for damages which he might otherwise have had by reason of such delay.

The same conclusion was reached by the trial court on the question of the efficiency of the first two pumps, and we think that this conclusion of the learned trial judge is sustained by findings of fact based on sufficient evidence. The written proposition of plaintiff in this regard clearly contemplated a settlement of the question of mechanical efficiency prior to installation of the pumps on the ground, and the acceptance thereof by the defendant. The language of the writing was that the test in this regard was to be "in our [plaintiff's] factory in the presence of your engineer or representative." No suggestion as to a test of the efficiency of either of said pumps was made by defendant until months after their installation and acceptance by defendant. The defendant had continually urged their shipment as soon as possible, and on their receipt they were installed and accepted without any question raised as to their efficiency. It may be that under the circumstances appearing defendant could have refused to accept the pumps after they were shipped from the factory until a satisfactory test had been made in the presence of his own engineer or representative, or that, in accepting them, he could have reserved the right to object to the quality if they did not measure up to the guaranty, but this he did not do. On the contrary, he, necessarily knowing that no such test as was prescribed had been made, and, further, having full opportunity to examine and test the pumps, absolutely accepted, and thenceforth used and operated them without objection of any kind until after November 28, 1906. The facts were such as to warrant the conclusion that, so far as the guaranty was concerned, defendant accepted the pumps, in discharge of the contract, and thereby waived all claims for damages on account thereof. The case of Jackson v. Porter Land, etc., Co., 151 Cal. 32, 90 Pac. 122, is in line with our conclusion. See, also, Albin Co. v. Kentucky Table Co. (Ky.) 67 S. W. 13; Guernsey v. West Coast Lumber Co., 87 Cal. 249, 25 Pac. 414.

TROWER v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 5,325.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1910.)

1. Appeal and Error (§ 1097*)—Subsequent Appeal—Law of the Case.

The doctrine of the law of the case is limited to rulings on questions actually presented and considered on the former appeal.

2. Municipal Corporations (§ 1001*) — Claims—Presentation and Allowance—Necessity.

The requirement of presentation to and allowance of claims by various officers and boards of the city and county of San Francisco, as required by Consol. Act (St. 1856, c. 125) § 90, when construed in connection with St. 1856, pp. 167–175, art. 6, regulating the finances and revenues of the city, applies only to such claims as the consolidation act itself makes payable out of the treasury of the city and county, and therefore does not require the prior presentation and allowance of a claim to recover illegal fees exacted of executors and administrators for filing inventories and appraisements in probate proceedings, under an unconstitutional statute.

3. Counties (§ 153½*)—Claims—Validity.

Consol. Act (St. 1856, c. 125) § 95, declares that demands on the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco may be made for the following objects, and none others, enumerating 15 subdivisions specifying the kinds and character of demands and the objects for which public money may be expended, none of which embrace a cause of action against the city for money illegally exacted from administrators for filing inventories and appraisements, under an unconstitutional statute. Held, that such section did not preclude a recovery of moneys so illegally collected, in an action for money had and received.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 153½.*]

4. Executors and Administrators (§ 171*)—Claims of Administrators—Requisites—Order of Court.

Where administrators paid fees to the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco for filing inventories and appraisements as required by an unconstitutional statute, it would be presumed that the probate court refused to give them credit for such payments in their accounts, and that they were chargeable to them individually, and hence being recoverable in their individual capacities, they were authorized to assign their claims without an order of court; such assignments not being within Code Civ. Proc. § 1517, providing that no sale of any property of an estate shall be valid unless made under order of the superior court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

5. Pleading (§ 236*)—Amendment—Discretion.

The granting or refusal of leave to amend an answer, where leave is required, is within the sound discretion of the trial court.

6. Limitation of Actions (§ 184*)—Pleading—Amendment to Plead Statute.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to permit an amendment of defendant's answer to plead limitations.

7. Appeal and Error (§ 959*)—Pleading—Amendment—Review.

Exercise of the trial court's discretion in granting or refusing an application to amend pleadings will not be interfered with on appeal in the absence of abuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3825–3833; Dec. Dig. § 959.*]

8. Appeal and Error (§ 918*)—Record—Review—Presumptions.

Where a bill of exceptions disclosed only a motion for leave to amend the answer and an order granting the motion over plaintiff's objection, based on the records and files in the action, but what those records and files consisted of, beyond the pleadings, was not stated, nor did the bill purport to exhibit the showing made by defendant in support of its motion, it would be presumed that the court's discretion was properly exercised.

9. Limitation of Actions (§ 28*)—Application of Statutes—Money Received.

An action for money had and received, to recover fees collected from executors and administrators for filing inventories and appraisements in probate proceedings, under an unconstitutional statute, was an action on an obligation or liability not founded on an instrument in writing, to which the two years' statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1) was applicable, and not an action on a liability created by statute within Pol. Code, § 3804, authorizing a recovery of taxes illegally collected, since such section applies only to claims based on the payment of illegal or excessive taxes, penalties, and costs pursuant to an assessment of property under Pol. Code, §§ 3607-3900.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Trower against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for plaintiff for part of the relief demanded, and both parties appeal. Affirmed.

Albert H. Elliot and Edward H. Stearns, for appellant. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Jesse H. Steinhart, Asst. City Atty., for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, assignee of various persons who had, as guardians, executors, or administrators, paid to the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco fees upon filing inventories and appraisements, brought this action to recover the amounts so paid. The act under which the county clerk had exacted the payments was unconstitutional, as held by this court in a case decided after the payment of the fees here involved. Fatjo v. Pfister, 117 Cal. 83, 48 Pac. 1012. The defendant answered and thereupon moved for judgment upon the pleadings. The motion being granted and judgment entered accordingly, the plaintiff appealed to this court, which reversed the judgment complained of. Trower v. City and County of San Francisco, 152 Cal. 479, 92 Pac. 1025, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183. Upon the return of the case to the superior court the defendant, by leave of court, amended its answer by adding a plea that the action and each count thereof was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Before such amendment the answer had consisted of denials of certain allegations of the complaint (including, inter alia, a denial of the assignments to plaintiff), and also of a separate defense that the causes of action were barred by the provisions of section 90 of the consolidation act, the organic act governing the city and county of San Francisco at the time the action was commenced. St. 1856, p. 145.

The findings showed that the respective claims had been assigned to plaintiff, but coupled this with a further finding, to which we shall refer more particularly hereafter. It was found that none of the claims had been presented to or allowed by the board of supervisors in the manner or within the time specified by said section 90. The findings further showed that, with respect to seven of the claims involved, payment had been made to the treasurer more than two but less than three years before the commencement of the action. As to these the court concluded that the bar of section 339, subd. 1, Code Civ. Proc., applied. Judgment was given in favor of plaintiff for the amount of the claims not so barred. From this judgment both parties appeal, the plaintiff from the portion of the judgment denying him a recovery on the seven claims held to be within the operation of section 339, and the defendant from so much of the judgment as gave plaintiff a recovery on the remaining claims. Both appeals are on the judgment roll.

The defendant's principal contention is that the plaintiff should have been denied any relief by reason of the failure to comply with the requirements of section 90 of the consolidation act.

At the outset it may be said that there is no merit in the plaintiff's contention that the question of the applicability of said section 90 is foreclosed by the decision on the former appeal in this case. The argument is that this court held on the first appeal that the complaint, which contains no allegation of compliance with the terms of this section, stated a cause of action. If the section be applicable, an allegation of such compliance is, as is claimed, a necessary part of the complaint, and it is therefore said to be "the law of the case" that claims of the kind here involved are not within the provisions of section 90. But the doctrine of the law of the case is limited to rulings upon questions which were actually presented and considered upon the former appeal. Anderson v. Hancock, 64 Cal. 455, 2 Pac. 31; Ehrlich v. Ewald, 66 Cal. 97, 4 Pac. 1062; People v. Hamilton, 103 Cal. 488, 37 Pac. 627. It appears from the opinion in 152 Cal. 479, 92 Pac. 1025, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183, that counsel did not make, nor did the court consider, the point of the necessity of compliance with the provisions of section 90. The sole question considered and decided was whether or not a payment, made under the circumstances alleged in the complaint, was of such voluntary character as to deprive the plaintiff of a right of recovery. The ruling made became the law of the case only so far as to preclude any future attack based upon the objection there held to be untenable.

Section 90 of the consolidation act reads as follows: "The salaries, fees and compensation of all officers, including policemen and employés of all classes, and all teachers in common schools or others, employed at fixed wages, shall be payable monthly; and any demand whatsoever upon the treasury hereafter accruing, shall not be paid, but shall be forever barred by limitation of time unless the same be presented for payment, properly audited, within one month after such demand became due and payable; or if it be a demand which has to be passed and approved by the board of supervisors or board of education, then within one month after the regular session of the proper board, held next after the demand accrued. * * *"

If this section stood alone there might be good ground for the contention that its effect was to bar a claimant who had not complied with its provisions from recovering upon a demand of any character upon the treasury. But it is only one of a number of sections contained in the article of the consolidation act dealing with the subjects of finance and revenue, and an examination of this article as a whole (article 6, St. 1856, pp. 167–175) shows that section 90 was not intended to have the broad scope which might be indicated by some of its terms. This court has on several occasions been called upon to consider the effect of the various sections of the consolidation act governing the auditing, allowance, and payment of claims against the treasury of the city and county of San Francisco. The result of the decisions has been to establish the rule that the requirement of presentation to and allowance by the various officers and boards of the municipality applies only to such claims as are by the terms of the consolidation act itself made payable out of the treasury of the city and county. This construction, with the reasons leading to it, is very clearly set forth by Thornton, J., in his concurring opinion in Ex parte Reis, 64 Cal. 233, 30 Pac. 806, where it was held to be the duty of the treasurer to pay phonographic reporters in criminal cases the compensation fixed by the court (pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 269–271), without the necessity of approval or audit by any city and county officer. The power of the court to fix the compensation of the reporter and to order payment of the same is affirmed in Stevens v. Truman, 127 Cal. 158, 59 Pac. 397. In Aid Society v. Reis, 71 Cal. 634, 12 Pac. 796, the court held that the approval of the supervisors was not necessary to the validity of a claim for the support of a minor committed to the custody of a charitable corporation under Pen. Code, § 1388. In Ex parte Widber, 91 Cal. 367, 27 Pac. 733, it was held that a demand ordered paid by the judge for the necessary expenses of providing him with a suitable courtroom was not within the limitations of the consolidation act. Corbett v. Widber, 123 Cal. 154, 55 Pac. 764, was a proceeding to compel the treasurer to refund to the plaintiffs a portion of taxes paid in advance of the fixing of the tax rate, and found to be in excess of the rate actually levied. It was held that payment of this demand was not authorized by the consolidation act, and that the plaintiff, therefore, was not required to present his claim or have it audited pursuant to the terms of that act.

We think the rule established by these cases is applicable here. The city and county exacted from the plaintiff's assignors and holds in its treasury moneys to which it had no legal or equitable right. The plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount so paid. Trower v. City and County, 152 Cal. 479, 92 Pac. 1025, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 183. His right of recovery rests, not on any provision of the consolidation act, but on the general rule of law which authorizes the recovery of money not justly due to the payee but paid by compulsion. It may be said here, as was said in Corbett v. Widber, supra, that "Section 95 of the consolidation act declares that 'demands on the treasury may be made for the following objects, and none others.' Under 15 subdivisions of the sections are enumerated the kinds and characters of such demands, and the objects for which the public moneys of the city and county may be expended. The section will be read in vain to discover any authority whatsoever for the payment of a demand such as the one in question. It is not within the contemplation of the consolidation act, yet clearly it is within the contemplation of the law * * * that such moneys should be repaid on demand."

The defendant relies strongly upon our decision in Farmers', etc., Bank v. City of Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 655, 91 Pac. 795, where it was held that the presentation of a demand to the city council was a necessary prerequisite to the maintenance of an action for the recovery of taxes paid under protest. But the distinction between that case and the one at bar is plain. The provisions of the Los Angeles charter were such as to require the presentation of all claims and demands whatever against the city (with certain exceptions not material to the case) and to prohibit any payment from the city treasury unless upon a demand audited as provided in the charter. But the consolidation act, as we have seen, makes the presentation and allowance of demands a prerequisite only where the claim is one authorized to be paid by the terms of that act itself.

The defendant makes a further point with reference to the assignments of the various claims to the plaintiff. The finding is that the claim for the return of each of said sums was duly assigned to plaintiff by the person or persons as executors or administrators or guardians of each estate on behalf of which the payment had been made, but that none of said executors, administrators or guardians procured from the superior court having jurisdiction of the probating of the estate an order authorizing the execution of an assignment of the claim to plaintiff. The assignments are claimed to be invalid under section 1517 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides that "no sale of any property of an estate of a decedent is valid unless made under order of the superior court. * * * All sales must be * * * confirmed by the court before the title * * * passes." We think this section has no application here. We may assume, if the assumption be necessary to make the judgment comport with the findings, that the assignments to plaintiff were made for collection merely. It may be doubted whether such assignments are "sales" within the meaning of the Code section. But even if they be so regarded, the claims in question were not a part of the property of the estates of the respective decedents. In each instance the executor or administrator had, after his appointment, made a payment which was unauthorized by law. It must be presumed that the probate court refused to give to such executors or administrators credit for these payments in their accounts. The payments were chargeable to them individually. They, therefore, had the right to recover them in their individual capacities, and the corresponding right to make assignments.

On plaintiff's appeal, the first point made is that the court erred in permitting the defendant, after the reversal of the first judgment, and after the cause had, on the second hearing, been submitted, to amend its answer by pleading section 339 in bar of the action. It is, however, thoroughly settled that the granting or refusing of leave to amend an answer, where leave is required, is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. This is true of amendments for the purpose of setting up the statute of limitations, as well as other amendments. The cases cited by plaintiff (Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348; Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 373, 76 Am. Dec. 538) proceed upon this very theory. In those cases it was held that the court below had not erred in denying leave to amend by pleading the bar of the statute. Here the trial court granted the leave. But since the matter rests in the discretion of the court, its action on the application, whether favorable or unfavorable, will not be disturbed on appeal unless it appears that there was an abuse of discretion. No such abuse is shown. The bill of exceptions discloses only that the motion for leave to amend was granted over the objection of plaintiff, who based his objection on the records and files in the action. What those records and files consisted of, beyond the pleadings, is not stated, nor does the bill purport to exhibit the showing made by the defendant in support of its motion. Under these circumstances, we must presume that the trial court properly exercised its discretion.

We think it clear that the action was one governed by the statute of limitations so pleaded. Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1. As we have said, in discussing defendant's appeal the action is one to recover moneys unjustly exacted and retained by defendant. It is assumpsit for money had and received, and, therefore, an action "upon a contract, obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument in writing." The plaintiff seeks to base his right of recovery upon the terms of section 3804 of the Political Code, and claims, accordingly, that the suit was properly begun within three years, the period of limitation for "an action upon a liability created by statute." But section 3804 has reference only to claims based upon the payment of illegal or excessive taxes, penalties, or costs pursuant to an assessment of property under the provisions of title 9 of the Political Code. This is apparent, not only from the language of the section itself, but from its location with reference to other Code sections. O'Brien v. County of Colusa, 67 Cal. 504, 8 Pac. 37; Grimley v. County of Santa Clara, 68 Cal. 575, 9 Pac. 840. The payments here sought to be recovered were, as already stated, made under an act purporting to fix fees for filing inventories and appraisements in probate proceedings. They were not payments of the class covered by section 3804.

1. INJUNCTION (§ 183*)—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—REINSTATEMENT AFTER DISSOLUTION.

Where the court in a suit for an injunction, possessing the power to grant a temporary injunction pending an appeal from a decree denying relief, was misled by the stipulation of the parties to believe that a temporary injunction had been issued prior to the hearing, and made an order continuing such injunction in force when in fact no such injunction had been issued, it could, on discovering the error, amend its order and make an effective injunctive order as originally intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 394; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. COURTS (§ 125*)—JURISDICTION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, vesting the superior court with original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, the superior court has equity powers equal to those exercised by the chancery courts in England.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 385; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 447*)—INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL—JURISDICTION.

The chancery courts in England possess the power to maintain the status quo pending an appeal in a suit for an injunction, notwithstanding the denial of the right to a perpetual injunction, which was the primary object of the suit; and hence the superior court, possessing the same equity powers, on denying a perpetual injunction has power under Const. art. 6, § 5, to continue in force a preliminary injunction, so as to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of the litigation pending an appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2207; Dec. Dig. § 447.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 447*)—INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL—JURISDICTION.

Civ. Code, §§ 3420, 3422, declaring that preventive relief is granted by an injunction, provisional or final, and providing for cases in which a final injunction may be granted, without providing for the maintenance in force of the status quo of the litigation pending an appeal, and Code Civ. Proc. § 525, providing the cases in which the court may or may not grant injunctions, without referring to the right to grant a provisional injunction maintaining in force the status quo of a litigation pending an appeal, do not deprive the superior court of its power to grant a provisional injunction maintaining in force the status quo pending an appeal, though Civ. Code, § 3421, declares that provisional injunctions are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure, and though section 3274 provides that preventive relief can only be granted in specified cases, since sections 3366, 3368, provide that preventive relief may be given as provided by the laws of the state, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2207; Dec. Dig. § 447.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 447*)—INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL—JURISDICTION.

Under Civ. Code, § 3368, providing that preventive relief is given by prohibiting a party from doing that which ought not to be done, the superior court, denying relief in a suit by a telephone company to restrain the officers of a city from enforcing an ordinance declaring the use of the streets by the company a nuisance, may grant an injunction maintaining the status quo, pending an appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2207; Dec. Dig. § 447.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 447*)—INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL—POWER OF COURT.

A trial court, though reasonably certain that its conclusion in denying a perpetual injunction is correct, may not be entirely free from doubt, and where the losing party seeks to avail himself of the right of appeal and is prosecuting the right diligently, the court may, in its discretion, protect the subject-matter of the litigation from destruction, pending the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2207; Dec. Dig. § 447.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 447*)—INJUNCTION PENDING APPEAL—POWER OF COURT.

The power of the court to maintain the status quo of the litigation, pending an appeal from its decree denying a perpetual injunction, is discretionary, and must be exercised only under such conditions as will fairly protect the successful party in the benefits of the decree in his favor.

In Bank. Application for writ of prohibition by the City of Pasadena against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and the judge thereof. Denied.

J. P. Wood, City Atty., and Wm. J. Carr, for petitioner. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, for respondents Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. and another.

LORIGAN, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition. On March 25, 1908, the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company, in conjunction with the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company, brought an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against the city of Pasadena, and certain of its officers, to enjoin and restrain said city from enforcing one of its municipal ordinances relative to the use of streets thereof by telegraph and telephone companies requiring franchises and fixing charges to be paid for such use, and forbidding the maintenance of certain telegraph and telephone lines, and declaring them nuisances, and to restrain and enjoin the city from destroying or removing (as it was alleged the city threatened and intended to do under said ordinance) the poles, wires, and appliances of the plaintiffs erected and used in the streets, alleys, and public places of said city.

A temporary restraining order was issued on the filing of the complaint and thereafter, on November 12, 1908, upon a hearing it was ordered that an injunction pendente lite issue. A trial of the cause being had, the court, on May 27, 1909, entered an order directing a judgment for the city for costs and "that the temporary injunction theretofore issued be forthwith dissolved," and immediately thereafter the city, through its officers, without notice to plaintiffs, commenced the destruction of the companies' telephone system in Pasadena, by cutting 12 of their cables, a total of 1,350 pairs of wires, disconnecting 2,400 subscribers and 3 exchanges, besides 4 toll lines. The next day a conference was had between the attorneys for the respective parties, and a stipulation entered into, wherein it was agreed that the lines of the companies might be reconnected, pending an effort to come to some understanding whereby conditions might remain in statu quo pending the final determination of the action; the plaintiffs contemplating an appeal from the judgment.

In this connection it may be said that while an order that an injunction pendente lite issue was made November 12, 1908, no injunction was in fact issued. It was assumed, however, by the attorneys in the stipulation referred to, that such an injunction had in fact been issued, and it was provided thereby that if the parties could agree as to the conditions under which the subject-matter might be maintained in statu quo pending the contemplated appeal, that "an injunction as heretofore issued shall issue and continue in force pending the final determination of the action," and if unable to agree, the plaintiffs might apply to the court for the issuance of an injunction pending such final determination.

An agreement could not be reached and plaintiff moved the court to restore and continue in force such preliminary injunction pending the final determination of the cause which, on June 28, 1909, the court granted, being of opinion, as declared in its order, that the status quo between the parties should be maintained pending the final determination of the action. This order was made by the court on certain conditions, namely, that plaintiffs should within 10 days perfect their appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgment in the action; that within that time they deposit with the clerk of the court for the benefit of the city $3,578.12, being 2 per cent. of the gross receipts of the companies from their telephone business at Pasadena between August 7, 1907 (that being the alleged date of the expiration of one of the franchises granted by the city to the Sunset Company) and the 29th day of May, 1909; that each six months thereafter and pending final determination of the cause, they should make a similar deposit; that the plaintiffs deposit with the clerk an agreement duly executed by them, whereby they should agree that in the event of a final determination of the action in favor of the city, if the plaintiffs or either of them, or their successors, should apply to the city and secure a franchise for doing a telephone business in said city, under which the grantee of said franchise should be required to pay more than 2 per cent. of the annual gross receipts from such business in said city, they would pay to the city the difference between the percentage of gross receipts required by said franchise and 2 per cent. of said gross receipts, accruing between the 7th day of August, 1907, and the date of granting such franchise, and that the plaintiffs within 10 days give a bond, to be approved by the court, in the sum of $15,000 for the faithful performance of all the terms and conditions imposed. All the conditions imposed were complied with by the plaintiffs. The order above referred to, restoring and enforcing the injunction pending the determination of the controversy, recited that it was made concurrently with the signing of the judgment ordered in the action, and at the same time it was made the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of the city, and signed a decree in its behalf which was entered June 30, 1909. There was nothing in the decree itself restoring or continuing the injunction in force, or referring to it at all.

On July 7, 1909, the defendant city moved the court to vacate said order of June 28, 1909, on several grounds, to wit, that no preliminary injunction had in fact ever been issued or been in effect in said action, and, further, that the court was without power or authority to make said order continuing in force the injunction until the final determination of the action. This motion was denied, but it being brought to the attention of the court for the first time on the hearing thereof (the judge trying the case not being the one who had ordered the issuance of the injunction pendente lite), that notwithstanding the stipulation of the parties recited that such an injunction had theretofore issued in the action it had not in fact issued. The court made forthwith a further order. In this order the court recited the erroneous assumption, in making the order of June 28, 1909; that it was the intention of the court by said order to preserve intact the subject-matter of the action, free from molestation or injury by defendant city until the final determination of the action, and thereby corrected and amended the order of June 28, 1909, by enjoining the defendant city, in express terms, from interfering in any manner with any of the poles, wires, appliances, or apparatus of plaintiffs pending the final determination of the action. The plaintiffs on July 7, 1909, after the foregoing proceedings, perfected their appeal to this court from the judgment, and have since been prosecuting such appeal in apparent good faith and with due diligence. Thereafter the present petition for a writ of prohibition was applied for and is now before the court for disposition upon the petition and the demurrer and answer of the respondent judge of the superior court, and similar pleadings on the part of the plaintiffs.

The main question in this controversy is whether a superior court in an action brought to obtain a perpetual injunction can, by an order made concurrently with the granting of a final judgment in the action denying the injunction, continue in force a preliminary injunction, or make an original injunctive order, restraining the successful party, pending an appeal by his adversary against whom the judgment, denying a right to any injunction whatever, runs.

While the petitioner here makes the point that the court had no power to make the order of June 28th continuing the injunction pending the appeal because there had, in fact, never been any preliminary injunction issued in the first instance upon which the order could operate, and likewise had no authority to make the order of July 7th amending the order of the former date, we attach no importance to these claims. If the superior court had the right to make any order concurrently with the final judgment continuing a preliminary injunction in force pending an appeal from the judgment, as counsel on both sides in their stipulation presented to the court conceded that an injunction pendente lite had issued, and was in force at the time the application to continue it was presented, and as the order of June 28th was made on that basis, neither party should be permitted to question it, or to question the validity of the order of July 7th made when when it was first disclosed to the court that, in fact, while ordered, no preliminary injunction had issued, and which later order amended the order of June 28th so as, in terms, to enjoin the plaintiff in the action pending the appeal. If the court had authority to make an order concurrently with the judgment in the case, continuing in force or granting an injunction pending an appeal it was the intention of the court by the order of June 28th to do so. Through the stipulation of counsel the court was inadvertently led to believe that an injunction had theretofore in fact issued, and the intent of its order was to continue it in force. Counsel had in their stipulation declared that such a preliminary injunction had issued, and was in force, and that the defendants in the action might move the court to continue it in force pending the appeal. As the court intended to enjoin the defendant city pending the final determination of the matter, if it had authority to do so at all, it could have effected it by continuing in force any injunction theretofore issued, or by making an original order for an injunction on June 28th, and being misled in carrying out its intent and purpose by assuming that the stipulation correctly stated that the preliminary injunction was then in force, it had a right, when it discovered the error, to amend its order and make an effective injunctive order as originally intended.

This point disposed of brings us back to the main question. The position of the petitioner is that under the law of this state a superior court is without jurisdiction to issue or continue in force an injunction pending an appeal, whether the order doing so is made prior to, or concurrently with, the judgment, or is embraced therein. The logical consideration of this question requires inquiry as to whether in this state a superior court, in an action brought to obtain an injunction, may in its judgment, denying the right to such injunction, provide nevertheless for continuing in force pending a final determination of the action an injunction preliminarily issued, because, if it can, we think that while the order here in question enforcing or continuing the injunction cannot strictly be said to be part of the judgment, still it must be considered as intended to operate concurrently therewith, as the court declared, and if it could stand if embodied in the judgment, has equal force as an order made independent of but concurrent therewith.

We think, on an examination of the authorities, that it is hardly open to serious question but that the superior court has the power in its final judgment to continue in force a preliminary injunction so as to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of litigation pending an appeal, notwithstanding that the right to a perpetual injunction, which was the primary object of the action, may have been denied by the judgment itself. By article 6, § 5, of the Constitution of this state, the superior court is vested with "original jurisdiction in all cases in equity." A similar constitutional provision as to the jurisdiction of the district courts (predecessors to the present superior courts) is found in the old Constitution of 1849 as amended in 1862 (article 6, § 6), and as to such a provision it is said in People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379, 390, and likewise in Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 387, 400, that "the equity jurisdiction with which the district courts are invested under the Constitution is that administered in the high courts of chancery in England." To this same effect is Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 Pac. 317.

It being determined, therefore, that the superior court has equity powers equal to those exercised by the chancery courts in England, it only remains to ascertain whether such courts possessed the power to maintain the status quo of the subject of litigation by continuing an injunction pending an appeal. While this is the first time that this exact question has been presented to this court for determination, we have no doubt that the power existed in the chancery courts in England, and that under the authorities from our sister states it is a power with which courts of general equity jurisdiction in this country are invested, certainly at least in the absence of any limitation by constitutional provision or legislative enactment. In some of the authorities, to be cited or quoted from, some discussion is had as to the power of the appellate court, on application therefor, to grant an injunction pending the appeal, as well as the right of the lower court under its original equitable power to do so. We are not now concerned with what may be the power of the appellate court in that respect, but are dealing solely with the right of the trial court in an equitable action to do so in its final decree, and limit ourselves to a consideration of this sole proposition.

Now as to the power of the English courts of chancery to preserve the subject-matter of litigation in statu quo, pending the final determination of a controversy, there can be no question. The existence of this power in such courts, and their right to exercise it in an equity suit, is thus generally declared: "Where an action has been altogether dismissed by a divisional court, the Court of Appeals will in a proper case grant an injunction to restrain any of the parties from parting with the property till the hearing of the appeal. If an appeal is dismissed by the court, the jurisdiction of the court is gone, and no order can be made to bind the parties pending an appeal to the House of Lords. Where a plaintiff whose appeal is about to be dismissed intends to appeal to the House of Lords he should ask that the decree dismissing the bill should be so framed as to keep alive the jurisdiction of the court. But the court has power on a proper case being made out, to restrain by injunction all dealings with a fund pending appeal to the House of Lords, although the court has decided against the title of the plaintiff and dismissed the action. The jurisdiction, however, will be exercised with care and so as not to encourage any one to present appeals for the purpose of delay." Kerr on Injunctions (3d Ed.) pp. 29, 30.

In Hovey v. McDonald, 109 U. S. 150, 160, 3 Sup. Ct. 136, 142 (27 L. Ed. 888), this power in the English courts of chancery is recognized, where the court says: "In England, until the year 1772, an appeal from a decree or order in chancery suspended all proceedings; but since that time a contrary rule has prevailed there. The subject was reviewed by the House of Lords in 1807, and an order was made establishing the right of the chancellor to determine whether and how far an appeal should be suspensive of proceedings, subject to the order of the House on the same subject. See Palmer's Pract. H. L. 9, 10; 15 Vesey, 184; [Hart & Hoyt v. Mayor of Albany] 3 Paige, 383-385." And in that case the court, referring to the Slaughter House Cases, 10 Wall. 273, 19 L. Ed. 915, and still considering the power of the chancery courts of England to maintain by their order the status quo of the subject-matter of litigation pending appeal, says as to what was, and was not, decided by those cases: "It was decided that neither a decree for an injunction nor a decree dissolving an injunction was suspended in its effect by the writ of error, though all the requirements for a supersedeas were complied with. It was not decided that the court below had no power, if the purposes of justice required it, to order a continuance of the status quo until a decision should be made by the appellate court, or until that court should order the contrary. This power undoubtedly exists, and should always be exercised, when any irremediable injury may result from the effect of the decree as rendered; but it is a discretionary power, and its exercise or non-exercise is not an appealable matter."

In Polini v. Gray, 12 L. R. Chan. Div. 438, it is said by the Master of the Rolls: "It appears to me on principle that the court ought to possess that jurisdiction, because the principle which underlies all orders for the preservation of property pending litigation is this, that the successful party is to reap the fruit of that litigation and not obtain merely a barren success. That principle, as it appears to me, applies as much to the court of the first instance before the first trial, and to the court of appeals before the second trial, as to the court of last instance before the hearing of the final appeal." To the same effect are Huguenin v. Baseley, 15 Ves. Jr. 179; Galloway v. Mayor, etc., 3 De G., J. & S. 59; Daniell's Ch. Prac. (6th Am. Ed.) vol. 2, p. 1451.

In our sister states, where the question has arisen as to the power of courts of general equity jurisdiction to make orders maintaining the status quo of the subject-matter till final determination on appeal, the existence of such power has been confirmed by the appellate tribunals. Hart v. Mayor, etc., of Albany, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 381; Messonnier v. Kauman, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 66; Disbro v. Disbro, 37 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 147; Jewett v. Dringer, 29 N. J. Eq. 199; State ex rel. v. Dearing, 180 Mo. 53, 79 S. W. 454.

We will refer particularly to the first and last cases cited, as the other cases mentioned equally sustain the existence of the power in a court of general equity jurisdiction to continue in force such injunction until the final determination of the action.

In Hart v. Mayor, etc., of Albany, supra, plaintiff sued to enjoin the officers of the municipality from removing an ark or floating storehouse from the Albany basin where plaintiff had moored it, contrary to an ordinance of the municipality. On filing his complaint he obtained a preliminary injunction which, on motion after answer, the court dissolved. Plaintiff appealed, but, notwithstanding this, defendants were proceeding to remove the ark. Application was made to the chancellor for an order restraining them from doing so pending the appeal, and the chancellor after reviewing the practice in the English courts of chancery, decided that he had the power to make the order. He said: "Having arrived at the conclusion that the provisions of the revised statutes do not suspend the operation of the order appealed from, so as to restore the injunction and entitle the appellants to an order to stay the proceedings of the defendants as a matter of strict right, it becomes necessary to inquire whether this court has the power to suspend the operation of the order until the decision of the Court for the Correction of Errors on the appeal; and if it has such power, whether this is a proper case for the exercise of the judicial discretion of the chancellor in this respect. * * * Such power, however, is frequently exercised by the superior courts over the suitors and parties therein, for the advancement of justice; and the granting a preliminary injunction in this court, before the rights of the parties are finally determined, always proceeds upon the same principle. The only reasonable ground of objection to such a proceeding, therefore, is, that it seems inconsistent for the court to make an order to restrain a party from proceeding, after it has, upon a full hearing of both parties, decided that he has both a legal and equitable right to proceed. But this objection would equally apply to all the orders in the English Court of Chancery to stay the proceedings on a decree, or order of the court by which the rights of the parties have been established by the same court. In the case of Lewis v. Morgan, 5 Price's Rep. 468, although it was admitted that applications of this kind were not to be encouraged, the Court of Exchequer in England suspended the proceedings under an order of that court, for a limited time, to enable the party against whom the order was made, to bring the case before the House of Lords by appeal." The order was granted on terms.

In the State ex rel. Dearing, supra, the proceeding in the Supreme Court was in prohibition, as here, and involved the question as to the power of the St. Louis City Circuit Court to continue in force in its final judgment denying plaintiffs an injunction and pending the appeal therefrom, a temporary injunction previously issued. In sustaining the power of the trial court to make the order, the court said: "The precise question presented by that contention is: Has a circuit court in this state in a suit in equity, in which a temporary injunction has been granted, in its final judgment in favor of the defendant on the merits, dissolving the injunction and dismissing the plaintiff's bill, the power to continue the temporary injunction in force pending the appeal taken from that judgment? By the Constitution and laws of this state, circuit courts are invested with general original jurisdiction of suits in equity, subject to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court or the courts of appeals, as the case may be, and in such cases are invested with all the powers inherent in an English court of chancery, except so far as those powers may have been limited by statute. As incident to their jurisdiction, the English chancery courts have power in a proper case to grant an interlocutory injunction to restrain a mischief complained of, and preserve matters in statu quo until the final determination of the issues therein."

After referring to and quoting from several authorities sustaining the power in the English Court of Chancery, the court also cited and quoted from American authorities equally sustaining the same power in courts of original, equitable jurisdiction in this country, and, as a conclusion from their consideration, said: "So in this country, the jurisdiction of courts of equity of the first instance to make all proper orders for the preservation of the subject-matter of the controversy in statu quo until the final determination thereof in the court of last resort has been uniformly maintained by the highest authority. * * * In the light of the authorities cited, to which many others might be added, we have no hesitation in holding, in conformity to the rulings of the highest authorities in England and America on the subject, that the St. Louis City Circuit Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a court of equity, had full power, in its final judgment or decree in the case stated, to continue in force the interlocutory injunction granted at the beginning of the cause pending the appeal therefrom to the Supreme Court."

On this same subject it is said in Cyc., vol. 22, p. 974: "But a preliminary injunction may be continued pending an appeal from a decree dismissing complainant's bill * * * in case such continuance is necessary to protect the complainant and to maintain the subject-matter in such condition that the complainant will not be deprived of relief in case of his success on the appeal but not otherwise."

Counsel for both parties refer in their briefs to Eldridge v. Wright, 15 Cal. 88, and Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 107, but neither of these cases has any bearing upon the precise question under consideration. The question there involved was as to the power of the Supreme Court to grant an injunction pending appeal. The question here involves only the power of the superior court by its final judgment and in the exercise of its original equity jurisdiction to grant it—entirely different questions involving the consideration of different principles of law, and, as heretofore stated, we limit our discussion to the latter question only.

While it is therefore quite clear from these authorities that the power existed in the courts of chancery under the English system to maintain the status quo of the subject of the litigation pending appeal, and that courts of general equity jurisdiction in this country are held to have like power, and that as to the superior courts of this state it has been directly decided that they possess the same equity jurisdiction as was possessed by the English chancery courts, it is nevertheless contended by counsel for petitioner that such general equity jurisdiction is subject to legislative control as far as provisional remedies are concerned, as such remedies are mere incidents to the jurisdiction of the courts, and are no part of its essential jurisdiction.

On this assumption, and in connection with it, it is urged that under the Code provisions of this state the superior courts, notwithstanding they are courts of general equity jurisdiction, are without power to issue injunctions, either permanent or provisional, except in such cases as are provided by the Code, and which it is insisted do not embrace power to continue in force pending an appeal, a temporary injunction theretofore issued. Conceding, without deciding, all that petitioner contends for, still, if the Legislature has not by some provision curtailed the power which, as courts of general equity jurisdiction invested with all the power exercised by courts of chancery in England, our superior courts possess, this power remains and may be exercised. If it has been shorn of power in this respect by legislation, it must be found in the code provisions as to the matter of injunctions, and a careful examination of these provisions, both in the Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure, discloses nothing whereby the exercise of power in question has been curtailed.

It is provided by section 3420 of the Civil Code that "preventive relief is granted by an injunction, provisional or final." And "provisional injunctions are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure." Civ. Code, § 3421. Section 3422, following, provides for cases in which a final injunction may be granted, and section 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the cases in which the court may grant, and in which it cannot grant, injunctions. None of these provisions refer in any manner to the right of the court to grant a provisional injunction, in a final judgment, maintaining in force the status quo of the litigation pending an appeal. But from a consideration of these code provisions it is insisted by petitioner that they embody complete legislation on the subject of injunctions —final and provisional—and that the power of the court to grant injunctions in any other case, or under any other circumstances than those mentioned in the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure is denied. This contention of petitioner is based mainly on the terms of sections 3274 and 3421 of the Civil Code; the one declaring that preventive relief can only be granted in cases specified in "this part [part 1] of the Civil Code"; the other declaring that "provisional injunctions are regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure." But these sections, and the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure heretofore referred to, are not all the legislation on injunctions. Section 3366 of the Civil Code provides that specific or "preventive relief may be given as provided by the laws of this state" and section 3368 provides that "preventive relief is given by prohibiting a party from doing that which ought not to be done." Section 3274 is found in that part and title of the Code dealing with "Relief in General." Sections 3366 and 3368 are found in the title dealing with "Specific and Preventive Relief" in particular, and must be taken as a particular specification of cases under section 3274 when the court is authorized to grant preventive relief in addition to other cases mentioned in the Civil Code provision.

While the codes declare the law of the state (Civ. Code, § 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 4), they do not declare all of it. The constitutional provisions also constitute the law of the state, and when, as addressed to the particular matter in question, there is vested in the superior court as a court of general equity jurisdiction by the constitutional provision, the same jurisdiction which belonged to the court of chancery in England, and, as pertaining thereto, the right to restrain by injunction pending an appeal, if that power is curtailed by legislation it must be effected by legislation which unequivocally has that effect. Nowhere in the Code is there found any legislation of that character. While there is legislation prohibiting the granting of injunctions in certain specified cases, and power given to grant them, both temporary and final, in other actions pending in the court, there is nothing in the legislation on the subject which in terms, or by necessary implication, has divested the superior court of power in the exercise of its otherwise equitable jurisdiction to grant an injunction to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of litigation pending an appeal. Not only do we think that there is nothing in the codes which attempts to curtail this power, but under section 3368 of the Civil Code which provides that "preventive relief is given by prohibiting a party from doing that which ought not be done," the power of the court to make the order in question remains undisturbed.

The precise matter in issue in the action below was the right of the plaintiffs in the case to maintain their poles, wires, and general telephone systems in the streets of Pasadena, where, with the permission of the municipality, they have been maintained for upwards of 20 years. The city was threatening to cut down these poles and destroy the systems and suit was brought to enjoin them, and a preliminary injunction was issued. Judgment went against plaintiffs and from that judgment they had a right to appeal, and in good faith were prosecuting it, when the city actually commenced the destruction of the telephone systems. Common fairness and a sense of justice readily suggests that while plaintiffs were in good faith prosecuting their appeals, they should be in some manner protected in having the subject-matter of the litigation preserved intact until the appellate court could settle the controversy. If the city could be permitted while the appeals were pending, to destroy the property of the plaintiffs, a reversal of the judgment would be of little consequence to the latter. They would have suffered the loss of their property, and consequent, great, and irreparable injury, without any advantage to the municipality. The suggestion of this result to the plaintiffs further readily suggests that if there is any power in the lower court to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter pending the appeal, it should be upheld. A trial court may be reasonably certain that the conclusion it has reached denying an injunction is correct, while at the same time the matter may not be entirely free from doubt in its mind. Under these circumstances, and where the losing party is endeavoring to avail himself of his right of appeal and is prosecuting that right diligently, the trial court ought to have the power, and discretion to exercise it, so as to protect the subject-matter of litigation from destruction pending the final determination of that right, and in order that, if it be ultimately decided that the judgment appealed from was erroneous, his property may be saved to him. To grant the right of appeal from a judgment denying an injunction which is sought to restrain the destruction of property, and at the same time deny the trial court the right to preserve the property intact pending the appeal, would be a travesty on justice.

While it is true that we are here dealing with the matter of mere abstract power in the superior court, it may be said that while we are satisfied such power exists, its exercise is a matter discretionary with the trial court and to be exercised only under such conditions, imposed upon the party in whose favor the injunction order pending appeal is given, as will fully and fairly protect the adverse party in the fruits or benefits of the judgment in his favor. It would appear that in granting the injunction here in question the trial court endeavored to fully protect the municipality by the conditions imposed on the plaintiffs in granting the injunction and which they accepted. But with that matter we have no present concern. As we said, the question on this application for a writ of prohibition is simply a question of the abstract power, or jurisdiction of the court, to grant the injunction pending appeal which, as we have held, the court clearly has. Did we deem the possession of this power in the court doubtful by virtue of the code provisions to which petitioner refers, we would nevertheless be constrained to hold that the power existed as necessary to the ends of justice, because a decree denying an injunction or dissolving a preliminary injunction is not suspended pending the appeal therefrom, and it is a debatable question whether there is any power in our appellate courts, by original, injunctive order, to maintain the status quo of the litigated subject-matter pending appeal. Hence, unless the superior court possesses the power by provisional injunction to maintain the status quo of the subject-matter of litigation, there is no remedy afforded plaintiffs whereby their property could be saved from destruction while the question of the right of the city to require its removal from its streets was, in good faith, being litigated.

The petition for a writ is denied.

Rehearing Denied July 7, 1910.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 337*)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—APPEAL FROM ORDER—TIME THEREFOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1808, provides that any order appointing a guardian must be entered as and become a decree of court, and that the provisions of the Code relative to decedents' estates, as far as they relate to the practice in the superior courts, shall apply to guardianship proceedings. Section 1704 requires orders and decrees in probate proceedings to be entered at length in the minute book. Section 1714 declares as to appeals in such proceedings that the provisions of part 2 of the Code relative to appeals in "civil actions" apply to probate proceedings except in so far as is "inconsistent with the provisions of this title (relating to probate proceedings)." Section 1715 requires an appeal in probate proceedings to be taken within 60 days after the order, decree, or judgment is entered. Section 941a provides that "appeals from all judgments, orders or decrees of any of the superior courts * * * which may, pursuant to law, be reviewed by the Supreme Court, * * * may in addition to other modes prescribed by law be taken pursuant to the provisions of the next section." Section 941b provides for the notice of appeal, its contents, and other matters, and declares "that this notice may be filed at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order or decree. * * *" These last two sections are in part 2, tit. 13, applying generally to appeals in "civil actions." Held, that the time for an appeal from an order appointing a guardian for an incompetent was governed by section 1715, and, in view of section 1714, was not enlarged by sections 941a and 941b, subsequently adopted, and the appeal cannot be taken before the order is entered.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship and estate of James C. Dunphy, an incompetent person. On motion to dismiss an appeal from the order adjudging him incompetent, and appointing a guardian of his person and estate. Appeal dismissed.

Timothy J. Lyons and Bishop, Hoefler, Cook & Harwood (Raymond Benjamin, of counsel), for appellant. J. D. Meredith and Perry Evans, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. On August 7, 1909, in the above proceeding an order was made and filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco adjudging James C. Dunphy to be an incompetent person and appointing a guardian of his person and estate. On August 9, 1909, a notice of appeal to this court from said order was given. On August 31, 1909, the order made and appealed from was entered at length in the minute books of the superior court. The point made for a dismissal of the appeal is that it was prematurely taken. It is insisted that no appeal can be taken under section 1715 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to appeals in probate proceedings until after the order appealed from is entered, and that, as this appeal was taken before such entry, it was prematurely taken and must be dismissed. Guardianship proceedings are embraced within the same title as relates to proceedings in estates of decedents, and are a part of what are generally denominated probate proceedings.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is provided by section 1808 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "any order appointing a guardian must be entered as and become a decree of the court," and that the provisions of the Code in the title above referred to relative to estates of decedents, as far as they relate to the practice in the superior courts, shall apply to proceedings in guardianship. Section 1704 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that orders and decrees of the court in probate proceedings must be entered at length in the minute book of the court. As to appeals—embracing the appeal from the order involved here—it is provided by section 1714 of the same Code that "the provisions of part two of this Code, relative to new trials and appeals—except in so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of this title—apply to the proceedings mentioned in this title"; and by section 1715 following: "The appeal must be taken within sixty days after the order, decree, or judgment is entered."

It is long established by a uniform and unbroken line of authorities in this state that appeals in probate proceedings which, of course, include proceedings in guardianship, are governed exclusively by these sections of the Code, and must be taken under said section 1715; that the right to take an appeal accrues only after the entry of the order, decree, or judgment appealed from; and that, where an appeal is taken before the entry of the judgment or order appealed from, it is prematurely taken, and this court has no jurisdiction to entertain it, and such appeal must be dismissed. Ex parte Miller, 109 Cal. 643–646, 42 Pac. 428; In re Rose, 72 Cal. 577, 14 Pac. 369; In re Wiard, 83 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. 45; Estate of Pearsons, 119 Cal. 27, 50 Pac. 929; Estate of Scott, 124 Cal. 671, 57 Pac. 654; Estate of Devincenzi, 131 Cal. 452, 63 Pac. 723; Estate of More, 143 Cal. 493, 77 Pac. 407, and other cases which might be cited, and which will be found referred to in the above decisions. Under the authorities, as this appeal was taken before the order was entered, the motion now made to dismiss must be granted unless, as contended by counsel for appellant, the time within which an appeal may be taken in probate proceedings has been enlarged by reason of sections 941a and 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that thereunder the appellant is permitted to appeal from an order made in probate proceedings as in other cases as soon as the judgment or order is rendered, and before its entry in the minute book. His contention is in invoking the aid of these sections that, while it is true that before the adoption of said sections 941a and 941b an appeal could not be taken until after the entry of the order appealed from in the minute book, the effect of these sections is to enlarge the right of appeal so as to permit it to be taken as soon as the rendition of the order by the court and before its entry in the minute book. Section 941a provides that "appeals from all judgments, orders or decrees of any of the superior courts * * * which may, pursuant to law, be reviewed by the Supreme Court, * * * may in addition to other modes prescribed by law be taken pursuant to the provisions of the next section." This next section—941b—provides for the notice of appeal, its contents, and other matters, and declares as to the notice of appeal "that this notice may be filed at any time after the rendition of the judgment, order or decree. * * *" These are the sections, and particularly the latter, under which appellant asserts the right to take the appeal under consideration after the rendition of the order and before its entry.

But these sections, while they are general in their language, and, in the absence of any other controlling provision of the Code, would have the effect claimed for them by appellant, still, by virtue of the limitation imposed by section 1714 of the Code of Civil Procedure, they cannot apply to probate proceedings as far at least as the time within which an appeal may be taken from an order or judgment therein is concerned.

The sections invoked are found in part 2, tit. 13, §§ 936–980, Code Civ. Proc., and apply generally to appeals in "civil actions," and declare when they must be taken. Probate proceedings are embraced in part 3 of title 11 of sections 1294 to 1810 of the same Code, and sections 1714 and 1715 thereof deal with the special subject of appeals from orders or judgments rendered therein, and control on that subject. Under section 1714, the general provisions applying to appeals in civil actions which embrace sections 941a and 941b can only apply to appeals in probate proceedings when they are not inconsistent with the provisions of the title applying to appeals in such proceedings. As section 1715 expressly declares that an appeal in such proceedings may be taken only after the entry of the order or judgment appealed from, and as section 941b, invoked by appellant and found in another title containing general provisions as to appeals in civil actions, provides that an appeal from an order or judgment may be taken after rendition and before the entry thereof, it is quite clear that the two sections are inconsistent with each other in point of time, and hence under section 1714 the time within which an appeal may be taken is controlled by section 1715 and cannot be taken until after the entry of the order. Counsel for appellant contends that both sections can be construed so as to be consistently applied; that section 1715 may be construed as a limitation upon the time within which the appeal may be taken—that is, it cannot be taken after the lapse of 60 days after the entry—but that as to when the right to take it shall accrue section 941b fixes it at any time after the rendition of a judgment or order; that, so construing the sections, they harmoniously tend to fix the rendition as the time when the right to take the appeal accrues, and 60 days after entry as the time when the right is lost. There would be no trouble in so holding if the construction of those two sections were alone concerned. No valid reason can be urged why a party should be denied a right to appeal in probate proceedings immediately on the rendition of the judgment or order and before entry, and granted it generally in all civil actions, and a construction could be readily reached which would accord the enlarged right in all actions or proceedings. The insuperable obstacle, however, to a construction of these sections under the harmonious lines suggested by appellant is the language of section 1714. That section makes applicable to appeals in probate proceedings only those general provisions on the subject, found in part two of the Code, which are not inconsistent with provisions in the title embracing probate proceedings and providing for appeals therein, and excludes all other provisons which are inconsistent with the latter. As section 1715 fixes the time when an appeal may be taken in probate proceedings as after the entry of the order or judgment appealed from, and it has uniformly been held by this court that an appeal taken before that entry was made was prematurely taken, it would be a waste of time to attempt to argue that section 941b, permitting appeals to be taken on rendition of the order before its entry, is not inconsistent with the former section, and hence inapplicable under section 1714 to appeals in probate proceedings. There is such a radical inconsistency in point of time as to when the appeal may be taken under the several sections referred to as render them incapable of harmonious construction, and it necessarily follows that section 1715 must exclusively govern the taking of the appeal under consideration.

In the Estate of Brewer, 103 Pac. 486, a converse proposition to the one involved here was considered by this court. There the motion was to dismiss an appeal from a final decree in probate, on the ground that it was taken more than 60 days after the entry of the decree. Appellant contended in support of his appeal that under section 941b he had six months after the entry of the decree within which to appeal, notwithstanding section 1715 required the appeal to be taken within 60 days after its entry. It was held that the time during which the appeal could be taken under section 941b was inconsistent with the limit prescribed by section 1715 governing probate proceedings, and that under section 1714, in view of this inconsistency, section 1715 exclusively applied. The appeal was therefore dismissed.

The legal situation here is practically identical with that presented in the Brewer Case. The same sections of the Code were under consideration and construction. In that case it was held that under section 1714 only those general provisions governing appeals which were not inconsistent with the provisions as to appeals in probate proceedings found in that title were applicable to the latter; that section 941b allowing an appeal within 6 months after entry of the decree was inconsistent in point of time with section 1715, specially applicable to appeals in probate proceedings, and which provided that the appeal should be taken within 60 days, and hence section 1715 controlled. Equally applicable is that conclusion to the matter at bar. Section 941b is inconsistent with section 1715 in point of time as to when the appeal may be taken; the first provides it may be taken before entry, the latter after entry. This inconsistency renders section 1715 alone applicable and as the appeal under consideration was taken before entry of the order appealed from, when section 1715 provides that it must be after its entry, the appeal was prematurely taken and is dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Application for the probate of the will of Patrick Riordan, deceased, contested by Daniel James Reardon and others. From the judgment rejecting the will, and from an order denying a new trial, the proponent, James D. Fitzgerald, appeals. Reversed.

Frank J. Hennessy and Stafford & Stafford, for appellant. Wm. M. Cannon, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment denying probate to the will of deceased, and from an order denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

Patrick Riordan was born in Ireland, and came to California in 1849. He married in San Jose, and there settled on a ranch. His first child was born in 1862, and during the succeeding 16 years he became the father of 12 children, 9 of whom are still living. Upon an original investment of $8,000 he had in the year 1885 accumulated property of the value of $45,000. In that year his wife secured a divorce from him on the ground of his extreme cruelty, and at the same time they agreed upon a division of the community property. Of the ranch, consisting of 231 acres she received 151 acres, and he 80 acres, and the cattle thereon were divided equally between them. Thereafter Patrick Riordan moved a barn or granary from another part of the ranch to within about 200 yards of the Riordan family home, and resided in it for more than two years, thereafter making his home in San Jose and San Francisco until the time of his death. He executed his last will on July 6, 1901, and he died in San Francisco on July 6, 1907. By his will he gave to each of his nine children the nominal sum of $1, and in explanation thereof he stated, "I give my children no more because they have lived apart from me and for other sufficient reasons not here given." To each of two nieces residing in Ireland he bequeathed $2,000. He gave to his nephew James D. Fitzgerald, in trust for the latter's minor son, James R. Fitzgerald, a certain piece of improved real property situated in San Francisco. He nominated James D. Fitzgerald executor of his will, and bequeathed to him the residue of his estate. When this will was offered for probate, it was contested by the children of the decedent, who alleged that their father was of unsound mind and under the undue influence of James D. Fitzgerald when he made the same. The jury found on both of these issues in favor of the contestants. Upon the verdict judgment was entered denying probate to the will. A motion for a new trial was duly made, and denied.

The evidence shows that in 1887 decedent sold his share of the ranch and went to live in San Jose. In 1889 he visited Ireland, and some two years later made a second visit to that country. From the year 1887 until his death he engaged in no regular business, although he bought some real property and occasionally loaned money on security, attending personally to all his own affairs. He went when and where and with whom he pleased. He was a man of intelligence, but very set in his views. He always enjoyed good health until in July, 1907, when he was taken ill with pneumonia, and died after an illness of about six days, being at that time 85 years of age. From 1887 until his death—a period of 20 years—he made his home with the family of Dr. James D. Fitzgerald, his nephew. The proponent of the will called 24 witnesses, intimate acquaintances of the deceased, all of whom testified that he was of sound mind.

The contestants admitted that their father was a sober and industrious man; that he provided them with a good home up to the time of the separation from his wife, when they remained with her; that he sent them to school, visited them there, and attended church every Sunday with his family. They also testified that he was a successful and perfectly sane man in every regard, with the single exception that he entertained an insane delusion as to his children. If a person, against all evidence and probability, persistently believes supposed facts which have no existence except in his perverted imagination, and conducts himself, however logically, upon the assumption of their existence, he is, so far as they are concerned, under an insane delusion. Estate of Scott, 128 Cal. 62, 60 Pac. 527; Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 364, 62 Pac. 605; Estate of Redfield, 116 Cal. 652, 48 Pac. 794. If the testator was the victim of a delusion, as thus defined, in respect to his children at the time he executed his will, and the provisions thereof were caused or affected by such delusion, the instrument is not his will. Seven of the contestants testified at the trial that at the time of the separation of their father and mother in 1884 he was of unsound mind as to his children, basing their opinion upon his harsh and cruel treatment of them. He had an ungovernable temper, and would often become enraged at the children, at such times inflicting upon them, or attempting to do so, the harsh and cruel treatment complained of.

Their testimony is substantially as follows: Several times quarrels with one of the children would involve the whole family, and the mother, with the children, would run out of the house, and while they were outside the decedent would walk up and down the floor with a light in one hand and a club, or some similar instrument, in the other, muttering to himself. When he would retire for the night, at about 2 o'clock, they would crawl through the window into one room, and there the boys would sleep on the floor and the mother and the girls on a bed. Sometimes for some reason or other, and again without apparent reason, he would hit or attempt to hit one or other of his children, or he would swear at them, the term generally employed being, "You damn scoundrel." On one occasion his son Thomas, who was helping his father catch some horses, permitted them to get away. This angered the decedent, and he called the boy a "damn scoundrel." Thomas ran away and his father pursued him into a bedroom where Mrs. Riordan was, and, then addressing Mrs. Riordan, he said, "You damn scoundrel, is that what you are doing?" and he attempted to hit her with a blacksnake, but missed her and cut the window curtain. Thereupon the "mother ran out, and all the folks ran into the yard." On another occasion, upon being informed that the children wanted some books, Riordan hit his eldest son over the back with a rope doubled, threw him against the wall, and said, "You damn scoundrel, it's books you want. I will give you books." He also seized a pitchfork and chased his son into the house. One day at the table his daughter Mary asked for sugar, and he became angry, and, when Mrs. Riordan tried to quiet him, he struck her on the temple with a brass candlestick. On another occasion a daughter asked for butter, whereupon he grabbed a plate to throw at her. Mrs. Riordan interfered and he struck her on the nose. It would be tedious to detail further the testimony. However it is proper to state that there were a number of instances somewhat similar to those just detailed. The children also claimed that their father showed them no paternal affection, and that they were afraid of him. After 1884, and while the decedent was living in the barn, on several occasions he pointed his finger at the children and swore at them, and also on other occasions stated that the loss of his eye (which was removed in 1892) was caused by one of his sons. For the purpose of showing that the condition of mind of the testator as disclosed by these incidents continued to exist down to the time the will was executed seventeen years later, the contestants rely on some deeds, transfers of bank accounts and three wills, including the one in question, by which acts the decedent gave all or nearly all of his property to the Fitzgeralds, and thereby showed, as they claim, a persistent and fixed desire to prevent them from receiving any of his estate. Not a witness other than the children testified that the decedent was without testamentary capacity; and ignoring the remoteness of this testimony, and assuming that the condition of mind of the decedent toward his children in 1885 was shown to exist in 1901 when the will was made, still we think the testimony only disclosed that the deceased was harsh and cruel and was afflicted with an ungovernable temper, and that it utterly fails to show that he was laboring under any insane delusion. A person may have a bad temper, and under its influence say and do wrong and unnatural things, and still not be laboring under an insane delusion as to the objects of his hostility.

In the Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 364, 62 Pac. 607, it is said: "Prejudice, dislikes, and antipathies, however ill founded, or however strongly entertained, cannot be classed as insane delusions, nor is every delusion an insane delusion." In the case of In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 452, 31 Pac. 454, it was said: "The likes and dislikes of human beings—their confidences and mistrusts—are often capricious and arbitrary; but they are not evidence of insanity because they cannot be logically defended to the satisfaction of those who think them wrong. In the case at bar there is no warrant for the claim that the testatrix's dislike of her daughter-in-law and her family was an insane delusion. It was simply such a feeling, arising out of the recondite principles of attraction and repulsion, as is quite common among people of undoubted sanity." In the Estate of Carpenter, 94 Cal. 419, 29 Pac. 1105, Judge Temple observes: "People may hate their relations for bad reasons, and yet not be deprived of testamentary power." In Weston v. Hanson, 212 Mo. 248, 111 S. W. 44, although it was claimed that the testator was of unsound mind, the will was upheld. The court in so holding said: "We are not to lose sight of the fact that the testator's brutal treatment of his wife, as shown by the evidence in this case, is not one of the tests of testamentary capacity, for a man may be unkind and brutal in his treatment of his wife, and yet have capacity to make a will." In Conner v. Skaggs, 213 Mo. 334, 111 S. W. 1132, where the will was upheld, the testator disinherited his daughter, because she married against his wishes. We quote from that case: "Many witnesses testified to Mr. Skaggs' exceeding and sore bitterness over this event, and for some time he did not speak of it without falling into a very ecstacy of rage, sometimes accompanied by such physical phenomena as 'foaming at the mouth,' 'pawing the grass,' and cursing and swearing. The record makes it clear that in the height of his bitterness he determined to disinherit his disobedient daughter. He told others he would do so. Accordingly, on the 28th day of February (the month of the marriage), the will in contest was executed, doing that very thing. * * * The resentment of the father was most human and natural, though extravagantly exhibited. That he did not rise to the lofty and divine plane of complete forgiveness when time had healed his wounds is unfortunate, but is still natural and human —not insanity." In Schneider v. Manning, 121 Ill. 381, 12 N. E. 269, the court says: "A man may become prejudiced against some of his children, and that too without proper foundation; and because he may make unjust remarks about them—remarks not warranted by the facts—it does not follow that he has insane delusions, or that he is devoid of testamentary capacity."

Whatever belief or opinion the testator may have entertained against the children when the will was executed, still the record fails to show that there was no reason for such belief or opinion, or that he adhered to it against all evidence and argument. In 1884 he and his wife were separated, and in 1885 they were divorced. The dates of the different acts of cruelty toward the children are not stated, but, basing their opinion upon these acts, those of the children who testified on the subject, gave it as their opinion that the testator was of unsound mind in the years 1884 and 1885. Presumably the trouble between the testator and his wife had much to do with his exhibitions of temper. Riordan doubtless felt compelled to, and indeed did, make a generous division of his property with his wife. In this trouble the children sided with their mother, and, if the decedent had made his will in 1885 disinheriting his children, it certainly could not be said that such act was without reason; much less could it be said of such a will made 16 years later, the children in the meantime having reached adult age, and their path in life having made them and their father strangers. Indeed, conceding the right of testamentary disposition, it is difficult to understand how the children could have expected their father to make any testamentary disposition in their favor. After the year 1884 none of them ever called upon him or wrote to him. They ignored him then, and they continued to ignore him for 22 years and down to the time of his death. When any of them met him on the street, they crossed to the other side or passed him by without speaking. Doubtless some of his children would have been unable to recognize him if brought face to face, or he to recognize some of them. They did not inform him of the death of their mother, which occurred in 1905. Their conduct showed clearly that they did not care for their father; and while, in disinheriting them, he may not, as counsel says, have set an example of Christian charity, still so far from such course being the result of insanity it strikes us as a very natural thing to do. "Where it appears that testator's belief is not so fixed that he could not be reasoned out of it, it will not be held to be a delusion." Skinner's Will, 40 Or. 571, 62 Pac. 523, 67 Pac. 951.

Little need be said on the question of undue influence. The decedent had shown for years a desire to leave the principal part of his estate to the Fitzgeralds. As before remarked, Riordan was a man of considerable intelligence with very fixed opinions, and no doubt it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to persuade him how to dispose of his property. He made three wills, and in each of them he practically disinherited his children. His last will was not a deathbed will made by a feeble old man, but it was made six years before his death and when he was in robust health. It was made without suggestion from any one; in brief, it was made free from any suspicious circumstances. Finally, we think nothing was more natural than that the decedent should have bequeathed his estate, as he did, to the Fitzgeralds, with whom he had made his home for many years. They were the natural objects of his bounty.

For these reasons, we think the verdict is not supported by the evidence. The judgment and order are reversed.

MORRELL v. SAN TOMAS DRYING & PACKING CO. et al. (Civ. 720.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 26, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 23, 1910.)

1. Sales (§ 334*)—Construction of Contract—Time for Delivery.

Where a contract for the sale of prunes provided for delivery to be made as directed, final delivery before November 30th, and the buyers extended the time for performance by the seller to May 1st following, the buyers could control the time of delivery till November 30th, but the extension was for the benefit of the seller and the buyers were bound to accept performance when he offered it, so that a resale by him on April 15th after their refusal to accept was not premature.

2. Sales (§ 339*)—Remedies of Seller—Action for Breach of Contract—Pleading.

Where a contract for the sale of prunes stated a basis price, and provided that a certain amount should be added to the price or deducted therefrom for such prunes as were above or below standard size, the complaint in an action for the buyers' breach of contract alleging that on resale by the seller after refusal of the buyers to accept a certain sum was received leaving a certain sum as deficiency, without stating the sizes of the prunes resold nor showing what was the standard size, was subject to demurrer for indefiniteness, under Civ. Code § 3311, fixing the damages for a buyer's breach of contract where the property is resold at the excess of the amount due from the buyer over the proceeds of the resale.

3. Sales (§ 339*)—Remedies of Seller—Action for Breach of Contract—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action for buyers' breach of a contract to purchase prunes at a certain basis price, with increase or deduction where the prunes were above or below standard size, where the evidence failed to show the size of prunes which the buyer refused to accept and which were resold, it was insufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff.

4. Evidence (§ 455*)—Parol Evidence—Construction of Contract—Identification of Subject-Matter.

In an action for breach of a contract for the sale of prunes grown and dried on the M. ranch, oral testimony that the term "M. ranch" meant three ranches leased and worked by the seller was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Dec. Dig. § 455.*]

5. Appeal and Error (§ 1003*)—Review—Questions of Fact.

An appellate court will not disturb the verdict of the jury though it appears to be against the preponderance of the evidence.

6. Sales (§ 85*)—Performances of Contract—Substantial Performance.

Where a contract provided for the sale of prunes grown and dried on the M. ranch, the fact that a portion of the prunes were dried on a neighboring place is not a material variation from the requirements of the contract.

7. Witnesses (§ 239*)—Cross-Examination—Scope and Extent.

In an action for buyers' breach of contract to purchase prunes, where a witness testifies on direct examination that on a resale of the prunes they were purchased by a party after examination and acceptance by it, cross-examination as to whether the prunes could be used in the process employed by the second buyer that would not be suitable for shipping in boxes should be permitted, the direct testimony being for the purpose of showing that the prunes were merchantable.

8. Damages (§ 68*)—Elements—Interest.

Under Civ. Code, § 3311, fixing damages after breach of contract to purchase at the difference between the contract price and the net proceeds of resale, and section 3357, in the same chapter, providing that the damages prescribed by the chapter are exclusive of exemplary damages and interest except where those are expressly mentioned, interest is improperly allowed in such a case, notwithstanding section 3287, in another chapter, authorizing interest on damages from the day the right thereto vests.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by J. B. Morrell against the San Tomas Drying & Packing Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Will M. Beggs and R. C. McComish, for appellants. W. A. Bowden, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment, and also from the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. The defendants demurred to the complaint both generally and specially, and the first point to be considered concerns the action of the court in overruling this demurrer.

Plaintiff and defendants entered into a contract June 12, 1907, for the sale by plaintiff to defendants of a crop of prunes grown in 1907. The contract is in writing, and the facts pertinent to this discussion as set out in the complaint are as follows: "Moulton's Switch, Santa Clara Co., Cal. 6/12, 1907. Received from the San Tomas Drying & Packing Co. the sum of one dollar ($1.00) as part of purchase money for the following described fruit, viz.: The entire crop of dried Fr. prunes, season 1907, and estimated at 100 tons, and grown and dried on the orchard known as Morrell Ranch-Wrights, f. o. b. cars Wrights, tested at Wrights. Prunes to be on the five point, with one dollar per ton to be added to basis price for each and every point that the prunes average larger than the five point, and one dollar per ton to be deducted from basis price for each and every point that the prunes average smaller than the five point. (It is understood by the five point that prunes must run 35—45—55—65—75—85—95—105—115 per pound.) All fruit to be sound and merchantable and well dried, free from slab, of choice quality and delivered f. o. b. packing house, situated on the Infirmary Road, Santa Clara Co., California, packed in sacks furnished by buyer, original condition as taken from the drying yard. * * * San Tomas Drying and Packing Company agrees to pay balance of purchase money as soon as the delivery is completed and sizes determined. Delivery to be made as directed, final delivery before Nov. 30, 1907. * * * Buyers, San Tomas Drying and Packing Co. For account of Balfour, Guthrie & Co., per H. Booksin, Jr. Seller, J. B. Morrell."

It is alleged that defendants subsequently in writing extended the time for performance by plaintiff to the 1st day of May, 1908; that the entire crop of dried prunes referred to in the contract amounted to 172,698 pounds, and that under the contract defendants agreed to pay therefor the sum of $6,004.37; that plaintiff delivered to defendants, and defendants accepted and received, 134,132 pounds of said prunes and no more; "that on the 15th day of April, 1908, the said plaintiff offered and tendered to said defendants the remainder of said prunes, viz., 38,566 pounds thereof, and then and there offered to deliver the same to the defendants according to the terms of said contract"; that defendants refused, and ever since have refused, to accept the same or any thereof; "that on Saturday, April 25, 1908, having first given the defendants reasonable notice of the time and place of resale, the plaintiff resold the said 38,566 pounds of prunes at public auction for and on account of said defendants for the sum of $1,285.45, leaving a deficiency of $870.89, no part of which has been paid"; "that the expenses attendant upon such resale amount to the sum of $309.39, no part of which has been paid."

It is first urged that the general demurrer should have been sustained because the contract provided for delivery to be made as directed, and that the resale took place before the expiration of the time of performance given by the extension pleaded. We do not think this point well taken. The time of performance under the original contract expired November 30, 1907. Until this time arrived defendants could control the time of delivery. The extension pleaded was an extension of time for plaintiff to perform, and, when plaintiff within that time offered to perform, defendants were bound to accept if in other respects the offer was in accordance with the contract. Upon defendants' refusal to accept the tendered fruit, plaintiffs were justified in reselling the same. It is also urged that it cannot be ascertained how the deficiency of $870.80 was determined. For this reason it is separately alleged in the demurrer that the complaint is uncertain and ambiguous.

Nowhere in the complaint is there any statement as to what was the agreed price under the contract between plaintiff and defendants of the rejected 38,566 pounds of prunes. What amount defendants under the contract were obligated to pay for such rejected prunes is nowhere stated. Neither is there any general statement of damages to plaintiff in any given sum resulting from defendants' breach of contract. While it appears from the contract set out in the complaint that defendants agreed to pay a basis price of "4¾," it also appears that the actual price to be paid varied at the rate of $1 per ton below or above such price as the prunes should vary in size below or above the size understood as the standard for the basis price. Nowhere does it even appear what size of prunes is taken as the standard for the basis price. And no attempt is made to state what sizes of prunes were tendered and rejected. So even if we assume that the words "price 4¾ basis" means 4¾ cents per pound, this only informs us that such is the price of prunes that are of the size taken as the standard for the basis price. But it also appears that this price is to be varied with the varying sizes of the prunes delivered. It is thus impossible to determine what was the amount to be paid under the contract for the 38,566 pounds of rejected prunes. The amount to be paid for the rejected prunes is not stated in a lump sum nor at all, nor is any data given from which the amount may be ascertained by calculation.

While it is stated in the complaint that the rejected prunes were resold for $1,285.45, "leaving a deficiency of $870.80," it is not stated that this is the deficiency or difference between the contract price and the proceeds of the resale, nor is any data given from which it can be determined that it is. "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be: (1) If the property has been resold, pursuant to section three thousand and forty-nine, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the net proceeds of the resale." Civ. Code § 3311. The pleader probably intended to bring himself within this section, but has failed to show with sufficient certainty or at all that the deficiency referred to is the difference between the contract price of the rejected prunes and the amount for which they were resold. The court therefore erred in overruling the demurrer.

The jury returned a verdict for $1,172.29 in favor of plaintiff, which was reduced by the court to $1,080.19. The sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict is attacked upon the ground, among others, that there is no evidence to show what was the amount due from defendants to plaintiff for the 38,566 pounds of rejected prunes. The plaintiff in his proof seems to have been consistent with his pleading; for while he nowhere in his pleading showed what was the amount that should have been paid by defendants for the 38,566 pounds of prunes, so in his evidence he made no proof thereof. There is no evidence in the record as to what should have been paid under the contract for the 38,566 pounds of prunes. While it is admitted by the pleadings that the basis price was 4¾ cents (?) per pound, neither the pleadings nor the evidence shows what size of prunes was taken as the standard for the basis price, and neither the pleadings nor the evidence shows what were the sizes of the prunes rejected.

As before stated, the price to be actually paid for the prunes varied from the basis price as the prunes varied in size from the standard size taken for the basis price. Nowhere in the evidence does any one attempt in general terms even to state what was due under the contract for the rejected prunes, and no data is given from which the amount may be determined by calculation. Where, as here, the plaintiff seeks to recover the difference between the contract price and the amount realized on a resale of personal property it is essential to prove what was due under the contract of sale as well as what was realized on the resale, in order to determine what was such difference. It is true that the record does show that the bulk of the rejected prunes were resold at a basis of 2½ cents per pound, which is 2¼ cents less than the contract basis. But this data is not sufficient, for we are still in the dark as to what were the sizes of the rejected prunes and what was the actual contract price therefor. For these reasons we think that the evidence does not sustain the verdict.

As a matter of fact the complaint in express terms alleges that the amount agreed to be paid by defendants for the entire crop sold under the contract was the sum of $6,004.37, and the evidence shows without dispute that defendants in fact paid for the prunes accepted $6,455.71. If the allegation is correct that the contract price of the entire crop amounted to but $6,004.37, then the proof shows without dispute that the plaintiff has been paid more than was due him for the entire crop. The plaintiff while on the stand as a witness suggested that the allegation in the complaint was probably a mistake, but no effort was made to amend or correct the allegation.

The contract calls for prunes grown and dried on the Morrell ranch. The plaintiff was in fact working under leases three ranches, to wit, the Morrell home place, the Norton ranch and the Rhodes ranch, and the prunes in question were grown on the three places. It is claimed that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to show by oral testimony that the term "Morrell ranch" in the contract meant the places then leased and worked by Morrell, the plaintiff. We think, however, that the court did not err in so doing. The three places were leased and in the possession of Morrell the plaintiff. The contract estimated the entire crop of dried prunes at 100 tons. The crop in fact produced on the three ranches did not amount to that quantity. There was such an ambiguity in the contract as to authorize oral evidence to identify the subject of the contract. The evidence objected to simply proved that by the term "Morrell ranch" the parties meant the orchards leased and worked by Morrell.

Much evidence was given to the effect that the rejected prunes did not meet the requirements of the contract as to quality, but upon this point there is a conflict in the evidence. The preponderance of the evidence upon this point seems to be against the plaintiff, but this court cannot disturb the verdict of the jury for this reason.

The fact that a portion of the prunes grown on the Norton place were dried on a neighboring place does not seem to be a material variation from the requirements of the contract.

After permitting the plaintiff to prove that the rejected prunes were finally bought for the Presto Fruit Company after examination and acceptance by them, the court sustained objections to questions on cross-examination put by defendants as to what was done with the prunes, and whether or not prunes could be used in the process employed by the Presto Company that would not be suitable for shipping in boxes. In this we think the court unduly restricted the right of cross-examination. The evidence in chief was manifestly offered to support the proposition that the prunes were merchantable and complied with the contract. The weight of this evidence might have been materially affected if on cross-examination it should have been shown that the prunes in question were used in a process not requiring choice fruit.

The court erroneously instructed the jury that they might allow interest upon any amount that they might find to be due plaintiff from the date of the rejection of the prunes, if they found the rejection to have been unjustifiable.

The rule for fixing damages in such a case as this is laid down in sections 3311 and 3357 of the Civil Code. The first of those sections fixes the damages at the difference between the contract price and the net proceeds of the resale, where, as in this case, a resale is made pursuant to section 3049 of the Civil Code, and makes no provision for interest. The second section (3357) provides that "the damages prescribed by this chapter are exclusive of exemplary damages and interest, except where those are expressly mentioned." The two sections are in the same chapter and must be read together, and so read, clearly exclude the allowance of interest. The rule given in the instruction of the court accords with section 3287 of the Civil Code, but this section is in a different chapter from that containing sections 3311 and 3357, which are specially applicable to this case and must govern. Hewes v. German Fruit Co., 106 Cal. 441, 39 Pac. 853.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the court below is directed to sustain the demurrer, with leave to plaintiff to amend if so advised.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

MERRYMAN et ux. v. KIRBY et al.

(Civ. 620.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 65*)—ACTIONS—ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

The complaint in ejectment alleged that "plaintiffs now are and during all times herein mentioned were, either the owners of, or their immediate grantors were the owners of, the land described," and that "said plaintiffs or their said grantors were the owners in fee of those certain lots, and are such owners now and during all of the times herein mentioned, and in possession thereof," and that while so possessed defendants entered, etc. Held, that the complaint sufficiently alleged plaintiffs were the owners of the property sought to be recovered when the action was begun.

2. PLEADING (§ 403*) — DECLARATION — DEFECTS—CURE BY ANSWER.

Even if the complaint was defective in not sufficiently alleging plaintiffs' ownership, allegations of the answer denying "that the plaintiffs now are or during all the times hereinafter mentioned, or at any other time, or at all were, either or any of them, the owners of the lands" described, cured the defect.

3. EJECTMENT (§ 63*) — ACTIONS — ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT.

4. EJECTMENT (§ 64*) — ACTIONS — ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

The complaint in ejectment described the property to be recovered as that part of lot No. 4 of section 31 in township 8 N., range 1 E., H. B. & M., "described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section 31, and running thence north two chains to a stake, thence west to where said line would intersect the westerly line of said lot four, thence southerly along the westerly line of said lot four to the southwest corner of said lot four, thence east to the place of beginning." Held, that the land was sufficiently described in the complaint so that the officer executing the possessory writ would know the land to which plaintiff would be entitled if he recovers.

5. BOUNDARIES (§ 54*)—PRESUMPTIONS—OFFICIAL ACTS—GOVERNMENT SURVEY.

It is presumed that a government survey was properly made and the corners thereof regularly established, so that in the absence of contrary evidence it must be presumed that the corners of a government survey were marked so as to be easily identified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 474; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*) — PRESUMPTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

A judgment for plaintiff in ejectment must be affirmed on appeal notwithstanding any insufficiency in the allegations of the complaint as to the description of the property where the evidence was not brought up.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3673; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

H. L. Ford, Adam Thompson, and R. T. Devlin, for appellants. E. M. Frost and A. J. Monroe, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action is in ejectment, and the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone from the judgment in favor of plaintiffs. No demurrer to the complaint was interposed, but the appellants now contend that the complaint states no cause of action. In this connection it is asserted that there is no allegation as to ownership of the property at the time of the commencement of the action. Citation is made of authorities to the effect that "plaintiffs must show that at the time of the commencement of the action they have the proper title or interest to support the action of ejectment" (Moore v. Tice, 22 Cal. 513), and "he must also have the right to the possession of the land disputed" (Hawxhurst v. Lander, 28 Cal. 331).

But there are at least two sufficient answers to the contention of appellants. The first one is that the complaint does allege that plaintiffs are the owners of said property, and, secondly, if this were not so, the averments of the answer would cure the defect. The allegation is "that the plaintiffs now are, and during all the times herein mentioned were, either the owners of, or their immediate grantors were the owners of, the land and premises hereinafter described," etc. The term "owners" is clearly inplied after the word "are," and it is safe to say that no one could misunderstand such to be the meaning of the pleader. Again, it is alleged "that said plaintiffs or their said grantors were the owners in fee of those certain lots, * * * and are such owners now and during all of the times hereinafter mentioned and in the possession thereof, that while so possessed defendants on or about the ——— day of May, 1907, without right or title so to do, entered that portion of said lot number 4 of said section described as follows, to wit." We have, therefore, the allegation of ownership and possession by plaintiffs at the time of the entry of defendants, the allegation of ownership at the time of the commencement of the action, and that defendants unlawfully entered the premises and still withhold the possession thereof from plaintiffs. These are all the averments required in an action of this character. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243; Keller v. Ruiz De Ocana, 48 Cal. 638; Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 128, 24 Pac. 863. Again, the defendants in their answer "deny that the plaintiffs now are, or during all the times hereinafter mentioned or at any other time or at all were, or either or any of them were the owners of * * * the lands and premises," etc.

In Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 536, 45 Pac. 817, it is said: "We shall, however, assume that it was the duty of the plaintiff to tender to the defendants an issue as to her seisin or ownership at the date of the bringing of the suit. But the defendants did not wait, as they might well have done, for such tender, for in their answer they not only denied the seisin and right to possession of the plaintiff on the 1st of May, 1894, but added 'or at any other time, or at all, or is now seised in fee,' etc., as above quoted. When defendants thus tendered an issue as to the seisin of plaintiff up to the time the action was brought, and that issue was tried and determined against the defendants, it was too late to raise the objection here."

Appellants are equally at fault in the claim that the land is insufficiently described. "In ejectment, the land should be so defined that in the event of a recovery, the officer executing the writ of possession will know to what land plaintiff is entitled, and thus be enabled to effect the purpose of the action." Bay State M. & T. Co. v. Jackson, 27 Colo. 139, 60 Pac. 573. But it must be manifest that the description here does not appear on its face to be insufficient to identify the property so that it can be located upon the ground. The description is "That portion of said lot number four of said section (section 31 in township 8 N., R. 1 E., H. B. & M.) described as follows, to wit: Commencing at the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section 31, and running thence north two chains to a stake, thence west to where said line would intersect the westerly line of said lot four, thence southerly along the westerly line of said lot four to the southwest corner of said lot four, thence east to the place of beginning."

We must assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the corners referred to in the description are marked so as to be easily identified. To hold with appellants would be in the face of the presumption that the government survey was properly made and the corners regularly established. It has been held that the premises may be sufficiently described by a particular name by which they are known, by their boundaries, by number, by lot and concession, or by section and township. Or it may be sufficient to describe the land as a part of a section of a certain survey. Cyc., vol. 15, pp. 93, 94; Pellier v. Gillespie, 67 Cal. 583, 8 Pac. 185. But even if the pleadings left the matter in doubt the judgment would have to be affirmed, since the evidence has not been brought up. In Thompson v. Connolly, 42 Cal. 315, it was contended that the verdict in describing and locating the division line between the two parcels of land was too vague and uncertain to support the judgment, but the court said: "In support of this proposition, it is said that the line of the Hill tract is a mere imaginary line, and that the map furnishes no data for its correct location, nor for ascertaining the quantity of land awarded to the parties severally, or the precise location of either parcel. But we cannot assume that the line of the Hill tract is a purely ideal line, having no visible existence on the ground. For aught that appears, it may be defined by visible monuments, and its exact location may be a matter of notoriety in the vicinity. All the intendments are in support of the judgment, and there is nothing in the record to raise a reasonable doubt that the land awarded to the plaintiff and defendant can be located with entire precision."

The cases cited by appellants are not opposed to respondents' contention herein, and need not be specifically noticed.

We can see no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. WEBSTER (Cr. 215.)

1. Homicide (§ 244*)—Unlawful Killing—Evidence.

Where accused and decedent quarreled in a saloon, and then separately left the place, accused going away and arming himself, and they met there again in half an hour, accused of his own volition returning to the saloon where decedent was, and accused then shot and killed decedent, the jury could find that the killing was unlawful and not in self-defense.

2. Homicide (§ 332*) — Appeal — Self-Defense—Question for Jury.

Whether a homicide was committed in self-defense is for the jury, and their verdict is conclusive.

3. Criminal Law (§ 823*)—Instructions—Sufficiency.

Where the court correctly charged on the presumption of innocence and on the right of accused to have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt, a charge that if, after a consideration of the evidence, the jury were not "fully satisfied" that accused was guilty, they should acquit him, was not prejudicial because of the use of the quoted words instead of the usual expression, "satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt."

4. Criminal Law (§ 778*)—Instructions—Presumptions.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961, 1963, providing that the jury are bound to find according to a disputable presumption, not contradicted, and declaring that the presumptions that an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent, and that a person intends the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act, are disputable, an instruction that a person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily does do, and must be presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his acts, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary this presumption must prevail, is not erroneous because of the use of the word "must," for it states that one must be presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts unless there is evidence direct or indirect to controvert the presumption.

5. Criminal Law (§ 823*)—Instructions.

Where the court charged that accused had a right to act on appearances, an instruction that to justify homicide on the ground of self-defense it must appear that the danger was so urgent that the killing of the assailant was absolutely necessary, etc., though not in conformity with Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 3, providing that a homicide is justifiable when committed in lawful defense when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to do some great bodily injury, and there is imminent danger of the design being accomplished, was not prejudicial to accused.

6. Homicide (§ 300*) — Self-Defense — Instructions.

Under Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 3, providing that homicide is justifiable when committed by one in the lawful defense of his person when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to do some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of the design being accomplished, a charge that to justify homicide on the ground of self-defense it must appear that the danger was so urgent that the killing of the assailant was absolutely necessary, etc., was not an accurate statement of the law.

7. Homicide (§ 116*)—Self-Defense—"Attack Warranting One in Killing Assailant."

An unlawful attack warranting one in killing his assailant is such an attack as puts him, as a reasonable person, in fear of being killed or of receiving great bodily harm, and one cannot deliberately proceed in the immediate exercise of a mere technical right when he has reason to know that by so doing he will be placed under the necessity of killing another in self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 158–163; Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

T. D. Ingersoll, L. J. Schino, and B. F. Foller, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was informed against by the district attorney of the county of Fresno for the crime of murder. He was tried and found guilty of manslaughter. He moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and he was thereupon sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the period of 10 years. This is an appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The defendant and the deceased on July 18, 1909, quarreled in a saloon in Coalinga, Fresno county. Separately they left the saloon, and within half an hour met again in the same place. They engaged in a second quarrel, as the result of which the defendant (who in the interval between the two quarrels had armed himself with a pistol) shot and killed the deceased. The defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict of the jury.

The evidence shows that the defendant fired three shots at and into the body of deceased, and that deceased was unarmed at the time. While the defendant and deceased had been engaged in a quarrel a short time before, the facts that defendant went away, armed himself, and of his own volition returned to the saloon where the deceased was, and then and there shot and killed deceased, were sufficient to justify the jury in the inference that the killing was unlawful, and not in necessary self-defense as claimed by defendant. Whether the killing of deceased was done in self-defense was a question peculiarly for the jury, and it is not our province to interfere with their verdict. Under such circumstances the verdict of the jury is final and conclusive. People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 562, 62 Pac. 1069; People v. Stokes, 11 Cal. App. 759, 106 Pac. 251.

The court instructed the jury that: "Laws are made and juries called to investigate cases just as much for the protection of the innocent as for the punishment of the guilty. If, therefore, after a careful consideration of all the evidence, you are not fully satisfied that the defendant is guilty, you must say so by your verdict. By so doing the object of the law will be as fully attained as if you were to find a verdict of guilty." Defendant complains of this instruction because the words "fully satisfied" were used, and not the more usual expression "satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt." It would be difficult to conceive of a case in which a jury could be "fully satisfied" and at the same time not be satisfied "to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt." Passing the point that on the whole this instruction is favorable to the defendant, we think the part complained of could not have injured him, for the defendant's right to be presumed innocent and to have his guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt was so often and clearly stated to the jury that they must have understood his right in that behalf. In the case of People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 511, 514, 15 Pac. 102, 103, the trial court had employed the word "satisfied" instead of the words "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt," and it was claimed that the instruction was erroneous. The court said: "Looking at the whole charge, it will be found that the words 'beyond a reasonable doubt' are repeated fifteen times. * * * Taking, then, the whole charge, and reading, as we must, the different parts of it together, it appears that the jury were clearly told that they could not find the defendant guilty of burglary of the first degree, or at all, unless they were satisfied of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. We are unable, therefore, to see how the defend-

The court also instructed the jury as follows: "A person must be presumed and is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable and usual consequences of his own acts, and therefore, if one person assails another violently with a dangerous weapon likely to kill, and which does in fact destroy the life of the person assailed, the natural presumption is that such assailant intended death, or other great bodily harm. In the absence of evidence to the contrary this presumption must prevail."

Section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure enumerates certain disputable presumptions, and in part provides:

"Subd. 2. That an unlawful act was done with an unlawful intent.

Defendant claims that this instruction was at variance with the statute, and in using the word "must" that it in effect deprived the defendant of the benefit of the presumption of innocence. We perceive no sound basis for an objection to this instruction. While the instruction states that a person must be presumed to intend the ordinary consequences of his voluntary act, it also, in compliance with section 1961, Code Civ. Proc., states that said presumption applies in the absence of evidence to the contrary; that is to say, the defendant must be presumed to intend the natural and usual consequences of his act, unless there is evidence, direct or indirect, to controvert this presumption.

The most serious question in the case arises as to the instruction given by the court at the request of the people upon the subject of what constitutes justifiable homicide. The instruction is as follows: "To justify homicide on the ground of self-defense, it must appear that the danger was so urgent and pressing that, in order to save the life of the slayer, or to prevent his receiving great bodily harm, the killing of the other was absolutely necessary, and it must appear that the person killed was the assailant, or that the slayer had really and in good faith endeavored to decline further struggle before the fatal shooting."

Subdivision 3 of section 197 of the Penal Code provides that homicide is justifiable when committed by a person "in the lawful defense of such person when there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury, and imminent danger of such design being accomplished." Defendant contends that the court, by the use of the words "absolutely necessary," incorporated into the instruction an element not warranted by the statute; that the jury were told that a defendant in a criminal case is justified in killing his assailant when the facts and circumstances make it absolutely necessary, or, in other words, that he had no right to act upon apparent necessity. To support his position he cites People v. Flahave, 58 Cal. 249, which, it must be conceded, is squarely in point and upholds defendant's position. But the case has not been followed. People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26; People v. Westlake, 62 Cal. 303. In People v. Cord, 108 Pac. 511, the instruction is upheld. But we are able in this case, as was the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Morine, 61 Cal. 369, where the same instruction was considered, to say that other instructions given qualify and explain the objectionable instruction, and that the charge read as a whole correctly presents the law on the subject. In that case there were three instructions which explained the one questioned. Here there are at least seven, and they were so full and clear that the jury must have understood that the defendant had a right to act upon appearances. In conclusion, we feel constrained to say that the instruction is not an accurate statement of the law and should not have been given.

The court refused to give the following instruction: "In this case the defendant had a right to go back to the saloon for the purpose of procuring a drink or for any lawful purpose, even if he expected to be attacked by the deceased on the way, or after he had entered the place, and if he was for that purpose in this saloon he had a right to be there, and his going did not of itself take away from him the right of self-defense if unlawfully attacked."

The right of self-defense is too broadly stated in this instruction. The unlawful attack which would warrant a defendant in killing his assailant is such an attack as would put him, as a reasonable person, in fear of being killed or of receiving great bodily harm; and any unlawful attack falling short of this would be unavailable as a defense in a charge of homicide. A simple assault would be an unlawful attack, yet it would not justify homicide.

There was one other instruction similar to the one just discussed proffered by the defendant and refused by the court, but it also stated the rights of the defendant too broadly. We do not believe, as was assumed in the instruction, that a person can deliberately persist in the immediate exercise of a mere technical right when he has reason to know that by so doing he will be placed under the necessity of killing a human being in self-defense.

We have examined the other instructions complained of, but find them without error.

PEOPLE v. REESE. (Cr. 129.)

1. Criminal Law (§ 1081*)—Appeal—Notice.

In a criminal case in which judgment was rendered prior to the going into effect of Pen. Code, § 1239 (St. 1909, c. 711), providing that defendant may appeal from a judgment in a criminal case by announcing in open court, "at the time judgment is rendered," that he appeals from the same, defendant to have taken an appeal must have served and filed a written notice of the same, as prescribed by section 1240, as it read before the change in the method of taking appeals in such cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2722–2724; Dec. Dig. § 1081.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 1130*)—Appeal—Dismissed—Failure to File Brief.

Under Supreme Court Rule 5 (78 Pac. viii) failure of appellant in a criminal case to file a brief or points and authorities justifies dismissal of the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2965; Dec. Dig. § 1130.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. F. Lodge, Judge.

John Reese was convicted of manslaughter, and attempted to appeal. Record ordered to be stricken.

B. K. Collier and Beard & Beard, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of manslaughter under an information charging him with the crime of murder. The transcript does not show that an appeal has been taken from either the judgment or the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

A certificate of the clerk of the trial court on file in this court discloses "that there never has been, nor is there now, any written notice of appeal in said case of the People of the State of California vs. John Reese, Defendant, entered in the clerk's register in my office, and that no notice of appeal of any kind whatever is to be found in any of the records or papers in said case of the People of the State of California vs. John Reese, Defendant, in my office." Judgment in this case was pronounced on May 12, 1909, and as section 1239 of the Penal Code (St. 1909, p. 1086), which provides that an appeal from a judgment in a criminal case may be taken by the defendant "by announcing personally or through his attorney in open court at the time the judgment is rendered that he appeals from the same," did not go into effect until June 21, 1909, it is very plain that the defendant, in order to have succeeded in taking an appeal, should have served and filed a written notice of the same, as prescribed by section 1240 of the Penal Code, as that section read prior to the change in the method of taking appeals in criminal cases. Having failed to pursue the course prescribed for appealing from the judgment at the time judgment was rendered against him, this court is without jurisdiction to review the record filed here.

There is in fact no appeal here in any sense of the proposition, for there is not any evidence of even an attempt to take an appeal, while, on the contrary, the certificate of the clerk of the court below shows, as we have seen, that there is nothing in the records of the cause disclosing that any attempt was made to take any appeal whatsoever. The appellant has not filed a brief, or points and authorities, and this omission would alone be sufficient to justify the dismissal of an appeal, if one had been taken. Rule 5, Supreme Court (78 Pac. viii).

From the foregoing, it is clear that there is nothing left for this court to do but to order the transcript or record herein stricken from the files of this court, and such is the order.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 15, 1910. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1910.)

1. Deeds (§ 128*)—Estates and Interests Created—Remainders.

Civ. Code, § 779, provides that when a remainder is limited to the heirs of the body of a life tenant, the persons who, on termination of such estate, are heirs of the body of the owner for life, are entitled to take by virtue of the remainder so limited to them, and not as mere successors of such owner. Held, under such section, that the remainder in a deed to one for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, was an interest which the remaindermen took by purchase, and not by inheritance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

2. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates and Interests Created—Remainders.

In view of Civ. Code, § 695, declaring a future interest contingent, while the person or event on which it is limited to take effect remains uncertain, the interest of remaindermen in a deed to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, was a contingent interest, since it was future in character, and the person in whom and the time of the happening of the event on which it was limited to take effect were both uncertain at the time of its creation, and it could not become vested till death of the life tenant, since she could have no "heirs" till her decease.

3. Remainders (§ 4*)—Validity—Contingent Remainder.

In view of Civ. Code, § 697, declaring that a future interest is not void merely because of the improbability of the contingency on which it is limited to take effect, the interests of grandchildren of one given an estate for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, are not void because of improbability of the contingency on which they are limited to take effect.

4. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates and Interests Created—Remainders.

The interests of grandchildren of one given an estate for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, should not be regarded as mere possibilities, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, which by Civ. Code, § 700, are not to be deemed interests of any kind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

5. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates and Interests Created—Remainders.

Civ. Code, § 694, declaring a future estate to be vested when there is a person in being who would have a right, feasible or indefeasible, to immediate possession, on the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent interest, does not apply so as to vest the remainder at once in children of a grantee for life with remainder to the heirs of her body.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

6. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates and Interests Created — Remainders — "Alternative Contingent Remainder."

The remainder created by deed to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, is a future interest which will vest in grandchildren whose father or mother, the child of such tenant, fails to survive her, and is an alternative contingent remainder under Civ. Code, § 696, providing that two or more future interests may be created to take effect in the alternative, so that if the first in order fails to vest, the next in succession shall be substituted for it, and take effect accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

7. Deeds (§ 133*)—Estates and Interests Created—Remainders.

In case of a deed to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, the remainders to children and to children of deceased children, are not remainders expectant, the one to take effect after the other, but are contemporary.

8. Judgment (§ 681*) — Conclusiveness — Persons Represented by Parties.

That interests in remainder of grandchildren of a life tenant in a deed to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, were and are contingent instead of vested, does not preclude application to them of the principle of virtual representation in judicial proceedings affecting their interests, when they were unborn at the time of the adjudication, if the proceedings were such as to otherwise justify it.

9. Judgment (§ 677*) — Conclusiveness — Persons Represented by Parties.

The protection of one whose property is brought into court by representation, is to be found in his right to attack the decree on the ground of fraud or collusion in its procurement, and in the absence of such attack, the decree is final and conclusive as to the status of the property.

10. Judgment (§ 677*) — Conclusiveness — Persons Represented by Parties.

The principal of virtual representation as to persons not parties can be relied on in support of a judgment only as a matter of necessity, and never as a matter of convenience, and the form of the action is not controlling, though it is to be considered in connection with the circumstances of the case.

11. Judgment (§ 681*)—Conclusiveness — Persons Represented by Parties—Persons Unborn.

In a case where property is necessary for a public use, and the court can by decree protect interests of persons unborn, the necessity of relying on the principle of representation to acquire jurisdiction of such interests, is apparent.

12. Judgment (§ 681*) — Conclusiveness — Persons Represented by Party.

The rule as to the representation by a party of persons unborn in respect to their interests in property in litigation does not apply, unless the interests of representative and represented are so identical that the motive to protect and preserve may be assumed to be the same in each.

13. Municipal Corporations (§ 519*)—Lien for Street Improvement—Foreclosure—Title Affected.

The proceedings under the street improvement act of 1885 (St. 1885, c. 153) were intended to subject to the lien created by the law the entire title of the property affected thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 519.*]

14. Judgment (§ 677*) — Conclusiveness— Persons Represented by Parties—"Owner."

St. 1885, c. 153, § 16, relating to foreclosure of liens for street improvements, making the executor, administrator, or guardian of the "owner" and persons in possession under claim or exercising acts of ownership over the same, also "owners" for the purposes of the law, recognizes constructive or virtual representation as sufficient to give jurisdiction of the property in the equitable action to be brought against the "owner," pursuant to section 12, though the proceeding be held not to be one in rem because the res is not made defendant.

15. Liens (§ 22*)—Foreclosure—Decree.

It is not necessary that a suit in equity to foreclose a lien be strictly in rem to subject the entire property to payment of the debt, but all interests are constructively before the court where service is made in accordance with the statute, whether on the person or the thing, and a decree may be made effective as to all persons interested in the property to the value thereof in the same manner that the law makes a judgment against an estate, a judgment in personam against the administrator, which is enforceable only to the extent or value of the estate held by him.

16. Liens (§ 22*)—Foreclosure—Decree.

Decrees foreclosing liens effective as to all persons interested in the property to its extent or value as effectually binds the property as if it were attached or seized or made defendant in the action.

17. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 579*)—LIEN FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—FORECLOSURE SALE—TITLE AND RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

Acquiring in foreclosure of liens for street improvements jurisdiction of the interests of unborn grandchildren of a life tenant, afterwards entitled as remaindermen, did not effectually vest such interests in purchasers at the sales under the foreclosure decrees, because of their agreements with the life tenant and with each other and which became merged in and were succeeded by a declaration of trust by their successor in title for the benefit of the life tenant and the heirs of her body.

18. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 579*)—LIEN FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—FORECLOSURE—SALE—TITLE AND RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

A purchaser at a foreclosure sale, who agreed to hold only the legal title in trust with the equitable rights of remaindermen fully acknowledged, was bound to know he was dealing with the life tenant, who might be protecting her own holding at the expense of remaindermen, and yet whose efforts to protect the property and all agreements made by her having this effect must redound to the advantage of the remaindermen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 579.*]

19. JUDGMENT (§ 681*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS REPRESENTED BY PARTIES.

Where property held under a deed to one for life, remainder to the "heirs of her body," was conveyed by the life tenant and her daughter, their interests became hostile to that of other "heirs of her body" and the legal obligation to protect the title of their grantee rendered them incompetent to represent other contingent remaindermen, and their appearance no longer operated to give jurisdiction of the others in suits affecting title, and the doctrine of virtual representation could not apply to the vendee of the life tenant and her daughter in an action to quiet title against the other remaindermen.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 681.*]

20. JUDGMENT (§ 677*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS NOT PARTIES—ACTION TO QUIET TITLE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 738, providing for action by any person "against another" who claims an estate or interest in real property adverse to him, to determine such adverse claim, etc., does not authorize adjudication of the right, claim, interest, or title of any one not before the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 677.*]

21. JUDGMENT (§ 668*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS BOUND BY DECREE—PERSONAL OR CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.

Where a service of summons is made constructively the proceeding becomes, to a certain extent, one in rem, but the decree in such a case cannot adjudge the rights of any person not included in the service, and in case of either personal or constructive service, only the interests of persons served and of those whom they expressly or virtually represent are affected by the decree.

22. LIFE ESTATES (§ 18*)—DUTY TO PAY TAXES AND STREET ASSESSMENTS.

24. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 116*)—CHILDREN UNDER GUARDIANSHIP—AUTHORITY TO SUE THEREFOR.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

25. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 81*)—LEASE OF PROPERTY—APPLICATION THEREFOR—CONSENT OF COURT.

If authority or consent of any court were necessary to lease his wards' property, a guardian should apply to the probate court to which he owes his appointment, and he could not go into a court of equity to procure the authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 81.*]

26. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 41*)—MAINTENANCE AND SUPPORT OF WARD—INVESTMENT IN REAL ESTATE—CHANGE OF FORM.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1768, 1770, 1792, providing for orders of court in such cases, a guardian cannot without an order subject an interest in real estate of his ward to his maintenance or support, nor change the form of an investment therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 41.*]

27. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 45*)—CONTRACTS—AUTHORITY OF GUARDIAN TO CONTRACT.

A guardian cannot bind his ward's property by contract without an order of court, and his attempt to do so cannot result in giving to the party, with whom he contracted, right to a lien for labor done or materials furnished under the contract.

28. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 41*)—LIEN ON WARD'S PROPERTY—POSSESSION OF GUARDIAN.

A guardian, who could not by direct act dispose of the property of his ward, could not do so indirectly.

29. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 291*)—FORECLOSURE—JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—PRESUMPTIONS.

In a collateral attack on a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien, it must be presumed in support of the judgment that a finding of knowledge and consent as to the material furnished and labor performed was such knowledge and consent as would sustain the decree.

On the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on property conveying to one for life, with remainder to the heirs of her body, minor children of the life tenant could not, by their consent to the judgment against them, bind her grandchildren.

31. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 263*)—FORECLOSURE —NECESSARY PARTIES—OWNERS OF PROPERTY.

While a proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien is "in its essential nature" in rem, it is not a proceeding whereby property alone is made defendant in the action to foreclose, and the owner must be made a party if his property is to be charged with the claim for which the lien is given.

A finding on question of fact below is conclusive on appeal, where there is evidence to sustain it.

Condemnation proceedings by the County of Los Angeles against E. H. Winans and others. From judgments in favor of plaintiff and from orders denying a motion to set aside findings and for a new trial, Winans and other defendants separately appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 109 Pac. 650.

Waldo M. York (John M. York, of counsel), for appellant Winans. Waldo M. York and Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant Cole. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant Anderson. Bernard Potter, for appellant T. F. Joyce. Smith & Smith, for appellant S. A. Joyce. Valentine & Newby, for respondents Means and Hendricks. Davis & Rush, for respondents Wannop & Forbush. Mott & Dillon, for respondent Henry J. Pauly & Co. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy, for other respondents.

TAGGART, J. This is a proceeding in eminent domain brought by the county of Los Angeles to acquire lands upon which to construct a hall of records. Interlocutory decree and final order or judgment of condemnation were entered in favor of plaintiff. By the former the court, besides finding the value of the premises condemned, ascertained and adjudged the rights of the respective defendants in the property and apportioned among them the sum decreed to represent the value of the property condemned.

Separate appeals were taken by each of the appellants Winans, Cole, Anderson, and Joyce from the final judgment, from the interlocutory judgment, and from the orders denying their respective motions to vacate and set aside certain findings, and their motions for a new trial. No objection is made to the value of the property fixed by the court, but its apportionment among the various defendants is questioned.

On June 27, 1881, J. E. Hollenbeck, who was the owner in fee simple of all the lands affected by this proceeding, executed a deed conveying said lands to Mrs. Emma Means "for and during the term of her natural life and upon her death to the heirs of her body"; the habendum clause of said deed reading: "To have and to hold, all and singular, the said premises, together with the appurtenances, unto the said party of the second part, for life, remainder to the heirs of her body." J. E. Hollenbeck died in the year 1885, leaving, as the sole executrix of his will and residuary devisee of his estate, his wife, Elizabeth Hollenbeck, who, after the regular distribution to her of said premises, and on the 28th day of June, 1887, made a deed of all her interest in said lands to said Emma Means. At the time of the making and delivery of the former deed there were living three children, heirs of the body of said Emma Means, to wit: Elfie O. Means, Claude E. Means, and J. Worthington Means; two other children have since been born to her, as follows: Fairy A. Means (now Blee), about three years thereafter, and Juliet E. Means, born in the year 1890. The defendants Chester Kenneth Hendricks, Elizabeth Rosine Hendricks, James Bryan Hendricks, Merle Raymond Hendricks, Esther Georgia Hendricks, and Clarence Donald Hendricks are grandchildren of said Emma Means and children of the defendant Elfie O. Hendricks (formerly Means); and the defendants Claude Edward Means and Dorothy Matele Means are also grandchildren of said Emma Means, being children of said defendant Claude E. Means.

The defendants who are appellants here claim to have succeeded to the title to various portions of said premises together, including the entire property, by sales thereof made in various proceedings to foreclose street assessments, mechanics' liens, etc., had in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and by virtue of certain decrees quieting their titles so acquired, made by the same court. The portions claimed by the appellants are respectively designated as follows: That of Winans as lot 4; that of Cole as lot 5; and that of Joyce as lot 6, all of the "Court House Block" in the city of Los Angeles. Lot 4 comprises the east half of the condemned lands; lot 5 the southwest quarter, and lot 6 the northwest quarter thereof.

The trial court found, in effect, as to each of the said appellants Winans, Cole, and T. F. Joyce that he had acquired all the right, estate, and interest of Emma Means as life tenant and as successor to the estate of J. E. Hollenbeck, deceased, and of her children as remaindermen in and to the portion of the condemned property claimed by said appellant, but that he did not acquire the rights, interest, or estate of the grandchildren of Emma Means in said premises. The finding in this respect as to the Hendricks grandchildren and lot 4 being as follows: "The defendants Hendricks, children of defendant Elfie O. Hendricks, have an interest in said lot four (4) contingent upon the death of their mother, Elfie O. Hendricks, during the lifetime of the said Mrs. Emma Means, and also contingent upon their surviving said Mrs. Emma Means; and upon the happening of said contingencies they, or the survivor or survivors of them, will be the owners of an interest and estate in fee in said lot four by virtue of said deed of J. E. Hollenbeck as heirs of the body of said Mrs. Emma Means, the extent of which cannot now be determined." Similar findings were made as to the other lots, and also as to all the lots, in favor of the other grandchildren, Claude Edward Means and Dorothy Matele Means, children of Claude E. Means. The appellant Anderson's interest is found to be that of mortgagee of the interest of appellant Cole in lot 5.

The appellants attack these findings (other than the last) and the conclusions of law drawn therefrom and the directions of the court as to the disposition of the funds in accordance therewith, and contend: (1) That the remainder created by the deed of J. E. Hollenbeck vested at once in the children of Emma Means, under the provisions of section 694 of the Civil Code; (2) that whether such remainder be regarded as vested or contingent, service of process upon and the appearance in the various proceedings by Mrs. Means, her children with the guardian of the latter, by application of the principle of virtual representation, operated to bind the interests of the grandchildren yet unborn; and (3) that certain of the proceedings were in rem and jurisdiction of the interests of the grandchildren was obtained by following the statutory method of bringing the property into court.

The proceedings in which it is claimed jurisdiction of the interests of the unborn grandchildren was thus acquired so as to estop or bar them from now claiming any interest in the sum found to be the value of the property are as follows: In support of the titles of Cole and Winans (which may be considered together), the following judgment rolls: (a) The rolls in actions Nos. 14,109 and 10,983 to foreclose street-assessment liens against certain portions of said property, brought against Mrs. Emma R. Means, her husband, J. W. Means, the defendants named herein who are children of Emma R. Means, and W. E. Rogers, who is the lessee of Mrs. Means, and also of the children under a proceeding in equity (No. 8,616) by their mother and guardian to obtain consent to the execution of a lease in their name; (b) that in an action to quiet title, No. 18,501, by Abbott, the successor in title of the purchasers at the sales made pursuant to the decrees in the above-mentioned foreclosure proceedings, against Mrs. Means, her husband and children; (c) that in an action (No. 21,002) brought by Winans against Abbott, trustee, etc., Mrs. Means, husband and children, to foreclose a mortgage on the portions of the premises now claimed by Winans and Cole; (d) that in an action to quiet title to the same premises, No. 24,146, by Gosch, the successor in title to the purchaser (McCollum) at the commissioner's sale made in execution of the decree in action No. 21,002, against four of the Means children, J. Worthington Means, Claude E. Means, Fairy A. Means, and Juliet E. Means, minors; (e) and that in an action by the same plaintiff to quiet title (No. 28,196) against Mrs. Means, her husband and five children. Incidental to and explanatory of these proceedings, it is also necessary to consider the effect of the proceeding No. 8,616 above referred to, and of probate proceeding No. 5,874; of the lease of Mrs. Means and children to W. E. Rogers, and the deeds, mortgages, and other instruments through which the parties to these respective actions and proceedings acquired the rights upon which such actions were based. These are as follows: Sheriff's deed in No. 14,109 to A. J. Mead, and deed of latter to R. W. Abbott; sheriff's deed in No. 10,983 to Stella M. Johnson; her deed to Charles A. Cole and the deed of the latter to R. W. Abbott; a declaration of trust by R. W. Abbott for the benefit of Emma Means and the heirs of her body; mortgage of Abbott, trustee, to Winans; a deed by Mrs. Means to Charles A. Cole; deed by Mrs. Means and her daughter Elfie O. to M. McCollum; deed by McCollum et ux., to C. H. Gosch, and the deed of Emma R. Means, Elfie O. Means, and J. W. Means to C. H. Gosch.

In support of the contention of appellants Joyce (T. F. and S. A.) that the interests of the grandchildren in lot 6 were acquired by them, the following additional proceedings and matters are relied upon: The judgment rolls in: (f) a consolidated action to foreclose certain mechanics' liens on the building constructed by Rogers, lessee, under the lease above mentioned (No. 12,444) against Rogers, Mrs. Means, her husband and children; and (g) in an action to quiet title, No. 19,205, brought by Horace Hiller, who purchased the property at the sale under the decree foreclosing the mechanics' liens, against Mrs. Means, her husband individually and as guardian of the children, the five children and others whose names are not material here.

Under the Code of this state the remainder granted to the heirs of the body of Emma Means by the deed of J. E. Hollenbeck was an interest which the remaindermen took by purchase, and not by inheritance. Civ. Code, § 779. It was a contingent interest, since it was future in character, and the person in whom, and the time of, the happening of the event upon which it was limited to take effect, were both uncertain at the time of its creation. These uncertainties both continued to exist until after the various proceedings were had upon which appellants base their respective titles. Section 695. It did not and could not become vested until the death of the life tenant, since she could have no "heirs" until her decease. In the interval all of her children might die, leaving the entire estate to the second generation, or the grandchildren. The interests of the latter are not void because of the improbability of the contingency on which they are limited to take effect. Section 697. Neither can their interests be regarded as mere possibilities, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent (section 700), as they do not depend upon the law of succession to determine whether or not they will take effect, and they cannot be defeated by the testamentary or other act of the ancestor. It is also apparent that section 694 has no application here. That section is, in effect, the enactment into a statute of the rule laid down in Fearne on Contingent Remainders and Executory Devises: "The present capacity of taking effect in possession, if the possession were to become vacant, and not the certainty that the possession will become vacant before the estate limited in remainder determines, universally distinguishes a vested remainder from one that is contingent." Butler's (6th Ed.) p. 216. This declaration should be read in connection with the language of Fearne which immediately follows it, to wit: "In short, upon a careful attention to this subject we shall find, that wherever the preceding estate is limited, so as to determine on an event which must certainly happen; and the remainder is so limited to a person in esse, and ascertained, that the preceding estate may, by any means, determine before the expiration of the estate limited in remainder, such remainder is vested. On the contrary, wherever the preceding estate is limited so as to determine only on an event which is uncertain, and may never happen, or wherever the remainder is limited to a person not in esse or not ascertained, or wherever it is limited so as to require the concurrence of some dubious uncertain event, independent of the determination of the preceding estate and duration of the estate limited in remainder, to give it a capacity of taking effect, then the remainder is contingent." Page 217.

In Williamson v. Williamson, 57 Ky. 329, 368, it was said of the rule distinguishing a contingent from a vested remainder, first above quoted from Fearne: "This principle, however general and universal it may be, has no application in a case like this, where the event which renders the possession vacant also resolves the contingency upon which the limitation depends, and makes that certain which was before uncertain. The possession becomes vacant by the death of the ancestor, and by the same event the persons who properly sustain the character of 'heirs' are ascertained and rendered certain. This rule, therefore, cannot operate as a test in a case like this, where the estate in remainder is given to the heirs of the same person who is devisee for life."

The remainder which we are considering is a future interest which will vest in those grandchildren of Mrs. Means whose father or mother, child of Mrs. Means, fails to survive the grandmother, and is an alternative, contingent remainder under section 696 of the Civil Code. In some of its characteristics it resembles the "contingent remainder, or alternative remainder in fee, with a double aspect," of the common law. Such estates usually arose where a remainder was limited to the issue of some person named, and, upon failure of such issue before the death of the life tenant, to some other person in the alternative. Of the estates so created it is said they are both contingent fees limited merely as substitutes or alternatives one for the other, and not to interfere, but so that only one shall take effect; for instance, the fee of the grandchild in the case at bar being substituted in place of the fee of its father or mother if the latter should fail of effect by the grandmother surviving such father or mother. Pingrey on Real Property, § 1008. The one remainder is a substitute for, and not subsequent to, the other. Neither is, by its terms, to wait until the other shall have once taken effect and afterwards been determined. Washburn on Real Property (6th Ed.) § 1575; Tiedeman on Real Property, § 415; Fearne on Contingent Remainders, 373; Waddell v. Rattew, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 234. They are not remainders expectant, the one to take effect after the other, but are contemporary. Luddington v. Kime, 1 Ld. Raym. 203; 91 English Reports, King's Bench (Reprint) p. 1035. The taking by the unborn remainderman is not a contingency dependent upon a contingency, but the same contingency which may happen several ways. Plunket v. Holmes, 83 English Reports, p. 17.

The conclusion that the interests in remainder of the defendant grandchildren were and are contingent instead of vested does not preclude the application to them of the principle of virtual representation, if the proceedings in which such representation was exercised were such as to otherwise justify it. The rule as to virtual representation is stated broadly by the Supreme Court of the United States in Miller v. Texas & Pacific R. Co., 132 U. S. 672, 10 Sup. Ct. 209 (33 L. Ed. 487), by recognizing the holding of Lord Redesdale in Giffard v. Hort, 1 Schoale & Lef. 386, as follows: "Where all the parties are brought before the court that can be brought before it, and the court acts on the property according to the rights that appear, without fraud, its decision must of necessity be final and conclusive. It has been repeatedly determined that if there be tenant for life, remainder to his first son in tail, remainder over, and he is brought before the court before he has issue, the contingent remaindermen are barred. Courts of equity have determined on grounds of high expediency that it is sufficient to bring before the court the first tenant in tail in being, and if there be no tenant in tail in being, the first person entitled to the inheritance, and if no such person, then the tenant for life." So, also, the New York court in Kent v. Church of St. Michael, 136 N. Y. 10, 32 N. E. 704, 18 L. R. A. 331, 32 Am. St. Rep. 693, uses the following language: "Where an estate is vested in persons living, subject only to the contingency that persons may be born who will have an interest therein, the living owners of the estate for all purposes of any litigation in reference thereto, and affecting the jurisdiction of the courts to deal with the same, represent the whole estate, and stand, not only for themselves, but also for the persons unborn. This is a rule of convenience, and almost of necessity. The rights of persons unborn are sufficiently cared for if, when the estate shall be sold under a regular and valid judgment, its proceeds take its place and are secured in some way for such persons." The rule is declared in Story's Equity Pleadings, § 144, and its limitations considered in the sections following. See, also, Finch v. Finch, 2 Ves. Sr. 491, 28 Eng. Rep. p. 316; Reynoldson v. Perkins, Amb. 564, 27 Eng. Rep. p. 362; Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. Jr. 321, 33 Eng. Rep. p. 1007; Harrison v. Wallton, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. 372, 41 L. R. A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830; Hale v. Hale, 146 Ill. 227, 33 N. E. 858, 867, 20 L. R. A. 247; McCampbell v. Mason, 151 Ill. 500, 38 N. E. 675; Miller v. Foster, 76 Tex. 479, 13 S. W. 531; Hermann v. Parsons, 117 Ky. 239, 78 S. W. 125; Dunham v. Doremus, 55 N. J. Eq. 511, 37 Atl. 62; Gavin v. Curtin, 171 Ill. 640, 49 N. E. 523, 40 L. R. A. 776; Loring v. Hildreth, 170 Mass. 328, 49 N. E. 652, 40 L. R. A. 127, 64 Am. St. Rep. 301.

The rule and its reason are declared in Sweet v. Parker, 22 N. J. Eq. 455, as follows: "Many exceptions exist to the general rule that in equity all must be parties who have an interest in the object of the suit. The reason or principle of such exceptions is stated as follows in Calvert on Parties, § 2, p. 20: 'If they are required to be parties merely as the owners and protectors of a certain interest, then the proceedings may take place with an equal prospect of justice if that interest receives an effective protection from others. It is the interest which the court is considering, and the owner merely as the guardian of that interest; if, then, some other persons are present, who, with reference to that interest, are equally certain to bring forward the entire merits of the question, the object is satisfied for which the presence of the actual owner would be so required, and the court may, without putting any right in jeopardy, take its usual course and make a complete decree.'" The rule is made applicable to representation of persons living, as well as those unborn, as in the case of an association whose members are numerous. Cockburn v. Thompson, 16 Ves. Jr. 321, p. 326; 33 Full Reprint, Eng. Rep., p. 1007. This principle is carried into our statutes by the provisions of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where the joint property of all may be bound by serving the summons upon one or more of a larger number of associates. Other statutory proceedings based thereon might be named. The doctrine is said by some of the cases to be applied only where the law regards the interest of the representative so identical with that of the person represented that motives of self-interest will induce the person acting as the representative to defend the property as his own. Other cases following the suggestion in Calvert on Parties urge in support of the rule the motives of affection where the representative of the unborn child is its parent; all, however, holding that all persons in being capable of appearing who are interested must be brought into court. The protection of a person whose property is brought into court by such representation is to be found in his right to attack the decree on the ground of fraud or collusion in its procurement. In the absence of such attack, the decree is final and conclusive as to the status of the property. Baylor v. Dejarnette, 13 Grat. (Va.) 152; Faulkner v. Davis, 18 Grat. (Va.) 651, 690, 98 Am. Dec. 698. These two cases have been more recently approved in the case of Harrison v. Wallton, 95 Va. 721, 30 S. E. 372, 41 L. R. A. 703, 64 Am. St. Rep. 830. See, also, Ruggles v. Tyson, 104 Wis. 500, 79 N. W. 766, 81 N. W. 367, 48 L. R. A. 809; Mayall v. Mayall, 63 Minn. 511, 65 N. W. 942; Mathews v. Lightner, 85 Minn. 333, 88 N. W. 992, 89 Am. St. Rep. 558; Gray v. Smith (C. C.) 76 Fed. 525, 532; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 321, 10 Sup. Ct. 557, 33 L. Ed. 918.

The application of the principle as here contended for is not a common one, and no decision by a court of this state so applying it has been called to our attention. The convenient use, which it served in extricating involved real estate titles at common law and in common-law jurisdiction, does not appeal with equal force to conditions existing under the Code, although it is true, as said by some of the cases, that it is in accord with the trend of modern law toward making real property as readily transferable as is consistent with fair dealing and protection against fraud. That it tends to furnish some certain and convenient method of determining all unsettled questions respecting such titles, and that the well-being of every community requires the latter. Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 321, 10 Sup. Ct. 557, 33 L. Ed. 918, is not alone sufficient to justify its indiscriminate adoption. So well have these matters been covered by statute that its application has become not only unusual but generally unnecessary.

The better reasoned of the later cases hold that it can be relied upon in support of a judgment only as a matter of necessity, and never merely as a matter of convenience. The form of the action is not controlling, but is, of course, to be considered in connection with the circumstances of the case. The necessity for relying upon some such principle to acquire jurisdiction of the interest in real property of persons unborn is apparent, "where the estate is sold under a regular and valid judgment, and the proceeds of sale take its place and are secured in some way for such persons" (Kent v. Church, supra), since this includes the caring for and preserving of the rights of the persons so represented; it is also readily apparent where the purpose of the suit in which such persons are said to be so represented is for the administration of a trust estate by a court of equity so as to protect the interests of the unborn, as well as those who are in being, against the danger of destruction by tax and other liens which affect the entire title (Ruggles v. Tyson, supra); or in a case such as the one at bar where the property is necessary for a public use and the court can by decree protect the interests of the party said to be so represented. So where a trust is created without a power of sale and it is necessary for the preservation of the trust estate that it be sold, this principle is properly invoked to acquire jurisdiction of the persons not in being (Mayall v. Mayall, supra). It is more difficult, however, to follow the reasoning underlying these decisions into those cases in which it has been held that where a mortgagor after making the mortgage conveys the mortgaged property upon such conditions as to create an interest therein in unborn persons, a foreclosure suit brought by the mortgagee against all interested persons living, or all the parties that could be brought before the court, enables a court of equity to enter a decree barring the equity of redemption of the persons not in esse. Sweet v. Parker, supra; Nodine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 544, 34 Am. Dec. 363. In these cases, however, the interest of the unborn person, who is so represented, is such only as his grantor had in the property at the time the deed was made, that is, whatever would be left after the debt secured by the mortgage had been paid. So, also, in cases in which the judgment has been adverse, thus absorbing the entire estate of both the living and those not in esse, it is not easy, at first sight, to see how it can be said that anything is being done to preserve or protect the interest of the unborn. In such cases, as in those first mentioned, the living remainderman is called upon to protect such an estate as he and the other party has, and if the result of the decree of the court be to declare there is no estate, or that such as there is should be applied to the payment of the liens which exist against it, the representative has done all that the represented could have done, had he been present. If the sole purpose of the appearance of a living remainderman in an action were to secure some advantage to himself, or merely to serve the convenience of the party whose title was being quieted against the unborn remaindermen, virtual representation could not be presumed to exist, and any judgment obtained by virtue of such pretended representation could be set aside on the ground of fraud or collusion when the unborn remainderman became capable of suing in his own right. Where, however, he has the same interests to preserve in the property that the unborn person would have if he were present, and his acts in connnection therewith are such that, from the advantage to the person not in esse, it can be assumed the latter will adopt them, the acts of the living remainderman in protecting the property against attack may be said to come within the reason of the rule. The interests of representative and represented must, however, be so identical that the motive and inducement to protect and preserve may be assumed to be the same in each.

Considering the effect of this doctrine upon the various judgment rolls and documents hereinabove mentioned, we are of opinion that the proceedings under the street improvement act of 1885 (St. 1885, c. 153), as the statute read at the time when the foreclosures in actions Nos. 10,983 and 14,109 were decreed, were intended to subject to the lien created by the law the entire title of the property affected thereby. As was said in Gillis v. Cleveland, 87 Cal. 217, 25 Pac. 352: "Thus it appears that the expense of the improvement is a charge upon the property benefited, and not a charge against the owner personally. In furtherance of this end, the identity of the lot assessed, and not the person who may be the owner, is made the essential requirement of the statute; the first must be specifically described, while the latter may be designated as 'unknown,' as in the present case. Nowhere in the statute does any intention appear to charge the owner personally." But section 12 of the act also provides that the contractor may sue "the owner of the land, lots or portions of lots"; that the suit must be brought in the superior court within whose jurisdiction the work was done, service in such actions to be had in such manner as is prescribed in the codes and laws of this state; and that "the court in which said suit shall be commenced shall have power to adjudge and decree a lien against the premises assessed, and to order such premises to be sold on execution, as in other cases of the sale of real estate by the process of said courts." St. 1889, p. 168. It was also said in Page v. Chase, 145 Cal. 578, page 583, 79 Pac. 278, page 279: "In this state the Legislature has authorized its enforcement by means of a suit in equity against the 'owner' of the land; and in section 16 of the street improvement act (St. 1885, p. 159), the 'owner' is defined to be, for the purposes of that act, 'the person owning the fee, or in whom appears the legal title to the land by deeds duly recorded in the county recorder's office of the county.' There is no provision that the land shall be made the defendant in such action, or that service of process shall be made upon it. * * * It would not be contended that (because the assessment was made to an unknown owner) the contractor could select any person he might choose as the defendant in his action and bind the land by the judgment therein, as against its actual owner, as defined in section 16." The quotation from section 16 by the court in this opinion was no doubt sufficient for the purposes of that case, but it omits a portion of the definition important here, that is, the provision which makes the executor administrator or guardian of the owner," and persons in possession under claim, or exercising acts of ownership over the same also "owners" for the purpose of the law. The statute itself thus recognizes a constructive or virtual representation as sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the property in the equitable action to foreclose the lien provided for, even though the proceeding be held not to be one in rem, for the reason that the res is not made a defendant.

If the view expressed in Page v. Chase, supra, that a judgment for the sale of the property in such a proceeding will not bind the entire world, or affect the interests in the property of any owner not made a party defendant to the action, be accepted, this does not prevent the application of the rule of virtual representation. If the proceeding were strictly in rem, there would be no necessity to invoke any principle of representation except the one that the property in court represents all its owners and claimants. It is not necessary that a suit in equity be strictly in rem to subject the entire property to the payment of the debt. All interests in the property are constructively or virtually before the court when the service is made in accordance with the statute, whether this be upon the person or the thing. A decree in equity may be made effective as to all persons interested in the property to the value thereof in the same manner that the law makes a judgment against an estate a judgment in personam against the administrator, which is enforceable only to the extent or value of the estate held by him. Decrees in equity are frequently made effective in this way and the property is as effectually bound as if it were attached or seized or made the defendant in the action. Richards v. Blaisdell, 106 Pac. 732; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, page 61, 12 L. Ed. 337; Heidritter v. Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, 5 Sup. Ct. 135, 28 L. Ed. 729.

The acquiring of jurisdiction of the interests of the grandchildren by these proceedings did not effectually vest these interests in the purchasers at the sales made under the respective decrees, because of the respective agreements made by them with Mrs. Means and with each other, and which became merged in and were succeeded by the declaration of trust by R. W. Abbott for the benefit of Emma R. Means and the heirs of her body. None of the subsequent proceedings or steps taken released the successors in title of Abbott from the trust obligation to hold for the benefit of the unborn remaindermen. The action to quiet title by Abbott (No. 18,501) resulted in the making of the declaration of trust by him for the benefit of Mrs. Means and "the heirs of her body." The mortgage of Abbott to Winans was executed by the former under and by virtue of a contract with Mrs. Means and was to secure obligations primarily imposed upon her as life tenant of the property. The most favorable view for appellants that can be taken of this transaction is that the amount named in the mortgage was the sum found necessary to prevent the sale of the entire property under the street foreclosure proceedings, and, the transaction being for the preservation of their estate, the interests of the unborn remaindermen were bound by the decree in the action (No. 21,002) to foreclose the mortgage. While of opinion that the case before us is to be distinguished from those cited by appellants in this connection (Sweet v. Parker, 22 N. J. Eq. 455; Nodine v. Greenfield, 7 Paige [N. Y.] 544, 34 Am. Dec. 363, and English cases), we regard this as unnecessary, because, as in the case of the street assessments, the purchaser at the sale (M. McCollum) entered into an agreement whereby he became only the legal holder of the title with the equitable rights of the remaindermen in the property fully acknowledged. He, like the previous purchasers of the property, was bound to know that he was dealing with the life tenant, who might be protecting her own holding at the expense of the remaindermen, and yet whose efforts to protect the property, and all agreements made by her having this effect, must redound to the advantage of the remaindermen.

In the first action to quiet title by Gosch (No. 24,146) Mrs. Means and her daughter, Elfie O. Means, were not made parties defendant, they having prior to that time conveyed the property to McCollum by a grant deed, and Gosch having succeeded to McCollum's interests therein. So, also, as above stated, subsequent to the conveyance by McCollum to Gosch and prior to the commencement of the second action to quiet title (No. 28,196) Mrs. Means, her husband, and her daughter made a quitclaim deed of said premises to Gosch. By the making of the grant deed the interests of Mrs. Means and her daughter Elfie became hostile to that of the other "heirs of her body." Their legal obligation to protect the title of their grantee rendered them incompetent to represent the others in the manner in which they had theretofore done. It could no longer be said that there was an identity of interest and motive between them and the other contingent remaindermen. Their appearance no longer operated to give jurisdiction of the others to the court. The plaintiff had succeeded to the interests of Mrs. Means and her daughter in the property, and being himself hostile he could not appear for the contingent remaindermen, although he had acquired the interests of one of them. The first action being by the vendee of the life tenant for the purpose of destroying the remainder, and the second by the successor of the life tenant and one of the contingent remaindermen for the same purpose, the doctrine of virtual representation could not be applied. It is apparent, then, that in neither of these actions was jurisdiction of the grandchildren acquired upon this theory. The special reasons stated distinguish this case from those cited, bearing upon the application of the doctrine to actions to quiet title.

Without applying the principle of virtual representation, we know of no theory upon which the court can be said to have acquired jurisdiction of the interests of the grandchildren, who were not parties thereto, in these actions to quiet title. The proceeding authorized by section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be broader in some respects than the suit in equity called by the same name, but it does not authorize the adjudication of the right, claim, interest, or title of any one not before the court. In terms it says: "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an estate or interest in real property, adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim," etc. Where the service of summons is made constructively under the Code, the proceeding becomes to a certain extent one in rem, but the decree entered in such a case cannot adjudge the rights of any person not included in the constructive service, any more than it can do so where the persons named in the summons have been personally served within the state. In case of either personal or constructive service, only the interests of the persons served and of those whom they expressly or virtually represent are affected by the decree. The only proceeding purely in rem given by the statutes of this state for the determination of the rights in real property of persons whose interests are unknown, to which our attention has been called, is that provided by sections 749, 750, and 751 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

An examination of proceeding No. 8,616, relied upon by appellant Joyce, is important on this appeal only for the purpose of determining whether the interests of the unborn contingent remaindermen were so connected with the lease of Rogers as to be affected by the judgment foreclosing the mechanic's lien in suit No. 12,444. The duty of paying the taxes and street assessments (actions Nos. 10,983 and 14,109 above), by reason of the nonpayment of which the property was about to be lost, rested primarily upon the life tenant, Mrs. Means. She was entitled to the possession and might lease the property at her pleasure for any term, subject only to the limitations of her own estate, but there were no grounds upon which she could ask a court of equity to preserve her estate at the expense of that of the remaindermen. So far as she was concerned, this was the only purpose served by proceeding No. 8,616. As the application of Mrs. Emma Means, life tenant, it failed to set forth any cause for relief, and in her capacity of mother Mrs. Means was not authorized to sue, as her husband, J. W. Means, was the regularly appointed general guardian of the children who were living. The husband was the appointee of the probate court (No. 5,874), and if the authority or consent of any court were necessary in order that he might make a lease of his wards' property, application should have been made to the court to which he owed his appointment. He could not go into a court of equity and procure this authority. No power is given to the guardian to subject an interest in the real estate of his ward to the maintenance or support of the latter (sections 1768, 1770, Code Civ. Proc.), or to change the form of such an investment (section 1792) without an order of court. There was no special procedure for this purpose provided by the Code at the time application No. 8,616 was made to the superior court; nevertheless, we are of opinion that proceeding No. 8,616 did not affect the interests of the minors because not addressed to the probate side of the court in No. 5,874. That the guardian cannot bind the property of his ward by a contract without an order of court is well settled in this state. Guy v. Dü Uprey, 16 Cal. 195, 76 Am. Dec. 518; Morse v. Hinckley, 124 Cal. 154, 56 Pac. 896. As he cannot make such a contract, so an attempt on his part to do this cannot result in giving to the party with whom he has contracted the right to a lien for labor done or materials furnished under the contract. Fish v. McCarthy, 96 Cal. 484, 31 Pac. 529, 31 Am. St. Rep. 237; San Francisco Paving Co. v. Fairfield, 134 Cal. 220, 224, 66 Pac. 255. If the guardian could not by his direct act impose a lien upon the interests of his ward, it could not be done indirectly by the lessee of the life tenant. If the question whether the minor children of Mrs. Means were required to give the notice provided by section 1192, or have the lien foreclosed in action No. 12,444 imposed upon their interests in the property had to be here decided, we should be inclined to accept the view that they were not. James on Mechanics' Liens, § 105, p. 114. The attack upon the sufficiency of the judgment in that action, however, is a collateral one, and it appears from the findings therein that the court found that these minors were the owners of the property and "that all of the material furnished and labor performed by any or all of the plaintiffs was furnished and performed with the knowledge and consent of the owners of the real estate described in the complaints." The guardianship of the father is also found, and in support of the judgment we are bound to presume this finding of knowledge and consent meant such consent as would sustain the decree. The complaint sufficiently alleges such ownership and consent, and the authority of the guardian to consent to sustain the findings mentioned. Collins v. O'Laverty, 136 Cal. 31, 68 Pac. 327.

The language of the judgment, however, does not comprehend by name or description among those whose claims to the property and equity of redemption are barred and foreclosed any of the grandchildren contingent remaindermen. Neither do we think, under the principle of virtual representation hereinabove applied in the proceedings to foreclose street assessment liens, they were brought within the jurisdiction of the court in proceeding No. 12,444. It does not appear upon the face of the judgment roll in that action that the interests of the persons appearing and contesting the lien were identical with that of the unborn remaindermen. Indeed, it appears from the findings in the case, including those last above considered, that the liens foreclosed were created by the act of the lessee of the life tenant under a contract with her, and that her interest alone was chargeable. The minors who were before the court were not held bound because they were owners who failed to give the notice under section 1192, but because of their consent to the judgment against them. They could not bind the grandchildren in this way. Accepting the rule laid down in the decision of Justice Matthews of the United States Supreme Court in Heidritter v. Oil Cloth Co., 112 U. S. 294, page 301, 5 Sup. Ct. 135, 138 (28 L. Ed. 729) that the proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien is "in its essential nature" in rem, we find nothing therein to warrant us in holding that any transfer of the title of the unborn remaindermen was made to Hiller by virtue of the deed to him as purchaser at the sale made in execution of the judgment. This was not a proceeding whereby the property alone is made defendant in the action and the world foreclosed. The owner must be made a party to such an action if his property is to be made chargeable with the claim for which the lien is given.

When action No. 19,205 to quiet title was brought by Hiller against Mrs. Means, her husband, and children, and others, he had already acquired the interests of Mrs. Means and her children in the property the title of which he sought to quiet, and these persons could not be brought into court solely to represent the interests of the grandchildren. The issue raised by the answer of the children who appeared in the action related to a charge of fraud upon the part of their father and mother in consenting to the former judgment (No. 12,444) on their behalf, but upon this issue the court found against them. This was not an issue affecting the interests of the grandchildren, and it cannot be said that the living remaindermen represented the interests of the unborn in presenting the matter.

The claim of title of S. A. Joyce to lot 6, the same property claimed by T. F. Joyce, is based upon a sale pursuant to the foreclosure of a street sewer assessment and a deed to her from the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles, dated July 1, 1908. This sale the court found to be a collusive effort of T. F. Joyce to cure the defect in his title by refusing to meet his obligations as successor of the life tenant and as a co-remainderman, and to thus initiate an adverse holding in the lot by causing the same to be bought in by his wife S. A. Joyce. The question here was one of fact, and we are of opinion that there is evidence to sustain the finding of the court.

We do not think it necessary to consider the question of which appeal properly presents the matter to the court. Suffice it that the cause is before us on its merits in either view.

The findings of the court holding that the contingent interests of the grandchildren of Mrs. Means acquired by the Hollenbeck deed did not pass to appellants find support in the evidence, and the disposition of the proceeds of the judgment made in accordance therewith properly applies the law, and therefore the judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

13 Cal. App. 257

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. WINANS et al.

(Civ. 697.)

1. DEEDS (§ 132*)—ESTATES AND INTERESTS CREATED—REMAINDERS—"MERE POSSIBILITY."

The rights of living remaindermen, children of the life tenant, in a deed to one for life with remainder to the "heirs of her body," are not "mere possibilities" within Civ. Code, § 700, declaring that a mere possibility, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, is not an interest of any kind, but they are estates in fee to vest in the future in such of them as survive their mother.

2. DEEDS (§ 123*)—ESTATES AND INTERESTS CREATED — REMAINDERS — "HEIRS OF HER BODY."

Civ. Code, § 779, provides that when a remainder is limited to the heirs of the body of a person to whom a life estate in the same property is given, the persons, who on termination thereof, are heirs of the body of the life tenant will take as remaindermen, and not as mere successors of such owner. Held, under this section, that the words "heirs of her body," in a deed to one for life, with remainder to the "heirs of her body," will be considered as words of description and identity, and not of capacity.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 558*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—FORECLOSURE OF LIENS—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

Proceedings to foreclose street assessment liens, while not in rem in the sense that the res is brought into court as a defendant, are substantially such, since, by the "suit in equity" against persons whom the statute designates the "owners," the entire property becomes subject to sale to pay such liens.

4. JUDGMENT (§ 747*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The findings and judgment in a suit to quiet title adverse to defendants therein are conclusive as to them, in a collateral action as to their rights, title, or interests in the property.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 60*)—ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—CLAIM TO TRUST PROPERTY.

Where a trust arises by operation of the law, the beneficiaries may proceed to enforce their claim to the trust property as soon as the title vests in the involuntary or constructive trustee, so that the statute begins to run against them from that date.

6. TRUSTS (§ 249*)—RIGHT TO SUE—TRUST RELATION AS DEFENSE.

The holder of the legal title is not precluded from suing defendants because of an alleged trust relation to them; the equitable character of defendants' claim not preventing the entry of a valid decree declaring the legal and equitable interests of the respective parties in the premises.

7. REMAINDERS (§ 17*)—RIGHT TO SUE REMAINDERMEN.

Suit may be maintained by the holder of the legal title against contingent remaindermen, whose remainder is a mere expectancy.

8. JUDGMENT (§ 747*)—EFFECT AS ESTOPPEL.

A judgment in a suit to quiet title, finding against defendants on issues raised by their answer setting up all the equities claimed by them, estops them from claiming an award on condemnation of the property, title to which was in issue.

9. TRIAL (§ 398*)—INCONSISTENCY OF FINDINGS—"VESTED."

The use of the word "vested" in a finding that a party was the owner of an estate in remainder in a lot that was vested in children of a life tenant by virtue of a certain deed which was to one for life, remainder to the heirs of her body, and "will upon the death of said E. M. (the life tenant) take the interest and estate in fee in said lot 4 that would, under said deed * * * go to those of the above-named children of Mrs. E. M. who shall survive her," was not a holding that the interest in remainder of such children was a vested one, so as to be inconsistent with the view that the remainder is contingent, implied from the language of another finding; the context making it apparent that the words "vested in" are not used in the comparative sense as distinguishing a vested from a contingent estate, but rather as the equivalent of "acquired by."

Condemnation proceedings by the County of Los Angeles against E. H. Winans and others. From a judgment directing payment of the amount awarded, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants Mrs. Emma Means and others appeal. Affirmed.

Valentine & Newby, for appellants Means, Hendricks, and Blee. J. D. Fredericks, Dist. Atty., and Hartley Shaw, Chief Deputy, for plaintiff and respondent. Davis & Rush, for respondents Wannop & Forbush. Mott & Dillon, for respondents Henry J. Pauly and Henry J. Pauly & Co. Smith & Smith, for respondent S. A. Joyce. Bernard Potter, for respondent T. F. Joyce. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent Margaret M. B. Anderson. Waldo M. York and Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent Charles A. Cole. Waldo M. York (J. M. York, of counsel), for respondent E. H. Winans.

TAGGART, J. This is an appeal by the defendants Emma R. Means and her five children from the judgment of the superior court directing the payment to the defendants Winans, Cole, and Joyce of the amounts awarded the latter as successors in title to the interests of said appellants in the condemned property mentioned in the companion appeal to this (No. 693, 109 Pac. 640), the opinion in which is filed herewith, and which opinion is referred to for a statement of the facts of the case. An appeal is also taken from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

It is urged in support of these appeals that the series of transactions, proceedings, and actions enumerated in the opinion in No. 693 failed to transfer the interests of Mrs. Means and her five children to the other defendants above named, or to any of them. The insufficiency of the evidence to justify the various findings upon which the portions of the decree so adjudicating is rested is specified as error, in support of the motion for a new trial. It is also contended that neither the conclusions of law nor the interlocutory decree is sustained by the findings, that the findings are contradictory, and that the court erred in admitting in evidence the several judgment rolls and documents upon which the claims of defendants Winans, Cole, and Joyce are based.

Appellants sustain their main contention on this appeal upon the view that the children of Mrs. Means take the interests acquired by them through the Hollenbeck deed as purchasers (section 779, Civ. Code); but when the right of transfer of their interests is presented section 700 of the same Code is invoked and various cases cited in which the expectancy of an "heir apparent" is considered. These two positions are inconsistent. The rights of the remaindermen under the Hollenbeck deed, who are living, and are children of Mrs. Emma Means, are not mere possibilities, such as are covered by the provisions of section 700, but estates in fee to vest in the future in such of them as survive their mother. Future interests pass by succession, will, and transfer in the same manner as present interests (section 699), and they are not rendered void merely because of the improbability of the contingency upon which they are limited to take effect. Section 697. To construe the words "heirs of her body" to mean "in the capacity of heirs" would be to restore the rule in Shelley's Case and repeal by construction the express provisions of section 779. For all purposes connected with the transactions herein reviewed, these words will be considered as words of description and identity, and not of capacity, such being the effect of the section last named (779).

As said in the opinion in No. 693, the proceedings to foreclose the street assessment liens (Nos. 14,109 and 10,983), while not in rem in the sense that the res is brought into court as a defendant, are, nevertheless, substantially such, since by the "suit in equity" against the persons whom the statute designates the "owners," the entire property becomes subject to sale to pay such liens. Page v. Chase, 145 Cal. 582, 79 Pac. 278. If it be assumed, however, that jurisdiction of appellants was acquired by the court in these cases, so that the decree was effective, the agreements made with the purchasers at the respective sales by Mrs. Means served to continue their equitable interests in the premises which was admitted in the Abbott declaration of trust in their behalf. Again, if we regard the foreclosure of the Abbott mortgage as not barring the equity of redemption of appellants, and the agreement of Mrs. Means with McCollum, although made in her own name, as having been made for the benefit of her children, the actions to quiet title, particularly by No. 28,196, were sufficient to conclude all the appellants.

The claim now made by Mrs. Means and her daughter Elfie O. Hendricks (then Means), that their deeds to McCollum and Gosch, respectively, were intended as mortgages, was submitted to the court as an issue by the pleadings in action No. 28,196, and they are concluded by the finding of the court made thereon against them. So, also, upon collateral attack the finding made by the court in the same action that "neither of these defendants (Emma R. Means, J. W. Means, her husband, and Elfie O. Means, Claude E. Means, J. Worthington Means, Fairy A. Means, and Juliet E. Means) have now any right, title, or interest in or to any of the property described in the plaintiff's complaint," is conclusive against all the appellants. Appellants' view that the attitude of plaintiff in the action (Gosch) is not adverse to appellants cannot be sustained. The trust relation between the latter and Gosch, if there was such a relation, was not created by writing and there was no showing of an express trust. Where the trust arises by operation of law it is said the beneficiaries have a right to proceed to enforce their claim to the trust property immediately, that the title to the trust property vests in the involuntary or constructive trustee, and that the statute of limitations begins to run against their cause of action from that date. Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, at page 419, 97 Pac. 894. While the statute of limitations would not be operative as to minor defendants, the principle announced by the case declares the adverse character of the holding.

Gosch was not precluded from bringing an action to quiet title against the appellant because of the alleged trust relation. He was the holder of the legal title, and the equitable character of the claim of the defendants in the action did not prevent the court from entering up a valid decree declaring the interests of the respective parties, legal and equitable, in the premises. There was no place for the application of the rule that the holder of an equitable title cannot enforce his equities against the holder of the legal title. So the contention of appellants that the action cannot be maintained against the children because their contingent remainder is a mere expectancy finds full answer in Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, at page 301, 37 Pac. 1049. See, also, Civ. Code, § 699; In re Walkerly, 108 Cal. 627, at page 648, 41 Pac. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97. We find nothing in the record in the case (to which alone we must look) to sustain the point made by appellants that the judgment in action No. 28,196 was entered by consent without authority. The complaint was in the ordinary form used in such actions; service of summons was regularly made upon the minor defendants by serving them and their father personally. All the defendants appeared, a guardian ad litem being appointed for the minors, a general denial was entered and the special interests of the defendants pleaded, showing their equitable rights and the existence of the agreement with McCollum. On these issues the court found in favor of plaintiff, and the defendants are concluded by the findings so made.

With respect to the title of T. F. Joyce, if the finding in No. 12,444, that the material for which the lien was claimed was furnished with the knowledge and consent of the owners of the real estate, was not sufficient to conclude appellants upon a collateral attack, they are, nevertheless, estopped by the judgment in No. 19,205. In this action the complaint to quiet title was in the usual form and the answer of defendants (appellants here) set up all the equities claimed by them in their brief upon this appeal, and in the case of the children alleged collusion between plaintiff (Hiller) and their mother, Emma R. Means, in the procurement of the judgment in the foreclosure of the liens of the materialmen and mechanics in action No. 12,444. On all of these issues the trial court found in favor of plaintiff. While Hiller was acting as trustee for the materialmen and mechanics who were plaintiffs in No. 12,444, there is no evidence of any express trust relation between him and appellants and no bar on this ground to his bringing the action to quiet his title.

The conveyance of Gosch and wife to Winans and Cole, respectively, conveyed to them the interests acquired by Gosch in lots 4 and 5; and that of Hiller to Joyce the interest Hiller acquired in lot 6.

In all that has been heretofore said, both in this opinion and that filed in appeal No. 693, it has been assumed that no question of description was involved, and that the respective holdings of defendants Winans, Cole, and T. F. Joyce, to wit: Lots 4, 5, and 6 of the courthouse block in the city of Los Angeles, taken together, covered the entire Means property. Appellants, however, contend that such is not the case and that the findings of the court in this regard are not sustained by the evidence in the case. It is claimed that it appears from the evidence of the witness Rowan, and the diagram introduced in connection therewith, that there remains a triangular piece of land 33.71 feet wide on the northerly boundary of the property and running to a point at the southerly boundary which is not affected by the various proceedings, conveyances, etc., which are hereinabove considered, the title to which remains in the defendants Means, Blee, and Hendricks. The deduction of the surveyor witness that there is such a "gore" remaining is made upon the assumption that the descriptions in all these various instruments call for lines running parallel to New High and Broadway (Fort) streets, instead of at right angles to the side lines running from one of these streets to the other. As the fact is not as assumed, it is not necessary to enter into a calculation to determine the exact effect of the calls as made; the number of square feet one way or the other being so small and of so little value.

Other alleged errors presented relate to matters specified as "decisions against law," and "errors of law occurring at the trial." Under the first it is urged that findings three and four are not consistent in this, that it is found by the court in finding three that respondent Winans has acquired and owns the interest of the life tenant, the reversionary interest of the grantor, and the interests of the five children (naming them) in lot 4; and "that the persons who will take said property at the termination of said life estate and the proportions in which they will take the same cannot now be ascertained"; while finding four is, that Winans is the owner of the estate in remainder in lot 4 "that was vested in" the five children by virtue of the Hollenbeck deed, and "will upon the death of said Emma Means, take the interest and estate in fee in said lot 4 that would under said deed of J. E. Hollenbeck go to those of the above-named children of Mrs. Emma Means who shall survive her." It is contended that the use of the word "vested" in the last-mentioned finding is a holding that the interest in remainder of the Means children is a "vested" one, which is inconsistent with the view that such remainder is contingent implied by the language quoted from finding number three. It is apparent from the context that the words "vested in" are not used in the finding in a comparative sense as distinguishing a vested from a contingent estate, but rather as the equivalent of the words "acquired by." This is apparent from that part of the finding which is above quoted. That is to say, the fourth finding means only that Winans is the owner of the estate in remainder "acquired by" the five children of Mrs. Means by virtue of the Hollenbeck deed. So read it is consistent with the other findings, and tends to support the conclusions of law drawn from those findings by the trial court. The same errors are alleged with respect to the findings relating to the titles of Cole and Joyce and these objections may be answered in the same way.

The errors of law specified relate to the admission of the various judgment rolls and documents, the effect of which has been hereinabove considered. For the reasons assigned the papers in the proceeding No. 8,616, and the lease to Rogers made pursuant thereto, do not directly support the title of Winans and Cole, but it is apparent that their admission in evidence could not have prejudiced the rights of the appellants Means, Hendricks, and Blee. The proceeding mentioned was begun to procure the consent of a court of equity upon behalf of the Means children to the making of the lease to Rogers, but was not effective for that purpose. The court, however, found in action No. 12,444 that the consent of these minors was given and the judgment roll in No. 12,444 established this fact conclusively against collateral attack. The effect of No. 8,616, therefore, as evidence supporting the Joyce title need not be considered, as this title is established without it. An appellate court is not bound by the reasons given by the trial court for its decision. It is the judicial action of the trial court, as distinguished from its judicial reason, which appellate courts are called upon to review, and if the former be correct the appellate court will not concern itself about the latter. It is not material for the purpose of this appeal, then, whether the trial court relied upon the proceeding No. 12,444 or No. 19,205 in sustaining the Joyce title.

The judgment roll in the latter action was properly admitted. The objection to its admissibility on the ground that the interests of the children, as heirs at law, were not litigated or decided therein, cannot be sustained. Their interests as heirs at law were not involved. Their rights in the property were those of purchasers and their respective interests personal and not representative. The term, "heirs of the body" of Emma Means, did not make her "heirs at law" in that capacity parties to the title, but the persons who were described by the words "heirs of her body" acquired an interest as individuals.

There was no finding of adverse possession, and the judgment was sufficiently sustained by the other findings; hence, it follows that if the evidence of the payment of taxes and holding of possession of Winans, Cole, and Joyce was immaterial so far as the children were concerned, the latter were not prejudiced by its admission, even though it were error to admit it.

Objections were made to the introduction in evidence of the various judgment rolls which have been mentioned, but these objections are not specifically urged, except as they are presented by the arguments which have hereinabove been considered in connection with the effect of such rolls upon the titles of the children of Mrs. Means.

In accordance with the foregoing views, the interlocutory decree and orders appealed from are affirmed.

RAUTH v. SOUTHWEST WAREHOUSE CO. (L. A. 2,473.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 17, 1910.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 595*)—RECORD—SEPARATE APPEALS—SINGLE TRANSCRIPT.

Supreme Court Rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) authorizes an appeal from a judgment and from an order denying a new trial to be heard on the same transcript though the appeals were taken at widely different times independent of a stipulation or order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2623; Dec. Dig. § 595.*]

2. SALES (§ 266*) — WARRANTY—DESCRIPTION OF CHATTEL.

Where an article sold is described as of a certain kind or description, a warranty that it is of that kind or description is implied.

3. SALES (§ 266*)—NATURE AND CHARACTER OF CHATTEL — DESCRIPTION — WARRANTY OF KIND.

Where a buyer in terms asks for a particular kind of article, and the seller purports to comply with the request, he will generally be held to warrant the article as being of that kind, though he may not have made any declaration in words to that effect, but in order to create an implied warranty from the description of an article, the circumstances must be such as to amount to a representation of fact on the part of the seller that the article is of the particular kind or description.

4. SALES (§ 441*)—IMPLIED WARRANTY—SEED BARLEY—KIND—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to warrant a finding that seed barley sold to plaintiff and his assignors was described or represented to be bearded barley, so as to raise an implied warranty that it was of that description.

5. CUSTOMS AND USAGES (§ 19*)—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held insufficient to show a custom among farmers and dealers in seed grain in the community that the word "barley," when used without qualification, meant bearded barley only, and did not include the beardless variety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Customs and Usages, Cent. Dig. §§ 41–46; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

6. SALES (§ 266*)—WARRANTY—STATUTES.

Where neither a seller of seed barley nor any of his agents had reason to believe that the fact that barley sold to plaintiff and his assignors was of the beardless variety, if known to any of them, would have influenced them against its purchase, a failure to disclose the fact that it was of the beardless variety did not create a cause of action under Civ. Code § 1767, providing that one who agrees to sell personal property, knowing that the buyer relies on his advice and judgment, thereby warrants to the buyer that neither the seller nor any agent employed in the transaction knows the existence of any fact concerning the thing sold which would to the seller's knowledge destroy the buyer's inducement to buy.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action brought by plaintiff to recover damages on account of breach of alleged warranty, fraudulent representations, and fraudulent concealment, in the sale to plaintiff and four other persons, who have assigned their claims to plaintiff, of certain seed barley for the season of 1906–7. The trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $12,155.21.

There is but one transcript in the matter of these appeals, and there is no stipulation or order that both appeals may be presented upon the same transcript. The appeals were taken at widely different times. The record shows that notice of intention to move for a new trial was regularly given before the appeal from the judgment was taken. Plaintiff suggests that, in view of the fact that the appeals were taken at different times, they cannot be presented upon the same transcript in the absence of stipulation or order, and that they must therefore be dismissed. A complete answer to this claim is to be found in rule 2 of this court.

Aside from the amount of seed barley purchased and the amount of damage, the cause of action stated on behalf of Rauth and that on behalf of each of his assignors, B. F. Nimmo, M. Wooley, Thomas Jessup, and M. Erreca, were exactly the same. As to each it was substantially alleged as follows: He was farming for the season of 1906–7, a portion of the land of the Irvine Company known as the "San Joaquin Rancho" in Orange county, under a lease from the owner. Defendant offered to sell him seed barley for planting thereon, showed him a sample thereof and represented that the same was good, clean seed barley, such as is usually sown and raised in Orange county and in the locality where his land is situated. By said representations it induced him to believe that the same was "the variety known as bearded barley." It further represented that it had bought the same for seeding purposes to sell to the farmers of Orange county and of the locality where his land was situated, that it was well threshed, that the beards were all broken off, and that it was fit and proper for the purpose of growing grain in said locality. An inspection of the barley did not show that it was not bearded barley. He believed all said representations, and relying thereon bought and planted such seed. Defendant at the time of such sale well knew that such barley was not the common or bearded barley, but was the variety known as "beardless barley," and was not the kind or variety usually called "barley" in southern California and in Orange county, and knew that he believed he was purchasing the variety called "bearded barley," and purposely concealed the fact that it was beardless barley from him, well knowing that he relied on its representations and advice and judgment regarding the quality and fitness, and that he was purchasing the same for seed in a locality where bearded barley is usually sown, and that he would not purchase the same if he knew it to be beardless barley. His land was suitable for the growing of such barley as is usually grown in Orange county, but the beardless barley was not suited to the climate or soil of such land or any land in that locality. The consequence was that it produced a very poor crop, much less in quantity than common or bearded barley would have produced. Defendant, admitting the sales of the seed barley, denied all the other allegations of the complaint.

The main contention of defendant upon this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to warrant a conclusion of any breach of warranty, fraudulent representation, or fraudulent concealment on its part in the matter of the sales of this seed barley. Admittedly the seed barley was what is styled "beardless" or "bald barley" as distinguished from the ordinary "bearded barley," owing to the absence of the long awn or bristle which extends from each seed. We will assume, as is probably true, that the evidence as to the crops realized on the San Joaquin Rancho during that season from this and other seed barley was sufficient to support a conclusion that this particular seed barley was not as well adapted to the particular soil in which it was planted and the climate of that locality as would have been seed barley grown in that locality. The evidence did show, however, that some of it planted at Santa Monica that season produced 30 sacks of grain to the acre. This barley was what is called in Orange county "Northern barley," having been grown in the Tehachapi valley in Kern county which is many miles north of Orange county, and which has a much greater altitude, all of which was made clear to each of the buyers. But there was absolutely nothing in the evidence to indicate that the difference in yield was not due solely to the fact that this seed barley was grown in a different locality and at a greater altitude rather than to the fact that it was "beardless" barley instead of barley of the bearded variety. The evidence of two witnesses elicited for the purpose of showing that prior experiments with that kind of barley had shown it to be unfitted for that locality was entirely insufficient to support any conclusion to that effect. One of these witnesses testified that some 18 or 20 years before seed of that kind had been used in that locality for a couple of years, but that its use was then abandoned. The other witness testified that in about the year 1876 he saw a little beardless barley growing in that locality. Neither testified as to where the seed came from nor as to whether it produced as well as the bearded kind, nor as to the reason for its use not being continued. There is nothing to indicate that any of the parties to the transaction here involved ever heard of any use of beardless barley seed in this locality. There is no pretense that the beardless barley is in any degree inferior to or different from bearded barley either in quality or productiveness. So far as appears the only difference is in the fact that the bearded barley has the long awn or bristle extending from each grain, while the beardless barley has only short bristles.

The evidence was entirely without conflict as to certain facts. Defendant established its grain and warehouse business in Orange county in 1906. Its manager, C. J. Haines, saw the crop from which this seed barley came growing in the Tehachapi valley. He observed that it was beardless. The evidence shows that this does not mean that the grains are entirely without awns, but that such awns are very short. It appealed to him as being very clean and fine, and he thought it would be excellent for seed in the southern part of the state. He therefore bought the crop as it stood, and the threshed barley was shipped to Orange and Los Angeles counties. Three car loads of this were sent to Irvine in Orange county and there sold in small lots. It had threshed very clean and fine, and was an attractive seed in every way. Among the purchasers were Rauth and his four assignors. As to each of these the evidence showed without conflict, and the jury found in response to special interrogatories that the selling agent told the buyer that the barley was Northern barley raised at Tehachapi, but did not tell him that it was bearded barley; that the buyer said he desired to buy seed barley but did not state that he desired bearded barley; that the buyer examined the barley before purchasing it, and that the seed barley which defendant sold was of good quality, and germinated and came up after being planted. There is nothing to indicate that the agents of defendant did not act in the best of faith throughout this matter, unless that is shown by their failure to explain to the purchasers that the seed barley was of the beardless type as distinguished from the bearded type. Nor was there any breach of warranty unless the fact that the barley sold was of the beardless kind instead of the bearded shows such a breach.

The evidence of the buyers as to the transactions between themselves and defendant is very brief.

As to Rauth, Haines told him that he had some good barley that he had seen growing at Tehachapi, and it looked so nice that he had bought the whole field. He showed him a sample, and Rauth examined it. Rauth told Haines that they had done a good job of bearding up in that county, and Haines said it was threshed with a combined harvester. Erreca dealt solely with Spencer, a foreman at the warehouse. His transaction was late in the season, after the sales to the others on the San Joaquin Rancho. Spencer said: "I have good barley seed. All San Joaquin farmers use same barley, and he gave me eight or nine or ten names buying his barley seed." Erreca looked at the barley. "I told Spencer, 'This barley has not much beard. It looks like this barley was raised in some dry country.' 'Yes,' he says, 'this was raised in a dry country. Not much beards.'" Wooley dealt with Haines. Haines told Wooley that he had some good Northern barley grown at Tehachapi; that he thought it would be good seed barley and good for Wooley to plant. He showed him a sample, and it appeared to Wooley to be good. Before buying Wooley and Mr. Krauss, the manager of the Irvine Company, went together to look at it, and Krauss said that he thought that it would be a good investment, and that it would make a better crop to get new barley like this.

Nimmo dealt with Spencer. He called at defendant's warehouse to see about seed barley, and Spencer showed it to him. He spoke to Spencer about its being bearded closely and of some of the kernels being cracked, and asked if it would affect the sprouting, and Spencer said that he did not think so. Krauss had told him that defendant had some northern seed, and that if any of the tenants wished to change seed they could find some at defendant's warehouse. Nimmo did wish to get seed produced in some locality other than Orange county.

Jessup dealt with Haines. The barley was shown to him, and Haines said it was from Tehachapi, that he had it shipped for seed, and thought it would be a good thing for Orange county, a good change of seed. Jessup spoke of it as being so dry, white, bright and bearded closely, and Haines said that it was raised in a dry climate, and he supposed that was the reason it was bearded so much closer.

It is doubtless true that if this barley was sold by defendant as being of the ordinary bearded kind, instead of the beardless, and that the partial failure of the crops of plaintiff and his assignors was due to the fact that it was of the beardless rather than the bearded kind, of which, as we have said, there is no sufficient evidence, defendant would be liable as for a breach of warranty. It is a generally accepted rule that on the sale of a chattel as being of a particular kind or description, stated as a fact, a contract is implied that the article sold is of that kind or description. Substantially, the description is warranted. This was the rule applied in Wolcott v. Mount, 36 N. J. Law, 262, 13 Am. Rep. 438, and 38 N. J. Law, 496, 20 Am. Rep. 425, where the buyer expressly asked for early strap leaf red top turnip seed, and the seller declared the seed to be such, and it proved to be an entirely different and inferior kind; in White v. Miller, 71 N. Y. 118, 27 Am. Rep. 13, on a sale of large Bristol cabbage seed; and in Moody

v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380, on a sale of White Australian wheat. To make this rule applicable, the circumstances must be such as to amount to a representation of fact on the part of the vendor that the article is of the particular kind or description. If the buyer in terms asks for the particular kind, and the seller purports to comply with his request, he would probably be held to warrant the article as being of that kind, although he may not have made any declaration in words to that effect. In other words, the circumstances may be such as to make the acts of the vendor constitute such a representation. But in this case, as we have seen, there was no demand, in terms, for bearded barley. The demand of the buyers was simply for seed barley, and they were given good seed barley of a kind not shown to be in any way different in quality from the common bearded variety theretofore grown in that locality. There is nothing in the evidence heretofore referred to upon which to found the conclusion of a representation or warranty that the barley was of the bearded kind, unless we can hold that the jury was warranted in concluding that there was a custom or usage in Orange county known to defendant or so notorious that one engaged in the grain business must be presumed to know it (2 Paige on Contracts, § 604), to the effect that where the word "barley" was used without qualification it meant only bearded barley and did not include beardless barley. An attempt was made to show such a custom or usage, but in addition to the fact that the evidence was directed to the existence of such a custom only at the time of the trial, which was nearly two years after the transactions, such evidence, in our judgment, fell far short of the degree of clearness and certainty essential to show a custom or usage so notorious that defendant must be presumed to have known it, for actual knowledge was not shown, to the effect that the term "barley" did not include barley exactly like the common bearded variety ordinarily grown in Orange county, except that it grew without the long bristles found on such barley. As the bearded type had been the kind almost exclusively grown in that county, of course when the word "barley" was used therein it ordinarily referred to bearded barley, and ordinarily when one ordered "barley" he received barley of the bearded kind. Common bearded barley was spoken of and quoted in market reports simply as "barley." This was practically the sum and substance of the evidence, though some of the witnesses in response to the questions of counsel for plaintiff to that effect dignified the thing by calling it a custom or usage. The one witness as to market quotations did not pretend to testify that beardless barley was ever quoted other than as simply "barley." "Barley" and "Chevalier barley" were the only two kinds he testified to as being separately quoted. Chevalier barley, as we know, is a different quality of grain, and, as the witness testified, is probably quoted at a different price.

Learned counsel for plaintiff relies on section 1767, Civ. Code, which provides that "one who sells or agrees to sell personal property, knowing that the buyer relies upon his advice or judgment, thereby warrants to the buyer that neither the seller, nor any agent employed by him in the transaction, knows the existence of any fact concerning the thing sold which would, to his knowledge, destroy the buyer's inducement to buy." The answer to this is that the evidence is entirely destitute of any sufficient support for the conclusion that defendant or either of its agents, Haines and Spencer, had any knowledge or reason to suspect that the fact that this barley was of the beardless kind, if known to any of the buyers, would operate as an influence against its purchase. What we have said negatives the idea of any fraudulent concealment or fraud of any kind on the part of defendant.

We perceive no ground in the evidence for holding defendant legally responsible for the partial failure in the crops of plaintiff and his assignors. In view of our conclusion in this regard, it will be unnecessary to consider any of the other points made for reversal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 7, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 601*)—MUNICIPAL AFFAIR — IMPROVEMENT OF PRIVATE PROPERTY.

The construction of improvements on private property within a city is not a municipal affair, the city having no interest therein or control thereof, except such as is necessary for the protection of public welfare under the police power delegated by the Constitution to such cities, the exercise of which is subordinate to the general law.

Application for a writ of mandamus by N. Emmet May against F. S. Craig and others, Commissioners of the Board of Public Works of the City of Long Beach. Judgment for defendants, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. Cassat Davis, for appellant. Stephen G. Long and Percy Hight, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Plaintiff by his complaint sought a writ of mandate to compel the board of public works of Long Beach, a charter city, to issue to him a permit for the construction of a certain building by him proposed to be erected within such city. This permit, it is alleged, the board refused to issue, assigning as the sole reason that the plans and specifications intended to control in the erection and construction of such building did not conform to and comply with the requirements of the act of April 16, 1909. Laws 1909, p. 948. It is further alleged that the plans and specifications which were presented did conform in every respect to the ordinances of the city regularly enacted with reference to the construction of buildings within such city. It is admitted in the complaint that such plans did not comply with all of the requirements of the general law. A demurrer was interposed to the complaint, which was sustained without leave to amend, and judgment went for defendants, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

It is appellant's contention that all matters with reference to the size and character of buildings constructed or to be constructed within the limits of a charter city, and all regulations relating thereto, are municipal affairs, and under the Constitution of this state such charter provisions are superior to the provisions of a general law relating to the same subject. With this contention we do not agree. In our opinion, the construction of improvements upon private property within a city is not a municipal affair. The city has no interest therein or control thereof, except such control is made necessary for the protection of the public welfare, and the only power which the city can exercise in relation to such private structures must come from the police power delegated by the Constitution to such charter cities; and this police power is expressly made subordinate to the general law. The complaint as filed and presented by the record does not contain a copy of the ordinance enacted by the city, and we cannot take judicial notice thereof. It may be that the ordinance simply exacts requirements additional to those of the general law, which, if true, would not be in conflict therewith. In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 117, 99 Pac. 517. Upon the other hand, such ordinance may undertake to make lawful that which by the state law is declared unlawful. In that event a conflict would arise, and the ordinance must yield to the general law. That a duty to issue a permit should arise, it must be made to appear that no such conflict exists; otherwise, the determination of the board must be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by the Winsor Pottery Works against the Superior Court of Alameda County, to compel the fixing of the amount of an undertaking to stay proceedings pending appeal from an order appointing a receiver. Writ granted.

COOPER, P. J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the Hon. Frank B. ---

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

There is no dispute as to the facts, and in brief they are as follows: In December, 1909, one Brinkmeyer, claiming to be the owner of certain capital stock of Winsor's California Pottery & Terra Cotta Works, a dissolved corporation, commenced an action in the said superior court against the Winsor Pottery Works, a corporation (the petitioner herein) and a number of other defendants. The object of the said action was, among other things, to have certain deeds of conveyance made by the trustees of Winsor's California Pottery & Terra Cotta Works, a dissolved corporation, to the said Winsor Pottery Works, conveying certain real estate, set aside and canceled, and to have a receiver appointed to take charge of all the property of said dissolved corporation, with power in said receiver to commence actions to set aside the said conveyances, and to recover the said real estate from the possession of the said Winsor Pottery Works, and to have its deeds to said property delivered up and canceled.

After the commencement of the said action, without notice to petitioner, but by the consent of the other defendants in said action, and at the request of the plaintiff therein, the court made an order appointing one Samuels receiver in said action, which order, among other things, directed and authorized the said receiver "to institute such actions as may be proper to recover for the benefit of the stockholders or members of said dissolved corporation all property and effects which are due and owing to the Winsor's California Pottery & Terra Cotta Works, a dissolved corporation, or to the stockholders or members thereof, by said Winsor's Pottery Works, or any other persons or at all, under and by virtue of two conveyances or indentures of date August 7, 1908, from Winsor's California Pottery & Terra Cotta Works to Winsor Pottery Works, a corporation, and the other of date August 30, 1909, from Serrill Winsor, S. W. Winsor, Mary B. Winsor, and Lydia C. Winsor to Winsor Pottery Works, a corporation, or under and by virtue of any other transaction."

On the 21st day of February, 1910, petitioner duly perfected an appeal from the order so appointing said receiver. After said appeal had been so perfected the petitioner applied to the Hon. Frank B. Ogden, the said judge of the superior court, for permission to file an undertaking to stay proceedings upon said appeal, and asked the said judge to fix the amount of said undertaking to stay proceedings upon and pending appeal from said order so appointing a receiver in said cause; but the said judge refused to fix the amount of the said bond or to permit of said bond or undertaking being filed upon said appeal.

The Code provides that an appeal may be taken from an order appointing a receiver. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3. It is further provided (Code Civ. Proc. § 943): "If the judgment or order appealed from appoint a receiver the execution of the judgment or order cannot be stayed by appeal unless a written undertaking be executed on the part of the appellant, with two or more sureties, to the effect that if such judgment or order be affirmed, or the appeal dismissed, the appellant will pay all damages which the respondent may sustain by reason of such stay, not exceeding an amount to be fixed by the judge of the court by which the judgment was rendered or order made, which amount must be specified in the undertaking."

It is the duty of the judge under the said section to fix the amount of the undertaking in order to stay the proceedings pending an appeal, and in case of his refusal the writ of mandate will lie to compel such action. Green v. Hebbard, 95 Cal. 39, 30 Pac. 202.

It is said that the petitioner was not aggrieved or injured by the order appointing the receiver, for the reason that the receiver was not directed to take charge of any property belonging to petitioner. It is sufficient to say that in the action brought by Brinkmeyer it was deemed necessary to make the petitioner a party defendant. One of the main objects of the action was to recover real estate held by petitioner, and to have petitioner's deeds thereto delivered up and canceled. The first step towards the accomplishment of the objects so sought by Brinkmeyer was to have a receiver appointed to take charge of all the property of the dissolved corporation, and, among other things to take or recover and take charge of the real estate held by petitioner under said deeds. The petitioner claims to be the owner of such real estate, and an order authorizing a receiver to bring an action on behalf of a dissolved corporation to recover such property is such an order as would show the petitioner to be aggrieved by it. The petitioner being a defendant in the suit instituted by Brinkmeyer, and being in possession of the real estate sought to be recovered through the medium of a receiver, certainly had the right to appeal from the order appointing a receiver, and to question the right of the court to make such appointment upon the facts stated in the complaint. Having the right to appeal, it had the right to give an undertaking to stay proceedings under the express provisions of the Code.

Let the writ be made peremptory.

8. Judgment (§ 499*) — Conclusiveness — Collateral Attack.

Where, in a suit for a partnership accounting, there was nothing in the judgments to indicate that there were any proceedings in bankruptcy pending against one of the partners when the judgments were entered, they were not subject to collateral attack, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction, because of the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings against the insolvent partner before judgment.

LORIGAN, J. This action was for an accounting brought by a solvent partner against the trustee in bankruptcy of his insolvent partner.

From a judgment settling the account the defendant appeals, and accompanies his appeal with what purports to be a transcript of the testimony and proceedings in the case, prepared under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, in lieu of a bill of exceptions under which he attacks the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings.

Objection to a consideration of this transcript is made by respondent on the ground that it is not properly settled, allowed, and certified. The only thing which purports to be a certification of the transcript is the certificate of the official stenographer of the court, who states that it is a correct transcript of the "hearing had in the above-entitled action and reported by me on the 4th and 5th days of December, 1907." This is not the method provided for in section 953a for the authentication of a transcript to be used in lieu of a bill of exceptions. The phonographic report of the trial provided for in that section must, after due proceedings pointed out in the section, be settled and allowed by the judge and certified to by him as correct, so as to constitute a record available on appeal in lieu of a bill of exceptions. None of the requisite steps were taken, and hence, there being no proper authentication of the transcript in question, the objection to its consideration must be sustained.

This leaves only for examination the points made by appellant on the judgment roll, which are that the trial court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint, and sustaining the respondent's demurrer to his cross-complaint. As to the demurrer to the complaint. The complaint sets forth that on May 9, 1905, plaintiff and one Addie L. Allen were partners, doing business under the firm name of A. C. Williams & Company; that on said last date, by a judgment of the superior court of Santa Barbara county "duly given or made," said partnership was dissolved, and subsequently, on the 12th day of May, 1905, a judgment was "duly given or made" settling all the accounts of said partnership, and between said partners; that prior to said dissolution of partnership said Addie L. Allen had filed her petition in bankruptcy in the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, praying that each of the copartners, and the said firm of A. C. Williams & Company be adjudged bankrupt; that on April 29, 1905, and prior to said judgment of dissolution a receiver was appointed by said district court, who took possession of all the property and accounts of said firm and retained them until the 17th of August, 1906, when said district court ordered them returned to plaintiff as solvent partner, for administration; that said Addie L. Allen was adjudged bankrupt by said district court on December 5, 1905, and said H. P. Lane was, on March 13, 1906, duly appointed her trustee, and that plaintiff has endeavored to account with defendant, who refuses to make any settlement or accounting. The complaint then sets forth that assets to the amount of $1,145.13 had been returned to plaintiff by said receiver, exhibits an account showing the disposition of said fund in settlement of the obligations of the partnership, and prays for a settlement of the account.

The demurrer of defendant to this complaint questioned, first, the validity of the judgments for a dissolution and accounting of the partnership referred to in the complaint, and, secondly, the jurisdiction of the superior court to proceed at all in the immediate action at bar. Both of these propositions, in a general way, may be considered together.

The point of appellant, as far as the original judgments for an accounting and dissolution are concerned, is that, notwithstanding this action had been commenced and was being prosecuted at the time Addie L. Allen filed her petition in bankruptcy, the effect of filing such petition was to oust the state court of jurisdiction to proceed further in the matter, and that the judgments rendered thereafter were void. In this connection, while it is not definitely alleged in the complaint that the action for a dissolution and accounting which eventuated in the judgments therefor was brought by Addie L. Allen against her partner, Williams, the briefs on both sides treat this as the fact. It must of course be conceded that when the action for an accounting and dissolution was commenced, the court had complete jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, and unless the effect of a filing of the petition in bankruptcy by one of the partners was, as asserted by appellant, to deprive the state court of jurisdiction, that court could have proceeded to render a valid judgment in the matter. The particular provision of the bankruptcy act (sec. 11 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3426]) relied on by appellant, declares that "a suit which is pending on a claim from which a discharge in bankruptcy would be a release, and which is pending against a person at the time of filing a petition against him, shall be stayed until after an adjudication or the dismissal of his petition." It is asserted by respondent that the action which was pending in the state court for an accounting and dissolution of partnership was not a suit on a claim from which a discharge in bankruptcy would have relieved the insolvent partner. We perceive no reason, however, for discussing this proposition, because it is apparent to us that the provision of the bankruptcy act referred to does not pretend to oust the state court of jurisdiction. At best, it but suspends it during a specified period. And this is not an absolute suspension even during such period, because this same section provides (subds. b and c) that the bankruptcy court may order the trustee to enter an appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt, or, with the approval of the bankruptcy court, the trustee may be permitted to prosecute as a trustee any suit commenced by the bankrupt, with like force and effect as if it had been commenced by him. There is nothing in the statute which requires that the trustee should be substituted for the bankrupt in name. He may prosecute or defend a pending action upon the order or approval of the court without doing so. He may continue it in the name of the party whom he represents as trustee, without actually becoming a party to the record.

Now, while the complaint pleaded the judgments as "duly given or made" during a period intermediate the filing of the petition of the bankrupt and her adjudication as such, it is not disclosed by the complaint whether any order of the bankrupt court authorizing the trustee to further prosecute the suit brought by the bankrupt was or was not made. But, as far as the demurrer to the complaint is concerned, it is immaterial whether it did or not. The judgments were pleaded as the Code provides they may be, as being "duly given or made" at a certain date. Code Civ. Proc. § 456. So, conceding without deciding, that our state court had no jurisdiction to proceed further with the trial of the then pending cause, to which the bankrupt was a party, unless on approval of the bankrupt court, still when a judgment is pleaded under the Code provision as "duly given or made" such a pleading, as the Code section declares, imports the existence of all facts necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the court to pronounce it, and if one of the facts relative to jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment in question here was the order or approval of the bankruptcy court permitting the trustee to so further prosecute, it is under such a pleading imported that such order was duly made or approval given by the bankruptcy court. Hence the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

On the point that the superior court had no jurisdiction to proceed in the immediate action at bar, the claim of appellant is that the bankruptcy court has exclusive jurisdiction of the property of the bankrupt, and that such court is the only forum in which the administration of his estate can be had. As a general proposition this is true. It is to be observed, however, as is quite apparent from the allegations of the complaint, that neither Williams, the plaintiff partner, seeking the accounting in the case at bar, nor the firm of Williams & Company, of which Addie L. Allen was a partner, was declared bankrupt by the bankruptcy court. Addie L. Allen was alone so declared. It is to be noted also that the bankruptcy law makes special provision as to the administration of partnership property, where it is declared by section 5, subdivision h, of the bankruptcy act that "in the event of one or more, but not all, of the partners of a partnership being adjudged bankrupt, the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless by consent of the partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt; that such partner or partners not adjudged bankrupt shall settle the partnership as expeditiously as its nature will permit, and account for the interest of the partner or partners adjudged bankrupt." Under this provision the partnership estate is to be administered by the solvent partner. In the matter of such settlement the bankruptcy courts have no jurisdiction over the solvent partner. While he is accountable to the trustee of the bankrupt partner, it is only for such property as may be the share of the insolvent after there has been an administration by him of the partnership property. We are pointed to no provision of the bankruptcy act which requires an action against the trustee in bankruptcy for an accounting as to the partnership property to be brought in the bankruptcy courts. In fact, counsel for appellant admits that there is no direct provision on the subject, but claims that as the estate of the bankrupt must be administered by the bankruptcy court, that court necessarily has jurisdiction. But, as the partnership property is by express provision of the bankruptcy act not to be administered in the bankruptcy courts, but by the solvent partner, the act would seem to remit the solvent partner to such state tribunal as would have jurisdiction in those matters. The trustee in bankruptcy by section 23 of the act is limited in bringing or prosecuting suits to those courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered might have brought them, if the proceeding in bankruptcy had not been instituted against him. There is no limitation in the act as to where the solvent partner shall bring his action for an accounting against the trustee. The solvent partner and the trustee might, without the aid of any court, have agreed to an accounting between them. The solvent partner having endeavored to effect this, and being unable to do so, was necessarily required to resort to some court to accomplish it, and in the absence of any requirement to proceed in the bankruptcy court, had a right to invoke the aid of the state court as the tribunal having jurisdiction in such matters, and to which the insolvent partner would have had to resort for an accounting had he not been declared bankrupt. As the bankruptcy act declares that the partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, but leaves the settlement of the partnership business to the solvent partner, and as this may necessarily require an action for an accounting, in the absence of anything in the act to the contrary, such action is properly brought in the state courts having equitable cognizance of such matters. The superior court had therefore jurisdiction of the action at bar, and the demurrer challenging that jurisdiction was properly overruled.

Appellant complains of the action of the court in sustaining a demurrer to his cross-complaint. By this pleading the defendant attempted to attack the validity of the judgments for dissolution of partnership and an accounting rendered on the 9th and 12th of May, 1905, which have heretofore been discussed; to have them declared void and for an accounting between the partners from the very formation of the partnership, notwithstanding the making of a judgment settling their account up to May 1, 1905. The basis for the attack on the validity of the judgments is the same heretofore considered—the pendency of the bankrupt proceedings against the insolvent partner had before judgment—with the further allegation that the fact of the pendency of such proceedings was suggested to the trial court before judgment was entered, with a demand for a stay of proceedings which was refused. In this connection, however, the cross-complaint sets up the judgments, from which it appears on the face thereof that they are rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, and were rendered by consent of the parties. There is nothing in the judgments to indicate that there were any proceedings in bankruptcy pending when they were entered. They are regular on their face, and, under these circumstances, are conclusive and not subject to a collateral attack, which is really all that appellant undertakes to do by the particular allegations against their validity to which we have just referred.

So, too, the judgment of May 12, 1905, in as far as it settled the accounts of the partnership between the partners up to May 1, 1905, is conclusive on the subject, and appellant was not entitled to go back of it and have re-examined the matters involved therein which had been adjudicated.

The only issue tendered by the allegation of the cross-complaint, aside from the attack on the judgments, was solely whether the solvent partner had accounted for all the partnership property. But as this issue was also made under the answer, appellant was not injured by the sustaining of the demurrer to the cross-complaint. He had the benefit in his answer of all that was contained in the cross-complaint on this material issue.

The entire matter of this partnership might have been settled in the original action had not the petition in bankruptcy filed by Addie L. Allen, one of the partners, prayed for an adjudication of bankruptcy not only against herself, but also against her partner, the plaintiff, and the firm of Williams & Company. On the filing of that petition the trustee in bankruptcy took possession of all the assets of the firm. The bankruptcy court subsequently decreed that neither Williams, nor the firm was bankrupt, but that Addie L. Allen alone was, and ordered the partnership property restored to Williams as solvent partner to settle the partnership business. It was only upon receipt of the partnership property and its conversion into money that the business of the partnership could be settled by the solvent partner, and which settlement consisted only, in this instance, of the payment of the partnership creditors. This being done, it was necessary, in the absence of any agreed settlement with the trustee, to have the account settled by a court in order that any interest of the bankrupt in the partnership property might be turned over to his trustee in bankruptcy, as the bankrupt law required.

Some other points are made by appellant, but they cannot be considered as they are based on the transcript accompanying the judgment in the case at bar, which, not being properly authenticated, is no part of the record.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GAY v. ENGEBRETSEN. (L. A. 2,455.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 400*)—IMPROVEMENTS—LIABILITY OF CONTRACTOR FOR NEGLIGENCE.

One contracting with a city to make certain street improvements is liable for injuries to others resulting from his own negligence in doing the work without any express provision in the contract imposing such liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 400.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 400*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—ORDINANCE IMPOSING LIABILITY ON CONTRACTOR—VALIDITY.

A city ordinance relating to street improvements and providing that all damage arising from the nature of the work during its progress and before its acceptance, or from any act or omission on the part of the contractor or his servants not authorized by the specifications, shall be borne by the contractor, required the assumption by the contractor of such liability only as would accrue from his failure to exercise proper care in the doing of the work, and was not invalid as seeking to compel him to assume damages arising after the completion of the work, which obligation rested on the city, thereby tending to increase the cost of the work to the property owner.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 294*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—BIDS—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE.

Vrooman Act (St. 1885, c. 153) § 3, as amended by St. 1905, c. 67, § 1, relating to street improvements, provides that 20 days after the publication by the street superintendent, and at the expiration of 25 days after the advertising and posting of any resolution of intention, the city council shall have jurisdiction to order the work to be done, etc., which order shall be published for 2 days, the same as provided for the publication of intention. Section 5 provides that before the awarding of any contract the city council shall cause notices for bids to be posted for 5 days and to be published for 2 days in a newspaper designated by the council. Held that, while the passage of the resolution ordering the work done is a necessary preliminary to the right to award a contract, the statute does not require the publication of the resolution ordering the work done to be fully made in advance of the call for bids.

See, also, 109 Pac. 880.

L. L. Boone, for appellant. Haines & Haines, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action for the cancellation of an assessment for street improvements and to enjoin the contractor from claiming any interest thereunder in the lands assessed. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals.

The appellant makes two points against the validity of the assessment.

The work consisted of street grading in the city of San Diego. The resolution of intention referred to specifications contained in ordinance 2,061 of said city, entitled: "An ordinance providing specifications for the grading of streets in the city of San Diego, California." Section 19 of this ordinance reads as follows: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications, during the progress of the work, and before the acceptance thereof, or from any act or omission on the part of the contractor, or any agent or person employed by him, occurring in the course of the work not authorized by these specifications, shall be sustained and borne by the contractor. The contractor shall keep good and sufficient guards around said improvement, by fence or otherwise, to prevent accident, and shall hang thereon lights to burn from dusk to daylight, and the contractor shall hold the city harmless from any and all suits for damages arising from or out of and during the performance of the work, or any portion thereof, and before the same has been accepted."

The position of the appellant is that this clause is obnoxious to the rule declared in a line of cases commencing with Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213; Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 Pac. 1091; Woollacott v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701, 91 Pac. 612; Van Loenen v. Gillespie, 152 Cal. 222, 96 Pac. 87; Hatch v. Nevills, 152 Cal. xvi, 95 Pac. 43; Stansbury v. Poindexter, 99 Pac. 182. We are satisfied that there is a clear distinction between section 19 above quoted and the provision of the specifications construed in Blochman v. Spreckels, which may be taken as a type of the cases dealing with this subject. The ordinance there construed contained the following provision: "The contractor shall keep good and sufficient guards around said improvements by fence or otherwise, to prevent accidents, and shall hang thereon lights to burn from dusk to daylight; and the contractor shall hold the city harmless from any and all suits for damages arising out of the construction of said improvements. The contractor shall when required to do so by the superintendent of streets remove from the work any overseer, laborer or other person, who shall refuse or neglect to obey the said superintendent in anything relating to the work, or who shall perform his work in a manner contrary to these specifications or be found incompetent or unfaithful. All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications shall be sustained by the contractor."

It was the last sentence of this clause that was regarded by the court as fatal to the validity of the specifications. This sentence, says the opinion, "looked to damage which might arise out of and subsequent to the completed work—practically any damage for which the city would be liable which might originate in the nature of the work to be done." The decision was that such a provision was unauthorized, in that it sought to compel the contractor to assume an obligation properly resting upon the city, and thereby tended to increase the cost of the work and the consequent burden to the property owner. The court was distinguishing between two kinds of damage which might result from the doing of street work: First, such as might result from the making of the improvement, however carefully and properly the actual work of construction were done; and, second, the damage which might accrue through negligence, or the failure to take proper precautions during the period of construction. The first is a damage to property resulting from the exercise of the governmental function of ordering the improvement. For it the person whose property has been injured may seek redress from the governmental agency which caused the work to be done. The second gives rise to the liability resting upon any one who negligently performs a lawful act in such a manner as to injure another. There can be no impropriety in making the contractor liable for the consequences of his own negligence. Indeed, he would be so liable without any express provision in the contract. James v. San Francisco, 6 Cal. 528, 65 Am. Dec. 526; Barton v. McDonald, 81 Cal. 265, 22 Pac. 855. In all probability, paragraph 19 of the specifications in the case at bar was designedly framed to avoid the vice of the clause condemned in Blochman v. Spreckels, and similar cases. It was, we think, intended to require the assumption by the contractor of such liability only as would accrue from his failure to exercise proper care in the doing of the work while the same was under his exclusive control and management. This is the meaning naturally derived from the limitations expressed in the clause itself. The loss or damage to be sustained and borne by the contractor is only such as arose from the nature of the work to be done "during the progress of the work." His obligation to hold the city harmless from any and all suits for damages is limited to such suits as may arise from or out of and during the performance of the work, and before the same has been accepted. The damage which will accrue to property from the proper carrying out of a public improvement scheme is, ordinarily, permanent in character. Its effects, while having their inception during the progress of the work, continue thereafter. The limiting words placed in paragraph 19 of these specifications may well be construed as excluding this very element of damage. Indeed, such construction is necessary in order to give any substantial meaning to the restrictive language differentiating these specifications from those found in the Blochman Case. A contrary ruling would require us to say that the clause was intended to impose upon the contractor a liability limited in time for a loss or damage which would in most cases be permanent and indivisible.

The rule of Blochman v. Spreckels has been considered a harsh one when applied to specifications identical with those there involved. Even in cases where the decision was clearly in point, this court has manifested reluctance in following it (see Woollacott v. Meekin, supra), and has, in adhering to the doctrine, based its action in large part upon the principle of stare decisis. We are certainly not disposed to extend the application of the decision in question to facts which may so readily be distinguished from those which were thought to require a holding adverse to the validity of the assessment.

The second point relates to the publication of the resolution ordering the work done, and of the notice inviting proposals. The resolution was passed by the common council on the 6th day of November, 1905. It designated the San Diego Union and Daily Bee as the newspaper in which the resolution itself and the notice inviting sealed proposals for doing the work should be published. The resolution was published in said paper on the 13th and 14th days of November, 1905, and the notices inviting proposals were published therein on the same days, i. e., the 13th and 14th days of November. The contention is that, until publication of the resolution had been completed, there was no jurisdiction to call for bids, and, in addition, that, inasmuch as the only designation of a paper in which the notices should be published was in the resolution ordering the work done, there was, at the time the notices were published, no valid designation of a paper in which said publication of notices should be made.

The argument necessarily underlying these claims is that a resolution ordering work done is not effective as a basis for further proceedings, or otherwise, until it has been published as required by law. Section 3 of the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 148, as amended by St. 1905, p. 63) provides that at the expiration of 20 days after the expiration of the time of publication by the street superintendent, and "at the expiration of twenty-five days after the advertising and posting, as aforesaid, of any resolution of intention (in the absence of objection by property owners), the city council shall be deemed to have acquired jurisdiction to order any of the work to be done, or improvement to be made, which is authorized by this act; which order, when made, shall be published for two days the same as provided for the publication of intention." Section 5 provides that, before the awarding of any contract, the city council shall cause notices inviting sealed proposals or bids to be posted for five days and to be published for two days in a newspaper designated by the council for that purpose. It will be observed that, while section 3 expressly makes the publication of the resolution of intention a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the council to order the work done, the act contains no declaration that the publication of the resolution ordering the work done shall be made before any further steps can be taken. It is merely provided that the resolution shall be published for two days. We see no good reason for holding that the resolution ordering work done is ineffectual for any purpose until the completion of the publication. The ordinary rule is that legislative enactments become operative upon their passage, unless there is some express provision of law to the contrary. People v. Clark, 1 Cal. 406; Davis v. Whidden, 117 Cal. 618, 49 Pac. 766. This court has held that, under a city charter providing that a board of trustees should publish all ordinances for 10 days, but containing no provision that an ordinance should not take effect until after its publication, an ordinance regulating liquor licenses took effect on its passage. City of Sacramento v. Dillman, 102 Cal. 107, 36 Pac. 385. The principle of this decision is applicable here. The appellant cites several cases in which the completion of publication was held to be essential to the effectiveness of an ordinance; but an examination of these cases shows that in each instance the charter or law authorizing the adoption of the ordinance expressly provided that the enactment should not be effective until published. Some of the authorities cited deal with proceedings under the street law. In each of them (Porphyry Paving Co. v. Ancker, 104 Cal. 340, 37 Pac. 1050; Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057; California Improvement Co. v. Reynolds, 123 Cal. 88, 90, 55 Pac. 802; Greenwood v. Hassett, 128 Cal. xviii, 61 Pac. 173) the question was concerning the necessity of publishing the resolution of intention. It was held, following the plain language of section 3, a part of which we have quoted, that the publication of this resolution is by the statute made a prerequisite to the power of the council to order the work done, or of the street superintendent to post notices of street work. As we have seen, there is no such provision regarding the publication of the resolution ordering the work done. We hold, accordingly, that that ordinance became effective upon its passage, for the purpose of designating the newspaper in which it and the notice calling for bids should be published, as well as for the further purpose of authorizing the posting and publication of such notices. The passage of the resolution ordering the work done is, no doubt, a necessary preliminary to the right to award a contract, as is the posting and publishing of the notices inviting bids; but we fail to find in the statute any provision requiring the publication of the resolution ordering the work done to be fully made in advance of the call for bids.

L. L. Boone, for appellants. Haines & Haines, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment. The questions involved are the same as those disposed of in Gay v. Engebretsen (L. A. No. 2,455) 109 Pac. 876, and the authority of that case requires an affirmance of the judgment.

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1910.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 400*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—DAMAGES—LIABILITY.

Liability for damages to abutting property resulting from raising the grade of a street rests on the city by virtue of the constitutional prohibition against the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation and cannot be imposed on the contractor.

2. PLEADING (§ 148*)—CROSS-COMPLAINT—SUBJECTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 442, providing that a cross-complaint may be filed where defendant seeks affirmative relief relating to or depending on the contract or transaction on which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates, defendant in an action to foreclose a street assessment lien may not by cross-complaint interpose a claim against plaintiff, the contractor, for trespass in piling dirt on defendant's property while doing the work.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by John Engebretsen against John H. Gay and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. L. Boone (Stearns & Sweet and Ward, Wells & Ward, amici curiæ), for appellants. Haines & Haines, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeal by defendant Gay from a judgment foreclosing the lien of a street assessment. Two points made by appellant against the validity of the assessment were fully considered in Gay v. Engebretsen (L. A. No. 2,455) 109 Pac. 876, where we held that neither afforded sufficient ground for defeating the lien. An additional question is presented in this case.

The work consisted in part of the grading of India street in the city of San Diego. The defendant Gay filed a cross-complaint alleging that the plaintiff, acting under the contract for the grading of said street, had raised the level thereof about 20 feet along the frontage of Gay's lot, and had piled dirt on a part of said lot, thereby destroying said defendant's use of the street for ingress to and egress from said property, and damaging him in the sum of $500. Plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint was sustained.

The defendant sets up in his cross-complaint the provision of the specifications whereby the contractor was required to agree that loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under the contract during the progress of the work and before acceptance thereof should be sustained and borne by the said contractor. A reference to our opinion in L. A. No. 2,455 will be a sufficient guide to our reasons for holding that this clause has no reference to the part of the damage resulting from raising the grade of the street. Liability for such damage rests upon the city by virtue of the constitutional provision prohibiting the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation. Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 622, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, and the cases following it, went upon the theory that this liability could not properly be imposed upon, or assumed by, the contractor under a street improvement contract. If the contractor cannot make a valid agreement to bear this liability, it would seem to follow, a fortiori, that he is not subject to it, where, as in this case, he has not agreed to assume the responsibility. In Eachus v. Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 492, 62 Pac. 829, 80 Am. St. Rep. 147, it is said, in discussing the liability of the city for damage caused to an abutting owner by altering the grade of a street, that "the remedy is not against the contractor unless he departs from the line of the official grade. The city, in the establishment of the official grade of a public street and in excavating and grading the street to the official grade, acts through its legally elected and qualified officers. When it lets a contract for the grading of the streets, which it had the authority and power to let, it assumes the responsibility of paying all damages necessarily caused to private property by such grading." See, also, De Baker v. Railway Co., 106 Cal. 257, 286, 39 Pac. 610, 46 Am. St. Rep. 237.

The appellant, however, urges that, independently of the raising of the street level, he has a cause of action against the contractor for the trespass alleged to have been committed in piling dirt upon the abutting property. As to this, there is the objection that the cause of action is not a proper subject of cross-complaint in an action to foreclose the assessment. That such demand cannot be asserted by way of counterclaim has been expressly decided here. In Himmelmann v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 389, the court said that "the assessment is the 'transaction' within the meaning of section 47 of the practice act, out of which the cause of action must arise, which the defendants are authorized to set up as a counterclaim. It is apparent that the alleged demand did not arise out of the assessment, nor, indeed, out of the proceedings upon which it is based, and, therefore, is not available as a counterclaim." See, also, Hornung v. McCarthy, 126 Cal. 17, 58 Pac. 303; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 693, 76 Pac. 661.

While the case cited deals with the propriety of a counterclaim, the reasoning is such as to exclude equally a cross-complaint. Under section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure (which is similar to section 47 of the old practice act), a counterclaim may be filed on a cause of action "arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action." A cross-complaint may be filed where the defendant seeks affirmative relief "relating to or depending upon the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting the property to which the action relates." Code Civ. Proc. § 442. With reference to the point under discussion there is no such difference between sections 438 and 442 as to justify the holding that a cross-complaint for the cause of action here asserted is permissible, any more than a counterclaim would be.

Haines & Haines, for appellant. L. L. Boone, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a portion of the same judgment as is involved in Engebretsen v. Gay et al. (L. A. 2,478) 109 Pac. 879, this day decided, a judgment sustaining plaintiff's claim of a lien on property of defendant to secure payment of the amount of an assessment for street improvements and directing a sale of such property to satisfy such assessment with interest and costs. While otherwise in favor of plaintiff, this judgment denied his right to recover the sum of $15 in addition to the taxable costs, as an attorney fee, and disallowed the same. Plaintiff's appeal is from so much of the judgment as denies him a recovery of such attorney fee.

Section 12 of the act relating to street improvements, the act of March 18, 1885 (St. 1885, c. 153), as amended by St. 1889, c. 151, § 8, in terms provides that, "in all cases of recovery under the provisions of this act, the plaintiff shall recover the sum of $15 in addition to the taxable costs as attorneys' fees." The theory upon which the lower court disallowed plaintiff's claim was that this provision is invalid under the doctrine of Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193. In that case it was held, in regard to liens of mechanics and others on real property for labor or materials furnished in improving the same (sections 1183–1203a, Code Civ. Proc.), that the statutory provision for the allowance of reasonable attorney's fees to each lien claimant whose lien is established (section 1195, Code Civ. Proc.) is void as violative of the provision of the federal Constitution which guarantees to every person the equal protection of the law, and of the provisions of our own Constitution "which provide that general laws shall be uniform, prohibit special laws, and declare the inalienable rights of all men of acquiring, possessing and protecting property." That ruling has been followed in Mannix v. Tryon, 152 Cal. 31, 41, 91 Pac. 983, and Merced Lumber Co. v. Bruschi, 152 Cal. 372, 375, 92 Pac. 844, and must now be taken as settled law in this state. The reasoning upon which this conclusion is based in the first case cited (Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, supra) was that of the United States Supreme Court in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, wherein a statute of the state of Texas gave an attorney fee of $10 to any person having a valid bona fide claim against a railroad corporation not exceeding $50, for personal services rendered or labor done, or for damages, etc. The court said that the effect of this statute was simply to impose a penalty upon railroad corporations for failure to pay certain debts, while individuals or other corporations guilty of similar delinquencies were not thus punished. It was declared that under this statute the railroad corporations were not treated as other debtors "or equally with other debtors," that they could not appeal to the courts as other litigants under like conditions and with like protection, that if the litigation terminated adversely to them they were mulcted in the attorney's fees of the successful plaintiff, while if successful they recovered no attorney's fees, that they are therefore discriminated against and do not stand equal before the law. The Texas statute was therefore held invalid. This court said, in Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, supra: "A statute which gives an attorney's fee to one party in an action and denies it to the other, and allows such fee in one kind of action and not in other kinds of actions where, as in the statute here in question, the distinction is not founded on constitutional or natural differences, is clearly violative of the constitutional provisions above noticed." There is, however, nothing in the opinion in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra, or in our own Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, supra, to suggest that attorney's fees may not be allowed a successful plaintiff in certain classes of cases, even though no such allowance be made to the defendant in the event that he prevails. The right to classify in this respect, as long as the classification is "based upon some difference bearing a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect to which the classification is attempted," was conceded by the opinion in Gulf, etc., Ry. Co. v. Ellis, supra (see Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909), and is recognized by all the authorities. The difficulty in the Texas case was that there was no such difference, and the same was held to be true by this court in regard to our mechanic's lien law provision. In Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Matthews, supra, the United States Supreme Court upheld a statute of the state of Kansas allowing a reasonable attorney's fee to a successful plaintiff in an action against a railroad company for damages by fire caused by the operating of the railroad, on the ground that the same was a reasonable regulation in the nature of a police regulation to secure the utmost care on the part of railroad companies to prevent the escape of fire, and not simply a provision to secure the payment of debts. Upon the same principle, the United States Supreme Court has sustained a statute imposing a penalty on railroad corporations of $1.25 per day for failure to pay a laborer what is due him upon discharge, the statute being held to be a reasonable regulation for the protection of servants and employés of railroads (St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 404, 19 Sup. Ct. 419, 43 L. Ed. 746), and a statute imposing a penalty of $50 on a common carrier who failed to adjust and pay a valid claim for damages for loss of property within a stated time, it being held that the design was not to penalize the carrier for the nonpayment of a debt, but that the statute was a reasonable regulation to bring about prompt settlement of such claims (Seaboard, etc., Ry. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 28 Sup. Ct. 28, 52 L. Ed. 108). Decisions of state courts along the same lines are numerous. In Railroad v. Crider, 91 Tenn. 489, 19 S. W. 618, an act imposing on unfenced railroads absolute liability for injuries done to live stock by their moving trains, and making them liable for a reasonable attorney's fee in any action brought to recover the amount appraised as due the plaintiff therefor, where the plaintiff recovers the amount of the appraisement, was upheld. The act was held to be a valid exercise of the police power of the state; the object thereof being to compel the inclosure of the track in such manner as to prevent live stock going on the road. As to the provision for an attorney's fee objection was made that it was the imposition of a burden upon one class of litigants in favor of another, and a violation of the constitutional rule requiring equality of right, privilege, and exemption. To these objections the court said, through Judge Lurton, that they overlooked the fact that the legislation is intended to compel railroad companies to fence in their tracks, and that the state having the right, in the exercise of its police powers, to compel all railroad companies to fence in their tracks, might enforce such policy, not only by making the offending company liable to all sustaining injury by reason of their neglect, but, blending public and private interests, by permitting a recovery in excess of actual damages by way of punitive damages and reasonable attorney's fees. In Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Salmon, 161 Ind. 131, 67 N. E. 918, a statute allowed an owner to fence a railroad right of way where the railroad company refused on proper notice to do so, and to recover the cost, with reasonable attorney fee. It was held that the Legislature had the right, in the exercise of its police powers, to prescribe this duty and impose penalties for failure to perform, in shape of double actual damages, double costs, attorney fee, and absolute liability in case of injury to animals. The court said that the attorney fee was in the nature of a penalty for damages imposed by the Legislature as a punishment for the neglect and willful failure of the railroad company to erect said fence as required by the statute and to compel it to construct the same. See, also, Humes v. Railway Co., 82 Mo. 221, 52 Am. Rep. 369; Perkins v. St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Mo. 52, 15 S. W. 320, 11 L. R. A. 426; Peoria, etc., Ry. Co. v. Duggan, 109 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619; Dow v. Beidelman, 49 Ark. 455, 5 S. W. 718, in which the attorney fee provision was upheld as a part of the penalty imposed for noncompliance with the duty imposed; Jacksonville, etc., Ry. Co. v. Prior, 34 Fla. 271, 15 South. 760; note to Dell v. Marvin, 79 Am. St. Rep. 178.

More closely in point, but depending on the same general principle, are decisions upholding provisions for attorney's fees in actions to recover taxes, the validity of which has apparently never been doubted by the courts. In People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 332, 76 Am. Dec. 521, an action for the recovery of taxes, it was held that a provision of a statute compelling a party delinquent in payment of taxes, if sued, to pay costs and a percentage by way of an attorney fee in addition to the tax, was not unconstitutional. In State v. Kerr, 8 Mo. App. 125, such a provision was upheld; the court saying that it was purely remedial, and stands upon a like footing with any other provision for compelling the delinquent to bear the expenses incident to an enforcement of the state's claim for taxes. See, also, U. S. Electric, etc., Co. v. State, 79 Md. 63, 72, 28 Atl. 768. It is the legal duty of every person liable for taxes to pay the same when due, and the power of the state to impose upon the tax payer penalties for noncompliance with this duty, and such costs as are reasonably incurred in the enforcement of the same, including reasonable attorney's fees, cannot be doubted.

There is no distinction in principle in this regard between ordinary taxes and local assessments for improvements under such statutes as our street improvement act. The assessment, it is true, is one in favor of the contractor to whom the contract for the improvement has been let by the public authorities, but it is one laid by virtue of the power of the state to tax, and the contractor may properly be regarded as the agent of the state in the matter of the enforcement of the tax against the assessed property. The obligation resting on the property assessed to answer for this tax is as clear and positive as is the duty of a taxpayer to pay the ordinary tax. The nature of the proceedings is such that the expense of collecting the tax on property delinquent, if not recoverable against such property in the proceeding to enforce the tax, would fall in part on those who voluntarily pay their assessments, since contractors in bidding upon street work would be compelled to include in their estimates an additional amount sufficient to indemnify them against the probable further expense in this regard. Such expense should equitably be borne only by the property as to which such proceedings are rendered necessary by the delinquency of the owners. It would seem that the Legislature should have the power to provide for the payment of such additional expense by the property whose owners are responsible therefor. While the precise question has not been presented for determination many times, such rulings as have been made sustain the validity of such a provision. It is declared in Page & Jones, Taxation by Assessment, that if the statute so provides a penalty may be charged for failure to pay an assessment when due, and an attorney fee may be recovered in a suit to enforce an assessment. Sections 108, 1109, and 1110. The question was determined by the Supreme Court of Indiana in favor of such a provision for attorney's fees in Brown v. Central Bermudez Co., 162 Ind. 452, 69 N. E. 150; the court saying in reply to a claim that the provision was unconstitutional: "A street assessment is laid by virtue of the power of the state to tax, and we think that a statute providing for the allowance of an attorney's fee on foreclosure in such case can be upheld on the ground that the state may provide for a penalty if the delay of the property owner to discharge such obligation renders it necessary to commence suit. The enactment upon the subject may be compared to the provisions of statutes made for the benefit of purchasers at tax sales." See, also, Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Taber, 168 Ind. 419, 422, 77 N. E. 741.

We are of the opinion that the provision for an attorney fee in this class of cases is not in violation of any constitutional provision, federal or state, and that the judgment is erroneous in not including the allowance of $15 asked by plaintiff thereunder.

So much of the judgment of the court below as refuses plaintiff an allowance for attorney fee is reversed, with directions to the court below to modify its judgment by incorporating a provision allowing such a fee as provided by the statute.

ROSS v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO.

(L. A. 2,488.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 13, 1910.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 469*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — INTERSECTIONS — ASSESSMENT OF CORNER LOTS—VALIDITY.

The Vrooman act (St. 1885, c. 153, § 7, subd. 3), authorizing assessment of the cost of street intersections on corner lots in accordance with their frontage on both streets, is constitutional and valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1113–1117; Dec. Dig. § 469.*]

L. L. Boone, for appellant. H. E. Doolittle and E. S. Torrance, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action for the cancellation of a street assessment. The judgment was entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint.

Two of the appellant's objections to the proceedings are answered by a reference to Gay v. Engebretsen (L. A. No. 2,455) 109 Pac. 876, where we held the same points to be without merit.

An additional question is here presented. The court, on motion of the defendant, struck from the complaint certain allegations relative to the method of computing the assessments. The work covered by the contract consisted of paving Seventh street from the south line of B street to the north line of L street. In this distance there were various intersections of cross-streets, among others I street. Plaintiff was the owner of a corner lot, having a frontage of 50 feet on Seventh street, and 100 feet on I street. The matter stricken out consisted of averments that the superintendent, in making the assessments, had made the same in accordance with the frontage of the lots on Seventh street, except in the case of intersections, for which he had assessed corner lots in accordance with their frontages on both Seventh street and the cross-street, while inside lots were assessed only on the basis of frontage on Seventh street.

That this method was the one prescribed by the Vrooman act (St. 1885, p. 152, § 7, subd. 3) is not disputed. It is claimed, however, that the statutory provision for assessing intersections is in violation of the Constitution. The contention does not appeal to us as tenable. There can no longer be, in this state, any question of the validity of the general method provided by the Vrooman act for assessing property for street improvements according to the frontage of the property on the line of the improvement. Hadley v. Dague, 130 Cal. 207, 62 Pac. 500; Duncan v. Ramish, 142 Cal. 686, 76 Pac. 661. Where the work consists of an intersection of two main streets, the act assesses the cost "at a uniform rate per front foot of the quarter blocks * * * adjoining and cornering upon the crossings." There is neither inequality nor injustice in this. The result is, no doubt, to put a heavier burden upon corner lots than upon inside lots. But the burden is merely proportionate to the benefit resulting from the improvement. The Legislature has, in effect, declared that the improvement of the crossing of two streets benefits the property fronting on each of such streets for one-half of the distance from the intersection to the next main street. Section 34, subd. 12. There is thus created an assessment district, and every lot within this district is assessed in proportion to its frontage. A corner lot pays more because it is doubly benefited. The crossing may reasonably be regarded as a part of each of the intersecting streets. Its improvement is a benefit to the land fronting on each. The owner of the corner lot is, therefore, deprived of no constitutional right when the Legislature provides that his property shall be assessed according to its combined frontage on the two streets.

Action by Francisco Estudillo and another against Security Loan & Trust Company of Southern California and another. From orders made after judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. F. Conroy, for appellants. E. W. Freeman and John G. North, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. A judgment in favor of defendants, entered upon the sustaining of their demurrer to the complaint, was reversed by this court. Estudillo v. Security L. & T. Co., 149 Cal. 556, 87 Pac. 19. Upon the return of the cause to the lower court an answer was filed and a trial had, resulting in a second judgment for the defendants. The plaintiffs appeal from three orders made after this judgment.

The respondents make a preliminary objection to a consideration of the appeals on the ground of the alleged insufficiency of the record on appeal. An examination of this point is unnecessary, as we have reached the conclusion that the orders appealed from may be sustained on the merits.

The nature of the case is set forth, in substance, in our opinion on the former appeal. The action was pending in Riverside county. After the issues had been framed the plaintiffs employed, as one of their attorneys, a gentleman related to the judge of that county in such manner as to disqualify the latter. Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 2. Said judge thereupon requested Hon. Frank F. Oster, judge of the superior court of San Bernardino county, to try the action. Judge Oster came to Riverside on February 5, 1907, called the case for trial, heard the testimony offered by the respective parties, and, after ordering the cause submitted on briefs to be filed, returned to his home in San Bernardino. On April 9, 1907, he signed, at San Bernardino, written findings of fact and conclusions of law, with an order that judgment be entered in accordance therewith. These papers he sent to the clerk of the superior court of Riverside county, with directions to file the same. The clerk followed such directions, and, on April 19, 1907, entered judgment in favor of defendants, in accordance with the conclusions of law. Judge Oster was not within the county of Riverside on the 9th day of April, when he signed the findings, nor on the 19th day of April, when judgment was entered. Subsequently the plaintiffs moved to strike from the files the findings of fact and conclusions of law, and to vacate the judgment entered thereon. The motion was denied. One of the appeals now before us is an appeal from this order denying the motion to vacate the judgment. (There appears to be no appeal from that part of the order refusing to strike the findings and conclusions from the files.)

The argument in support of this appeal is that the rendition of judgment is a judicial act; that such judgment must be rendered by a court, and not by a judge acting out of court, and more particularly outside of the territorial jurisdiction for which the court is organized. It would be of little avail to analyze these propositions, or to undertake to decide, as an original question, how far they are applicable to the facts before us. This court has, on two occasions, upheld the validity of judgments ordered and entered under circumstances precisely like those here presented. In Comstock Q. M. Co. v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 625, a judge of the superior court of Monterey county, having been called in by a disqualified judge to hear and determine an action pending in the superior court of Santa Cruz county, heard the cause in said Santa Cruz county. He then returned to his own county of Monterey, and there prepared and signed findings of fact and conclusions of law, and ordered judgment to be entered thereon against the defendant. Said findings and order were transmitted to the clerk of the superior court of Santa Cruz county, who filed them and entered judgment accordingly. On defendant's application to this court for a writ of certiorari to review and annul the judgment, the court said: "The jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine the case is not doubted, but it is claimed that the hearing and determination should have been in the county in which the action was pending. This may and must be conceded, we think, but the cause was not determined until the findings and order for judgment were filed with the clerk of the superior court of Santa Cruz county. It was not the signing, but filing of the findings and order for judgment that determined the action. We are quite confident that there is no law that requires a judge to deliberate upon a case or to prepare his findings and order for judgment in the county in which the cause is pending. If there is not, it follows that the proceedings of the court below should be affirmed." In Walter v. Merced Academy Ass'n, 126 Cal. 582, 59 Pac. 136, there was an appeal from a judgment entered under conditions identical with those existing in the Comstock Case and here. The judgment was affirmed, the court saying that "there was no irregularity in the trial judge making and signing the decision and decree in Stanislaus county. Until the decision and decree were filed by the clerk in Merced county they were not in force."

In the first of these cases it was held that a judgment like the one here under consideration was not void, as being without or beyond the jurisdiction of the court in which the action was pending. In the second, the holding was that the judgment was not even erroneous or irregular, and could not be successfully assailed on direct appeal. It follows that the trial court did not err in refusing to vacate the judgment in the case at bar.

Another of the appeals is from an order refusing a change of venue. The motion to this end was made after the trial and judgment, and pending proceedings on motion for a new trial. It was based upon the alleged bias and prejudice of Judge Oster. We do not deem it necessary to set forth the averments of the affidavits upon which plaintiffs relied to support this motion. If they contained any statements tending to show bias on the part of the judge, these statements were fully met by counteraffidavits. The finding of the trial judge on conflicting affidavits is conclusive on appeal, even though the question in controversy be the disqualification of the judge himself. Swan v. Talbot, 152 Cal. 142, 94 Pac. 238, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066. The uncontradicted matter consisted merely of a recital of the proceedings prior to and during the trial, in the course of which Judge Oster made a number of rulings adversely to the plaintiff's contentions. We are not prepared to concede that all or any of these rulings were erroneous. But if it be assumed that in each of them the trial court committed error, that fact alone would not be sufficient to show bias on his part. The record is devoid of the slightest indication that Judge Oster had any relations, outside of the trial, with any of the parties, that he entertained any feelings of hostility or friendship toward any of them, or that he had, except in the course of orderly judicial procedure, given utterance to any expressions concerning the merits of the case. The showing was entirely insufficient to require the granting of the motion.

The third appeal is from the order denying a new trial. It appears from the bill of exceptions (which was apparently intended to set forth all the proceedings subsequent to judgment in the court below), that the plaintiffs prepared a proposed statement to be used on motion for new trial, and that the trial court, sustaining the objection of the defendants, refused to settle the statement. The appellants argue that this was error. But if it was, the remedy obviously is by proper proceedings to compel the settlement, not by appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial stated that the motion would be made "upon a statement of the case, upon the minutes of the court, upon the pleadings and papers filed in said cause, and upon affidavits hereafter to be prepared and filed." If the motion, notwithstanding the attempt to prepare a statement in advance, be regarded as made on the minutes of the court, the bill of exceptions may, perhaps, be treated as a statement "subsequently prepared," as provided by section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But where the motion is on the minutes of the court, the notice of motion must specify the particulars in which the evidence is insufficient, if such insufficiency be a ground of motion, and must specify the particular errors of law upon which the moving party will rely. Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 4. The notice given by the plaintiffs here contained no specification of insufficiency of evidence. The only error of law assigned in the notice was the refusal of the court to grant plaintiffs' demand for a trial by jury. The complaint sought to set aside a foreclosure sale for fraud. The answer denied the allegations of fraud. At the trial the court announced that both legal and equitable issues were involved, and denied the demand for a jury trial so far as the equitable issues were concerned, declaring, at the same time, that the denial was without prejudice to the right of plaintiffs to have a trial by jury of the legal issues, if there appeared to be any occasion for a trial of such issues after decision of the equitable issues. It then proceeded to try, without a jury, the issues of fraud raised by the pleadings, and found in favor of defendants on these issues. We see no error in this. It is not disputed that an attack upon judicial proceedings for fraud presents a case appealing to the equity side of the court. Such a case is not one which the parties are, of right, entitled to have tried by a jury. Where an action involves both legal and equitable issues, "the former are ordinarily triable by the court and the latter by the jury." 24 Cyc. 113. The court below proceeded in accordance with this rule.

The record does not sustain the contention that the court, in making its findings, disposed of legal issues. A reading of the findings, in connection with the pleadings, the conclusions of law, and the decree, shows clearly that the court undertook to dispose of the equitable issues alone. But if there were findings on other issues, the error, assuming it to have been one that could be raised on the specifications of the notice, was not prejudicial. The plaintiffs, having failed to establish their equitable grounds for setting the sale aside, were not entitled to any relief, and judgment in favor of the defendants necessarily followed, regardless of any legal issues presented. The motion for new trial was therefore properly denied.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.

SHAW, J. I concur. I think, however, that the opinion in Comstock v. Superior Court, 57 Cal. 625, evades the main point of the proposition involved in the case, and that it would be difficult to meet the objection on logical grounds. The objection to a judgment entered by the clerk upon findings prepared and signed by the judge of another county, while absent from the county in which it is entered, and by him sent by mail to such clerk without such judge being in bodily presence in that county is not that such judge has deliberated upon the case, has prepared and signed his findings and his order for judgment, while absent from the county, for all this could undoubtedly be done anywhere without affecting the validity of the judgment, if the judgment was afterwards lawfully rendered in the county in which the court has its situs. The objection is that there can be no court unless there is a judge; that there is no court present in the county when such judgment is rendered; that there can be no judgment rendered where there is no court to render it; and that, in effect, the decision in that case holds that a valid judgment, in a case where evidence has been received by a judge, may be given by the clerk, who is not invested with judicial power. But, inasmuch as the question is largely technical and formal, as no mischiefs appear to have resulted from the rule, now established for nearly 30 years, and as the decision has been followed ever since, I deem it unnecessary and unwise to disturb or overrule it.

A request to charge that the jury in determining the weight to be given the testimony of any witness might consider, among other things, "the motive actuating the witness in testifying," was substantially covered by a charge that the jury should take into consideration the character of any witness, his relation to the case, his interest in the case, if any, and his bias or prejudice, if any, against either of the parties.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Jamison, Judge.

Fabronio Machuca was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Smyser and O. S. Williams, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy, for the People.

SLOSS, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment imposing upon him a sentence of death after a conviction of murder of the first degree, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Appellant's principal point is that the evidence is insufficient, in that it fails to show the premeditation which is an essential element of the first degree of the crime charged. A very brief summary of some of the testimony introduced by the people will show the contention to be without merit.

The appellant was charged with the murder of Mrs. Refuga Yorba. Mrs. Yorba, together with her son, John, and other members of her family, was living in a five-room cottage. She occupied a room in the front of the cottage, and John a room in the rear. At about midnight on the 18th day of August, 1908, John Varela, who had retired, was awakened by hearing his mother cry "Help, help, they are killing me." He jumped out of bed, and, taking a revolver, ran out of the house at the rear and around to the front. There he saw the defendant, Machuca. John Varela then walked into the house and entered his mother's room. According to his testimony, "she had cuts all over her and full of blood. * * * She was telling me that Fabronio Machuca had cut her up and tried to kill her." Leaving his mother, John came out of the house and struck Machuca. A desperate fight ensued, Machuca coming at Varela with a knife and the latter firing a shot from his revolver, and then continuing the combat with his fists. While the two were struggling, Mrs. Yorba came out, and the defendant cut her with his knife. At this point Willie Varela, another son of deceased, came upon the scene. He seized Machuca, and helped Mrs. Yorba and John to their feet. Machuca broke away and, running after Mrs. Yorba, commenced cutting her again. Willie shot him, but he continued using his knife on Mrs. Yorba "until he killed her." Willie shot again, and overpowered Machuca. The testimony of Willie Varela corroborated that of John in many of its main features. There was also evidence that the defendant had, on the day prior to the killing, made a statement that the jury might fairly have interpreted as constituting a threat against the life of the deceased. This court has repeatedly declared that the question of the degree of crime is exclusively for the jury, and that their determination will not be disturbed when there is any evidence to support it. People v. Bowman, 81 Cal. 566, 22 Pac. 917; People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26; People v. Worthington, 122 Cal. 583, 55 Pac. 396; People v. Mahatch, 148 Cal. 200, 82 Pac. 779. Even if we discard all consideration of what may have occurred in the house before the arrival of John Varela, the jury had a perfect right to conclude that the later acts of the defendant showed a fixed and deliberate intent on his part to take the life of the deceased. It is not necessary that there should be express evidence of a deliberate purpose to kill. "It could be inferred from proof of such facts and circumstances in the case as would reasonably warrant an inference of its existence." People v. Mahatch, supra. That the deliberation which must precede the killing in order to make the murder one of the first degree need not have existed for any given length of time is thoroughly settled. People v. Bealoba, 17 Cal. 389; People v. Sanchez, 24 Cal. 17; People v. Hunt, 59 Cal. 430; People v. Mahatch, supra. This being so, it cannot be doubted that the evidence here introduced fully justified the jury in finding the killing to have been deliberate and premeditated. There was, to be sure, the testimony of the defendant and other witnesses contradicting the showing made by the prosecution, but it cannot be necessary to cite any authority to the effect that the action of the jury in accepting as true either of two conflicting statements presents no ground for the reviewing power of the appellate court.

Complaint is made of the refusal of the court to give a requested instruction telling the jury that they had the right, in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of any witness, to consider, among other things, "the motive actuating the witness in testifying." We think the substance of the desired direction was covered by the charge of the court that the jury should take into consideration the character of any witness, his relation to the case, his interest in the case, if any, his bias or prejudice, if any, against either of the parties. While the word "motive" was not used, a fair consideration of testimony in the light of a witness' character, his relation to or interest in the case, and his bias as between the parties, could hardly exclude from view any motive affecting the credibility of the testimony. The difference between the instruction requested and the one given is verbal, rather than real. Besides, we think the declaration that the value of testimony may be affected by evidence of a motive which would naturally tend to induce the statement of an untruth (Code Civ. Proc. § 1487) is the enunciation of a proposition which must be apparent to every person of common intelligence and experience. The refusal to give to the jury a charge embodying such a "commonplace" furnishes no ground for reversal. People v. Newcomer, 118 Cal. 263, 50 Pac. 405; People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 Pac. 404; People v. Wong Bin, 139 Cal. 65, 72 Pac. 505.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, J. In concurring in the judgment, I deem it proper to say that the evidence contained in the record, upon which the finding as to premeditation essential to sustain a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree must depend, is exceedingly unsatisfactory to my mind. But, as shown in the opinion, there was some substantial evidence which, if believed by the jury and trial judge, would warrant the verdict, and that being the case an appellate court is not warranted in setting aside the verdict. The evidence opposed to the theory sustained by the verdict is, of course, not set forth in the opinion, but to my mind it is of such a nature as to render the evidence relied on by the prosecution very unsatisfactory, and to give rise to the most serious doubt of the guilt of the defendant of murder in the first degree.

I concur: BEATTY, C. J.

WOEHRLE v. CANCLINI. (Sac. 1,816.)

1. BANKRUPTCY (§ 424*)—DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY—JUDGMENT FOR WILLFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURIES.

A judgment for willful and malicious injuries inflicted by defendant on plaintiff is a debt constituting a liability within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428), as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1310]), providing that a discharge in bankruptcy does not release a bankrupt from liabilities for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, and defendant's discharge in bankruptcy does not release him from liability.

2. JUDGMENT (§ 582*)—MERGER OF LIABILITY IN JUDGMENT.

3. BANKRUPTCY (§§ 423, 424*)—DISCHARGE IN BANKRUPTCY—EFFECT—"LIABILITY."

The term "liability" generally includes every kind of legal obligation and is used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428), as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1310]), providing that a discharge in bankruptcy releases a bankrupt from his debts, except such as are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or representations or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, as including every obligation to pay money whether evidenced by judgment or not, and every unsatisfied judgment is a liability.

The purpose of the amendment of Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 798 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1310) to Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428), providing that a discharge in bankruptcy releases the bankrupt from his provable debts, except such as are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or misrepresentations or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, is not to remove liabilities evidenced by judgment from the excepted classes, but to add thereto liabilities so arising that had not been put into the form of judgments.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by George Woehrle against Carlo Canclini. From an order denying a motion to recall and perpetually stay an execution issued on the judgment for plaintiff and dissolving a restraining order previously made, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Webster & Webster, for appellant. C. W. Miller, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion to recall and perpetually stay an execution issued on the judgment in the above-entitled action, and dissolving a restraining order theretofore made.

On October 28, 1908, plaintiff recovered a judgment against defendant in the sum of $800 and costs for "willful and malicious injuries inflicted by the defendant upon the plaintiff." On March 18, 1909, defendant was adjudicated a bankrupt in proceedings instituted in the United States district court for the Northern district of California, and thereafter, on June 12, 1909, an order was made by said court discharging defendant from all his debts. The judgment remaining unsatisfied, on November 9, 1909, the execution in question was issued and levy made thereunder. The question is whether the effect of the discharge in bankruptcy was to release defendant from this judgment. Section 17 of the Bankrupt Act of 1898 (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3428]), as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 798 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1310]), enumerating debts not affected by a discharge given thereunder, provides: "A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts except such as (1) are due as a tax * * *; (2) are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another. * * *" The sole question presented by appellant is whether a judgment for damages for willful and malicious injuries inflicted by the judgment debtor is a debt constituting a liability for such injuries within the meaning of that word as used in the second subdivision of section 17, quoted above.

Clearly this question must be answered in the affirmative. A judgment is but the original debt or liability in a new form (see Carit v. Williams, 74 Cal. 183, 185, 15 Pac. 751). In Boynton v. Ball, 121 U. S. 457, 7 Sup. Ct. 981, 30 L. Ed. 985, the question was presented whether a debt existing and provable in a bankruptcy proceeding is the same debt when evidenced by a judgment thereafter obtained thereon, and, the court said: "Notwithstanding the change in the form from that of a simple contract debt, or unliquidated claim, or whatever its character may have been, by merger into a judgment of a court of record, it still remains the same debt on which the action was brought in the state court and the existence of which was provable in bankruptcy." See also Carit v. Williams, supra. Although the liability for a willful and malicious injury has been reduced to judgment, we have the same liability in a new form, judicially declared and defined. The term "liability" is one of the broadest import, generally including every kind of legal obligation, and was undoubtedly used in the bankrupt act as including every obligation to pay money, whether evidenced by judgment or not. While all liabilities are not evidenced by judgment, every unsatisfied judgment is necessarily a liability. That there may be a liability within the meaning of the act so evidenced by judgment is shown by the enumeration therein of the classes of debts which may be proved, one of which is "a fixed liability as evidenced by a judgment," subdivision 1, § 63. It certainly would be a somewhat absurd situation if the person having a claim for such willful and malicious injuries who had procured a legal adjudication thereof occupied a worse position under the bankrupt act, than one who had not procured such a judgment. The act is susceptible of no such construction.

Prior to the amendment of 1903, subdivision 2 of section 17 embraced only such provable debts as "are judgments in actions for frauds * * * or * * * for willful and malicious injuries to the property and person of another." Under this, such liabilities as were not evidenced by judgment were not excepted from the effect of a discharge, while those evidenced by judgment were excepted. The purpose of the amendment of 1903 was clearly not to remove the liabilities so evidenced from the excepted classes, but to add thereto the liabilities so arising that had not been put into the form of judgments. The effect of the amendment is stated in Collier on Bankruptcy (6th Ed.) at page 223, substantially as follows: Before the amendment, a bankrupt might have been released from such a liability, unless a judgment therefor had been rendered. Under the present law he will not be released simply because no judgment has been rendered.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

HOWARD v. GALBRAITH. (Civ. 765.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 9, 1910. Rehearing Denied June 8, 1910; denied by Supreme Court July 7, 1910.)

1. Sales (§ 91*)—Contracts—"Offer and Refusal."

A statement by a seller contracting to repurchase at the expiration of one year on the buyer desiring it, made before the expiration of the year in response to the buyer's demand to repurchase that he could not do it, is the legal equivalent of an "offer and refusal" within Civ. Code, § 1515, providing that a refusal to accept performance made before an offer thereof is equivalent to an offer and refusal, unless before performance is actually due he gives notice of his willingness to accept it, and the seller desiring to hold plaintiff to performance must show that prior to the expiration of the year he expressed a willingness to repurchase, and, unless the statement is withdrawn before the expiration of the year, the buyer need not make demand and offer at the exact expiration of the year.

2. Sales (§ 91*)—Contracts—Burden of Proof.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1515, 1440, providing that, where a party to an obligation gives notice to another before the latter's default that he will not perform, the latter may enforce the obligation without previously performing any conditions on his part, etc., a seller who contracting to repurchase at the expiration of one year if the buyer so desired, and who notified the buyer before the expiration of the year that he could not repurchase, had the burden of showing that before the expiration of the year he expressed a willingness to carry out the contract before he could hold the buyer to an exact performance.

3. SALES (§ 91*) — CONTRACTS — RIGHTS OF BUYER.

Where such notice was given in response to the buyer's demand to repurchase, the buyer did not prejudice his right of action by renewing his demand and notifying the seller to repurchase after the expiration of the year, for the renewal of the notice and demand was but a further notice and demand after the seller was in default, and not an offer of performance within Civ. Code, § 1490, providing that, where an obligation fixes a time for its performance, an offer of performance must be made at that time, and not before or afterwards.

4. SALES (§ 91*)—CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE.

The seller was not in default until the buyer notified him of his desire to sell after the year expired, and this he could do as authorized by Civ. Code, § 1491, within a reasonable time thereafter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George E. Church, Judge.

TAGGART, J. Action to recover on an agreement to purchase mining stock. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from judgment and order denying motion for a new trial.

On May 2, 1907, plaintiff purchased 550 shares of the capital stock of the Greene Gold Silver Company upon the guaranty and agreement of defendant that the latter would take said shares of stock off of plaintiff's hands at the expiration of one year from the date of said purchase at the price paid for them by plaintiff. Later, to wit, on May 6, 1907, defendant in a letter written to plaintiff confirmed this agreement in the following words: "Remember I guaranteed to take your stock off of your hands at the expiration of one year for the amount you paid for it, providing you desire to sell." Plaintiff paid $928.90 for the stock, and testified that he notified defendant on two or three occasions about one year after his purchase of the stock that he desired to sell and demanded that defendant perform his part of the agreement. The first occasion was by telephone a short time prior to the expiration of the year; the next time was by letter about the end of the year, to which plaintiff received no reply, and a letter under date of July 17, 1908, written by plaintiff's attorney, making the demand for him and tendering the certificates of stock representing the shares. The telephone demand prior to the expiration of the year and the reply thereto, as stated by plaintiff, were as follows: "Well, I told him my note was coming due and that I would expect him to take the stock and pay me what was agreed. He said in reply that he couldn't do it—wasn't in a position to do it. He made no other excuse or reason for not buying it at that time." The letter by which the second demand was made was not produced, and no copy thereof introduced; the contents of it were not proven, and defendant testified he never received it. Plaintiff failed to fix the date of its mailing any more definitely than that it was "just about the end of the year." The certificates of stock were deposited in court by plaintiff.

It is urged by appellant that the finding of the court to the effect that the plaintiff notified the defendant of his desire to dispose of the stock, demanded that the defendant perform his agreement, and offered to deliver the stock to defendant, at the expiration of one year from the date of said purchase, is not supported by the evidence. Invoking section 1490 of the Civil Code and Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 20, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, he contends that the obligation relied on fixes a time for its performance, and that the testimony of plaintiff shows that he made the tender and demand both before and after, but not at, the expiration of the year. If the contract be one in which the exact time is to be considered, the words "at the expiration of one year" should be interpreted to mean one year from May 2, 1907, the date of the purchase of the stock, rather than from May 6, 1907, the date of the letter confirming the agreement, which is alleged in the complaint to be the date of demand and tender made. If we were to regard the exact limitation of one year as a proper construction of the agreement, this variance would be immaterial, as the evidence discloses a refusal to perform by the defendant by his answer to the telephone notice given by plaintiff. This was the legal equivalent of an offer and refusal, and it was not withdrawn by defendant prior to the date when performance was due. Section 1515, Civ. Code. This telephone conversation is located by plaintiff at "about," but "prior" to, the expiration of the year, and plaintiff notified defendant that he would expect him to take the stock as agreed, and defendant replied that he could not do it, and there is no evidence that he ever notified plaintiff that his inability or indisposition to comply with his agreement was removed at any time prior to the date of performance. Plaintiff was thereby released from the requirement that he make demand and offer at the exact date, if such demand and offer were otherwise necessary. This statement that he could not and would not be able to meet his obligation naturally tended to induce plaintiff to omit performance, as it notified him in advance that defendant could not take the stock at the expiration of the year, even though a tender was made and the plaintiff expected him to do so. After he had so stated, the burden was upon the defendant to show that prior to the time he expressed a willingness to carry out the contract, if he wished to hold plaintiff to an exact performance. Sections 1515, 1440, Civ. Code.

The decisions of the Supreme Court in Hanson v. Slaven, 98 Cal. 379, 33 Pac. 266, and Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, are not inconsistent with this view. Further than this, the contract here introduced shows upon its face that it was not one to deliver stock within a specified time or at a specified date at a price named. The plaintiff was induced by defendant to purchase the stock upon the representation that it would become valuable as an investment. The letter of May 6th stated: "The Greene Gold Silver is the largest mining proposition in the world and whatever report is signed by W. C. Greene is true. It is my opinion inside of three years that stock will be selling at not less than twenty-five dollars for share." While this letter was written after the purchase, it was in effect but a reaffirmance of the statements testified to by the plaintiff as made to him by defendant before the stock was bought. The plaintiff testified: "I knew nothing of this company until the defendant spoke of it. * * * Dr. Galbraith advised me to purchase stock in this company saying that he believed it to be a first-class investment. * * * He telegraphed me * * * to buy all the Greene Gold and Silver. I told him that if I bought stock I would have to borrow some money to buy it, and he said very well, he would advise me to do it, and, furthermore, that he would agree that after a year, if I was not satisfied with the stock, he would take it off my hands at exactly what I paid for it." In effect, the contract was that plaintiff was to purchase the stock as an investment, upon defendant's representations, and, if after a year had elapsed plaintiff was not satisfied with the investment, defendant would take the stock off his hands at the price paid. In other words, plaintiff had no cause of action against defendant until he awaited the passage of the year and then notified defendant that he desired to sell. Plaintiff did not prejudice his right of action by renewing his demand and notifying defendant that he desired to sell the stock after being told by defendant, before the year expired, that he could not—would not be in a position to take the stock at the exact expiration of the year. The renewal of the notice and demand was not an offer of performance after a specified time fixed therefor, within the meaning of section 1490 of the Civil Code, but a further notice and demand, after defendant was in default, upon which to predicate his action. The defendant was not in default until plaintiff notified him of his desire to sell after the year expired. This he might do within a reasonable time thereafter. Section 1491, Civ. Code.

While the trial court at one time, upon the objection of defendant, and the theory that the letter embodied the contract, somewhat curtailed the introduction of evidence by plaintiff as to the representations made by defendant to induce plaintiff to purchase the stock, nevertheless there is abundant evidence to sustain the findings of the court that representations were made by defendant for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to buy the stock, and, also, that the plaintiff relied upon the promise and agreement of defendant and was induced thereby to purchase the stock. There is no contention that appellant was in any way misled or surprised by this ruling of the court, and no prejudice to him therefrom can be presumed.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Action by A. M. Sheakley against T. A. Nelson. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order denying new trial affirmed.

Paul McDonald, H. E. Monroe, and A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Clary & Louttit and Thos. S. Louttit, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The complaint sets forth a written contract, relating to the transfer of certain shares of the capital stock of the Hercules Manufacturing Company, a corporation, by plaintiff to defendant, the plaintiff claiming that the shares were merely a pledge to secure the payment of money advanced by defendant to pay certain assessments on said shares, the defendant claiming in his answer that the intention of the contract was to effect a sale and praying its reformation so that it would correctly express such intention. The court found the facts to be in accordance with defendant's contention and rendered judgment against plaintiff. Judgment was made and entered March 23, 1907, and plaintiff appealed therefrom on April 6, 1909, more than two years after the entry thereof. The appeal from the judgment cannot be considered and may be dismissed. Brownlee v. Reiner, 147 Cal. 641, 82 Pac. 324.

On the appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, neither the sufficiency of the pleadings nor the findings in support of the judgment can be considered. Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828; Holmes v. Warren, 145 Cal. 457, 78 Pac. 954.

No errors of law are pointed out in appellant's brief and there remains only the inquiry, Did the evidence support the findings?

The transaction, as found by the court, briefly stated, was as follows: On April 8, 1903, plaintiff was the owner of 14,090 shares of the capital stock of the Hercules Manufacturing Company, and, on that day, plaintiff sold and transferred the same to defendant for the consideration of $1,500; that on said day plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement, the intention of which, through mutual mistake, was not truly expressed; "that it was the intention of said plaintiff and said defendant to enter into an agreement of sale of said 14,090 shares of the capital stock of the Hercules Manufacturing Company, a corporation, and it was the intention of said plaintiff and said defendant to enter into an agreement under the terms of which defendant, as an additional consideration to him moving from said plaintiff for the transfer and sale by plaintiff to defendant of said 14,090 shares of said stock, was to pay for said plaintiff to said Hercules Manufacturing Company, a corporation, in addition to said sum of $1,500, on account of any subsequent assessment that might be levied against the stock of said plaintiff, the sum of $1,000."

The agreement was reformed to express what the evidence tended to show was the intention of the parties. In the written contract the words "and sell" were inserted by the court after the word "transfer." After the provision, "and the said T. A. Nelson will pay such assessments as the stock of said A. M. Sheakley may be charged with, provided that the total sum so paid shall not exceed $2,500," there was added by the court, "including the sum of $1,500 agreed to be advanced for the payment of the assessment already advanced." These changes conformed to the evidence which was explanatory of what the parties meant by the language used in the contract, when first written, rather than as introducing any new feature. It was further found that said shares were not intended as security for the repayment by plaintiff to defendant of the sum of $1,500, or any other sum, as alleged in the complaint, and that defendant did not loan to plaintiff nor did plaintiff borrow from defendant said sum, or any other sum.

The evidence is in sharp conflict, but there is sufficient to support the findings. Our attention is called to certain phases of the transaction as disclosed by the testimony of the witnesses and the records of the corporation, from which it is contended by appellant that the findings of fact should have been favorable to his contention. But these matters rest chiefly upon the details of the transaction and subsequent happenings between the parties, and their mutual relation to the corporation, as given by witnesses whose credibility was a matter to be determined exclusively by the trial judge. Appellant points out no fact or circumstance, upon which the findings support respondent's view of the transaction, which can be said to be inherently or at all improbable or unreliable, or which would justify an appellate tribunal in reaching a conclusion from the facts different from that arrived at by the learned trial judge.

In a word, the evidence showed that plaintiff was owner of 37,544 shares of the corporation; an assessment had been made which called for a payment by plaintiff of $1,500 on plaintiff's shares; he found himself unable to meet the assessment and applied to defendant for relief; defendant agreed to purchase 14,090 of plaintiff's shares and pay this assessment; the shares were accordingly transferred to defendant; after this agreement was made plaintiff became fearful that another assessment would be made and defendant agreed to meet plaintiff's part of it, not to exceed $1,000 additional to the $1,500 already agreed to be paid by him. It appeared that defendant was secretary of the company and was familiar with its affairs and did not believe that another assessment would be made, but was willing, to allay plaintiff's fears, to take the chance. The explanation made by defendant and his account of the transaction, which was very fully given, was accepted by the court, and we find nothing in the record to discredit the defendant's narrative of the facts thus accepted.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed, and the order denying new trial affirmed.

DAVILA v. HEATH (BERKELEY FARM CREAMERY CO., Intervener). (Civ. 594.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1910.)

1. RECEIVERS (§ 42*)—EX PARTE APPLICATION —BOND OF APPLICANT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 566, as amended by St. 1907, c. 374, providing that the court before appointing a receiver on an ex parte application "must require from the applicant an undertaking," the court on an ex parte application for the appointment of a receiver must require the applicant to give an undertaking, and where that is not done the appointment is void.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 151*)—PARTIES AGGRIEVED.

A defendant shown by the complaint to be a necessary party may appeal from an order appointing a receiver on plaintiff's ex parte application, though the sworn answer avers that defendant was acting only as agent for an intervener.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Harry A. Melvin, Judge.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in which a partnership relation is averred in the complaint and an accounting is prayed for. Upon the filing of the complaint the court made and entered its order, ex parte, appointing a receiver "upon giving a bond * * * for the faithful performance of his duties as such receiver and upon taking his oath of office in the manner required by law." The complaint was filed August 27, 1908, the order appointing the receiver was made August 31, 1908, and on September 2, 1908, the receiver's bond was approved and filed and his oath of office duly taken. It appears from the clerk's certificate "that no other or further bond or undertaking was ever filed by the receiver in said action or on his behalf, and that no order was ever made by said court fixing the amount of, or requiring from said applicant or plaintiff an undertaking, and that no undertaking was ever filed by or on behalf of said applicant, and that no notice of the hearing of the application for a receiver is on file in this office." Defendant Heath appeals from the order.

Section 566 of the Code of Civil Procedure, among other things, provides as follows: "If a receiver is appointed upon an ex parte application, the court, before making the order, must require from the applicant an undertaking, with sufficient sureties, in an amount to be fixed by the court, to the effect that the applicant will pay to the defendant all damages he may sustain by reason of the appointment of such receiver and the entry upon his docket, in case such applicant shall have procured such appointment wrongfully, maliciously, or without sufficient cause; and the court may, in its discretion, at any time after said appointment, require an additional undertaking." This section of the Code, as it then stood, was amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 710), and the word "may" was changed to "must," so that the statute now declares that, if a receiver is appointed upon an ex parte application, "the court, before making the order, must require from the applicant an undertaking," etc. In Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 139, 42 Pac. 561, 563, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice McFarland, observed parenthetically: "We may remark, however, that the appointment of a receiver to take property and business out of the hands of persons in possession and claiming ownership thereof, without requiring a bond from the plaintiff in the action, would in most cases be a gross abuse of discretion." This was said before the statute was amended, and when the requirement that a bond should be given by the applicant before the appointment of a receiver at his instance was in some degree discretionary. The amendment, it seems to us, was intended to take from the court this discretion and make the requirement mandatory, and that noncompliance with the statute would render the appointment void.

Plaintiff has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that defendant is not an aggrieved party. In support of his motion he has attached thereto a copy of defendant's answer, and also the answer of intervener, Berkeley Farm Creamery Company; the latter having been filed September 12, 1908, and the former September 17, 1908, and both some days after the receiver was appointed. The point made by plaintiff is that the sworn answer of defendant avers that the transactions complained of by plaintiff were with the intervener in which defendant was acting only as manager and agent of the creamery company and had no personal interest therein. We cannot assume the truthfulness of the averments either of the complaint or the answer. The issues there presented must be tried. Upon plaintiff's showing defendant is a necessary party to his action. So far as we can now know, the trial may disclose the facts to be as plaintiff avers. Appellant cites Amory v. Amory, 26 Wis. 152, where the appeal was dismissed on the ground here alleged. But in that case the proof that appellant had no interest in the controversy was the decree of a court determining the fact.

It would be strange, indeed, if, in endeavoring to escape the consequences of a possible judgment against him, the defendant makes averments inconsistent with or contradictory of the averments of the complaint, he thereby ceases to be an aggrieved party and deprives himself of the right of appeal. There is no merit in the point.

The order appointing the receiver was unauthorized and is, therefore, reversed.

PEOPLE v. HOWLAND. (Cr. 159.)

1. Homicide (§ 341*)—Appeal—Prejudicial Error Not Apparent.

In absence of evidence in the record, it cannot be presumed that it was prejudicial error to refuse an instruction as to the character of the deceased; it not being erroneous in every conceivable state of facts.

2. Homicide (§ 330*)—Appeal—Review—Presumptions.

In support of a ruling refusing an instruction as to the character of deceased, it must be presumed, in the absence of evidence in the record, that none was introduced in relation thereto.

3. Criminal Law (§ 1122*)—Appeal—Review—Instructions.

Without evidence in the record, the propriety of an instruction that defendant could not justify the killing of deceased under the plea of self-defense, if he himself was the aggressor and precipitated the conflict, cannot be determined.

4. Criminal Law (§§ 656, 761*)—Trial—Instructions — Assumption of Guilt — Expressing Opinion as to Facts.

The trial judge must not, in his charge, or during the trial, directly or indirectly assume the guilt of accused, nor use language from which the jury can legitimately infer what his views are on the issues of fact submitted to them.

5. Homicide (§ 330*)—Appeal—Review—Error Not Apparent—Assumption of Fact.

In the absence of evidence in the record, it cannot be presumed that the use of the word "murder" in a statement in an instruction that "no witness has been produced here who saw the act of murder committed, and hence it is urged for the prisoner that the evidence is only circumstantial," was prejudicial to defendant, as assuming that a murder had been committed, since his defense may have been an alibi, and it may have been admitted that a "murder" was committed.

6. Criminal Law (§§ 763, 764*)—Trial—Instructions—Circumstantial Evidence.

The law declares nothing as to the relative probative force of direct and circumstantial evidence, and the court cannot state to the jury the relative importance of evidence, except as that is settled by some rule of law, and for it to do so is to violate the plain inhibition of Const. art. 6, § 19, that "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1740; Dec. Dig. §§ 763, 764.*]

7. Criminal Law (§ 1172*)—Appeal—Harmless Error—Instructions.

An instruction that circumstantial evidence was not likely to be fabricated, and thus has a great advantage over direct evidence, cannot be accepted as the harmless statement of an inference that the jury was sure to draw.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154–3163; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

8. Criminal Law (§ 807*)—Trial—Argumentative Instructions — Circumstantial Evidence.

An instruction, arguing in support of the strength of a case which relies on circumstantial evidence to convict, was improper in any conceivable state of facts not negatived by the instruction itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1805, 1959, 1960; Dec. Dig. § 807.*]

9. Criminal Law (§ 1163*)—Appeal—Harmless Error—Instructions.

Where an instruction which improperly argued in support of the strength of circumstantial evidence also informed the jury there was no direct evidence, it cannot be assumed the prosecution was based on direct evidence, and the instruction is favorable, rather than prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3096; Dec. Dig. § 1163.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. R. Guy, Judge.

William P. Howland was convicted of murder, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Reversed.

David G. Taylor, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Bebee, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Appellant was informed against for the crime of murder, and upon a plea of "not guilty" was found guilty of murder in the second degree, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state's prison for a term of 18 years. He appealed in open court from the judgment of conviction and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The record on appeal consists of copies of the information, the minutes of the court, the motion for a new trial, the instructions given to the jury, and the instructions requested by the defendant which were refused by the court; but no evidence is brought up, and no application was made to the trial court to have the reporter's notes transcribed. The errors of the trial court which are presented in support of the appeal are the giving of two instructions by the court, on its own motion, relating to "self-defense" and "circumstantial evidence," and designated respectively as instructions E and K, and its refusal to give an instruction No. 20, relating to "the character of the deceased," at the request of the defendant.

It is apparent at once that, in the absence of any evidence, we cannot say that it was prejudicial error to refuse to give the latter instruction, as the propriety of giving or not giving an instruction is to be determined by the evidence in the case, except where it would be erroneous in every conceivable state of facts. People v. Mendenhall, 135 Cal. 347, 67 Pac. 325; People v. Wong Fook Sam, 146 Cal. 115, 79 Pac. 848. For the purpose of supporting the ruling of the court we must presume that no evidence was introduced relating to the character of the deceased.

Instruction E does not declare any rule of law, except that which may be deduced from the last clause, to wit, "that the defendant could not justify the killing of the deceased under the plea of self-defense, if he himself was the aggressor and had precipitated the conflict." The first element in the instruction, based upon the theory that "defendant had invited the deceased into the room or place where the killing occurred," was entirely immaterial. That "he had threatened to kill the deceased or do him some bodily harm" became material only as connected with the facts and circumstances of the killing. Whether or not the defendant was called upon in good faith to decline any further struggle, as contended by appellant, must be determined from the evidence, and there is no evidence before us.

Instruction K is a long, argumentative presentation of the reliable character of circumstantial evidence, when considered in comparison with direct evidence. It goes beyond the instructions considered in People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, 8, 62 Pac. 297, People v. Wilder, 134 Cal. 182, 66 Pac. 228, and People v. Simmons, 7 Cal. App. 559, 95 Pac. 48, cited by the Attorney General, and contains practically all the objectionable comments made by the trial judge in the instruction disapproved in People v. Vereneseneckockockhoff, 129 Cal. 497, 58 Pac. 156, 62 Pac. 111. Appellant contends that the instruction is not only erroneous for the reasons stated in the case last cited, but because of the statement therein that "no witness has been produced here who saw the act of murder committed, and hence it is urged for the prisoner that the evidence is only circumstantial," whereas, in fact, the defendant was himself sworn and testified to the circumstances of the killing, and because the court used the word "murder" instead of "killing" and thereby assumed as a matter of fact that a murder had been committed. The minutes disclose that the defendant was sworn as a witness in his own behalf, but, in the absence of a transcript of the evidence, there is nothing from which it can be ascertained whether or not he testified as to the facts of the killing, and the instruction itself says that there was no eyewitness thereto.

In People v. Besold, 154 Cal. 363, 97 Pac. 871, it was held that it could not be argued that the trial court, by the use of the words, "in determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction," in an instruction given in a case in which the killing was denied by the accused, had assumed, as a fact, that the defendant had in fact done the killing; furthermore, if this language alone was open to such a construction that, taken with the rest of the charge of the court in that case, it could not be said the trial judge thereby conveyed any intimation to the jury that he believed the defendant had done such killing. We do not agree with the Attorney General that this case in any way modifies the rule that the trial judge must not in his charge, or during the trial, directly or indirectly assume the guilt of the accused, nor use any language from which the jury can legitimately infer what the views of the judge are upon the issues of fact submitted to them. People v. Williams, 17 Cal. 142; People v. Messersmith, 61 Cal. 246; People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 442, 67 Pac. 694. In the case before us, owing to the absence of the evidence, we cannot say that the use of the word "murder" prejudiced the defendant, since his defense may have been an alibi, and it may have been admitted that a "murder" was committed.

Instruction K, however, as hereinabove stated, contains all the objectionable features of the instruction considered in People v. Vereneseneckockockhoff, supra It contains the following argumentative language criticised in that case: "Circumstantial evidence has this great advantage, that various circumstances from various sources are not likely to be fabricated. * * * Thanks to a beneficent Providence, the laws of nature and the relation of things to each other are so linked and combined together that a medium of proof is often furnished leading to inferences and conclusions as strong as those arising from direct testimony." The entire instruction of more than four pages, of 30 or more lines each of typewritten matter, when taken together, is an argument in support of the strength of a case which relies upon circumstantial evidence to sustain a conviction. The law declares nothing as to the relative probative force of direct and circumstantial evidence, and the court cannot argue to the jury the relative importance of evidence, except as that is settled by some rule of law. For it to do so is to violate the plain inhibition of section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution that, "judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." The rule adopted by the Supreme Court in dealing with instructions based upon various subdivisions of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, of which it is said that, even though unconstitutional, they "could not possibly have done any harm, for it was merely telling the jury to do certain things which jurors would do without being told" (People v. Newcomer, 118 Cal. 263, 50 Pac. 405; People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 232, 74 Pac. 744; People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 253, 77 Pac. 907; People v. Grill, 151 Cal. 597, 91 Pac. 515) has no application to this instruction. To tell a jury that circumstantial evidence is not likely to be fabricated and thus has a great advantage over direct evidence can hardly be accepted as the statement of an inference that the jury would be sure to draw. This instruction was improper in any conceivable state of facts not negatived by the instruction itself. By it the jury were informed that there was no direct evidence of the transaction, and it cannot therefore be assumed that the case for the prosecution was based upon direct evidence, and that the instruction was favorable, rather than prejudicial to the defendant.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 191*)—PLEADING—NECESSITY FOR TAKING.

Facts showing the necessity for taking property by eminent domain must be proved, but need not be pleaded.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 191*) — RIPARIAN RIGHTS—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint to condemn riparian rights alleged that there was water flowing down the stream in addition to the 5,000 inches appropriated and owned by plaintiff, and it appeared that various defendants had certain riparian rights to all of the waters in the creek, and plaintiff averred the necessity for taking all the water, including that to which defendants were entitled as riparian owners, the complaint was not objectionable for failure to state the precise quantity flowing through defendants' land; plaintiff not being required to make an apportionment in its complaint of the riparian rights among the several owners.

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 391*)—LEGISLATIVE REGULATION—PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS—RATES.

The Legislature, in the exercise of its police power, may regulate the rate to be charged by a corporation doing business affected with a public interest.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 191*) — COMPLAINT — OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

Where a complaint to condemn certain riparian rights in a creek merely alleged that the creek flowed 5,000 miners' inches and over; that plaintiff was the owner of 5,000 inches flowing in the creek and the right to divert the same, except as to the riparian rights of the defendants therein, which rights as set forth in the complaint were sought to be condemned in the action, the complaint showed that defendants had a certain interest in the waters to be condemned, to wit, riparian rights therein, and hence was not objectionable as averring plaintiff's ownership of the property sought to be acquired.

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 191*)—COMPLAINT—PUBLIC USE.

A complaint to condemn property must show that the use for which it is to be taken is a use declared by the Legislature to be a public use.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 61*)—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—NATURE OF USE.

Condemnation proceedings cannot be maintained to acquire property for a use which is private, or to accomplish some purpose which is not of a public character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 51; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

8. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 45*)—RIGHTS SUBJECT TO CONDEMNATION—"PROPERTY"—WATER.

Under Civ. Code, § 14, providing that "property" includes property real and personal, and section 654, that anything of which there may be ownership is "property," water, and the right to its use as riparian to land, is "property," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1240, enumerating the classes of property which may be condemned, and section 1241 providing that before property can be taken, it must appear that the use is one authorized by law, etc.

9. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 196*)—NECESSITY OF TAKING—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a proceeding to condemn land for a public use, the burden of establishing the issue of necessity is on the plaintiff.

10. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 45*)—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CONDEMNATION — WATER RIGHTS — PURPOSE—ELECTRIC POWER—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1238 prescribes the public uses in behalf of which the right of eminent domain may be exercised, and subdivision 12 authorizes the condemnation of property for canals, reservoirs, dams, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes, and outlets natural or otherwise for supplying, storing, and discharging water for the operation of machinery to generate and transmit electricity to supply mines, quarries, railroads, tramways, mills, and factories with electric power, and to apply electricity to light or heat mines, quarries, mills, factories, incorporated cities and counties, villages or towns, and to furnish electricity for lighting, heating, or power purposes to individuals or corporations, together with lands, buildings, and all improvements in or upon which to erect, install, place, use or operate machinery to generate and transmit electricity for any of the uses set forth. Subdivision 13 authorizes condemnation for electric light, heat, and power lines. Held, that such subdivisions authorize a corporation organized to furnish electric light, heat, and power to condemn the water in a stream, and the riparian rights of landowners, for its necessary requirements, and that such company is not limited to the acquisition of water by appropriation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by the Northern Light & Power Company against Henry Stacher and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Geo. O. Perry and Perry & Kerrigan, for appellant. Francis Carr, for respondents Hunt and Atkins. Herzinger & Herzinger, for respondent Martha Sheridan.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to condemn certain riparian rights. A general and special demurrer to the third amended complaint was interposed by certain defendants and sustained by the court without leave to amend. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment. There are 25 separate causes of action involving the rights of as many different and separate riparian owners. Three appeared and had judgment, who will hereinafter be referred to as defendants. Each separate cause of action is couched in substantially the same language, and the attack upon one may be treated as an attack upon the other two.

From the complaint it appears that plaintiff was incorporated under the laws of this state in January, 1907, "for the term and duration of 50 years from the date of its incorporation, and is now in charge of the public use hereinafter mentioned, for which the property hereinafter described is sought to be taken." Defendants contend that the complaint fails to state facts showing that the use is a public use, or that plaintiff is in charge of a public use, or that the taking of the property is necessary to such use; also, that the allegation of the complaint that plaintiff is the owner of the property sought to be condemned is fatal to the pleading. The special demurrer is upon the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity, in this, that the complaint "does not distinctly state the use or purpose to which plaintiff * * * seeks to apply the property," or "describe with sufficient certainty the property"; and does not "state the or any reasons or facts showing the necessity for taking the property." Furthermore, that it appears from the complaint that plaintiff owns 5,000 inches of the waters of said Old Cow creek, but it "does not definitely appear that there is any other or greater amount of water in said stream to be condemned," or "what amount or right if any to said stream the defendants hold or own which the plaintiff seeks to condemn." It becomes necessary to present somewhat fully the averments of the complaint:

"2. That plaintiff is incorporated for the purpose, among other things, to generate, make, and produce by water power, and to transmit and distribute for sale to and by the public generally in the county of Shasta, and elsewhere in the state of California, electric current (which words are used herein to designate all kinds and forms of electricity and electric energy) for light, power, and heat, and for other and all purposes and objects for which said current can now or may hereafter be used and applied by the public, and to acquire all kinds of property and do every act necessary or convenient to generate, make, produce, transmit, and distribute said electric current, and generally for the supplying and storing water for the operation of machinery for the purpose of generating and transmitting such electric current and electricity for the supplying of mines, quarries, railroads, tramways, mills, and factories with electric power, and also for the supplying electricity to light or heat mines, quarries, mills, factories, incorporated cities and counties, villages and towns; and said plaintiff owns and is now in possession, use, and enjoyment of a certain franchise granted by the county of Shasta, by ordinance of the board of supervisors thereof, for the erection of poles and the stringing of wires thereon during the period of plaintiff's corporate existence as hereinbefore set forth, for the transmission of electricity over, along, and upon the public roads and highways of said county of Shasta, and over, along, and upon the streets, avenues, and alleys of the unincorporated towns of said county of Shasta, for the supplying of inhabitants of the said county of Shasta with such electricity for light, power, and heat; and also owns and is in possession, use, and enjoyment of a certain franchise granted by the city of Redding, the only incorporated city in said county of Shasta, by ordinance of the board of trustees thereof, for the erection of poles and the stringing of wires thereon, for the transmission of electricity over, along, and upon the public streets, avenues, and alleys of said city of Redding, for the supplying of inhabitants of said city with such electricity for light, power, and heat.

"3. That plaintiff is by virtue of a location and appropriation made the —— day of September, 1904, and duly sold, assigned, transferred, and conveyed to this plaintiff thereafter and prior to the commencement of this action, the owner of and entitled to take, use, and divert 5,000 inches of the waters running and flowing in that certain creek in the eastern portion of said county of Shasta, commonly known and designated as 'Old Cow Creek' at a point in section 32, township 33 north, range 1 east, m. d. m., to be conveyed by means of ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and natural waterways from the said point of diversion to a point in section 6, township 31 north, range 1 west, m. d. m., where the same is to be used for the purpose of generating electricity as above set forth and is then to be permitted to return to and flow down a certain branch of said Old Cow creek known as South Cow creek down which branch, known as South Cow creek, said water will flow and return to and mingle with the waters flowing down Old Cow creek, its natural channel as aforesaid.

"4. That said Old Cow creek is not a navigable stream or water course. * * * The said Old Cow creek flows and runs over 5,000 inches of water, and said plaintiff is, as aforesaid, the owner of 5,000 inches of water running and flowing therein by virtue of appropriation as aforesaid, and entitled to take, divert, and use the same as against the said defendants, and as against all the world, except as to riparian rights of said defendants therein, which said riparian rights are, as herein set forth, sought to be condemned in this action.

"5. That the name of the sole owner and claimant of the only person in the use, occupation, and possession of or having any interest in the property described in this first cause of action in this complaint, or any damages for the taking thereof, so far as is known to or can be ascertained by this plaintiff, is as follows, to wit: Martha A. Sheridan is the owner and is in possession of a certain tract of land situated in said county of Shasta, over, along, and upon which said waters of said Old Cow creek flow and which is wholly below the point of diversion and between said point and the junction of said Old Cow creek and said South Cow creek as above described, which tract of land is particularly described as follows, to wit: The east half of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 32 north, range 1 east, m. d. m., together with the riparian rights connected therewith and appurtenant thereto, in and to the waters of said Old Cow creek, * * * (particularly describing the nature of said riparian rights). That not exceeding two acres of the said lands above described are capable of being irrigated, and the total amount of water required to irrigate such land does not exceed one-half of one miners' inch, measured under a four-inch pressure, as aforesaid.

"6. That for the purpose of the construction, operation, use, accommodation, and maintenance of plaintiff's proposed canals, flumes, ditches, aqueducts, pipe lines, electric power lines, and generally for the supplying according to the intent and purposes of its incorporation, said electricity and electric current for the public uses aforesaid, it is necessary that plaintiff appropriate, take, use, acquire, and hold all of said 5,000 inches of the running and flowing waters of said Old Cow creek passing through, over, upon, and along the several tracts of land herein particularly described, and all riparian rights appurtenant to and connected with said tract of land hereinbefore described in and to said waters of said Old Cow creek.

"7. That the use to which said waters are to be taken and applied by said plaintiff as aforesaid is a public use, and that plaintiff is in charge of such public use, and that the taking and acquiring of said waters and said riparian rights as aforesaid is necessary to said use in that it is necessary that plaintiff shall take said waters as aforesaid, as against said defendants, and as against said tracts of land, and use and hold the same for the use and purposes herein mentioned, and deprive the owners as aforesaid of the riparian rights hereinbefore mentioned and described, and divert, take, use, and hold the waters of said creek to the extent of plaintiff's claim thereto as aforesaid, as against the riparian rights of said defendants, at and from the point hereinbefore mentioned as the point of diversion to the point where the said waters are to be used and returned to the natural channel of said Old Cow creek as aforesaid, and by the means hereinbefore mentioned. That a large number of the inhabitants of said county of Shasta, and of the public generally in said county of Shasta, and elsewhere in the state of California, are without electricity or electric current for such purposes of light, power, and heat or for any other purpose, and it is necessary that plaintiff should take said waters and said riparian rights for the purpose of supplying said use.

"8. That plaintiff has acquired for said public use from the owners of said lands bordering on Old Cow creek, or through which said creek flows between said intended point of diversion and said point where the waters are to be returned to the natural channel of Old Cow creek, all riparian rights in and to the waters running therein through and over said lands, save and except from the above-named defendants in this action, the property hereby sought to be condemned."

We think the purpose for which the property is sought to be condemned appears with sufficient certainty. The land of defendants is definitely described by legal subdivisions, and it is alleged that the waters of Old Cow creek flow "over, along, and upon" said land "which is wholly below the point of diversion and between said point and the junction of said Old Cow creek and said South Cow creek as above described." The complaint also alleges that it is necessary that plaintiff appropriate, take, and use "all riparian rights of defendants to and connected with said tract of land hereinbefore described in and to said waters of said Old Cow creek." The prayer is for the condemnation of the riparian rights of defendants. The complaint also sets forth specifically the nature and character of the riparian rights connected with said land. This we think sufficient to show with reasonable certainty the property sought to be condemned. The point made that the facts should be stated, showing the necessity for taking the property, was made in Rialto Irrigating District v. Brandon, 103 Cal. 384, 37 Pac. 484, and it was there held that the rule contended for is not a rule of pleading, but of evidence.

It is stated in the complaint that there is water flowing down Old Cow creek in addition to the 5,000 inches appropriated and owned by plaintiff. The precise quantity flowing through defendants' land is not stated and need not be. It does appear that more water passes down the creek than has been appropriated by plaintiff, and that the various defendants have certain riparian rights to all of it, and plaintiff avers a necessity for taking all the water of the creek, including that to which the defendants are entitled as riparian owners. Plaintiff was not called upon to make an apportionment in its complaint of those riparian rights among their several owners. Whatever those rights may be, plaintiff seeks to condemn all of them, and it will be for the court or a jury to fix the compensation to be paid to each owner, as the facts may warrant.

The case of Shasta Power Co. v. Walker et al. (C. C.) 149 Fed. 568, was an action to condemn lands. In many of its features the case was not unlike the one here; the purpose of plaintiff being the same as here and stated in much the same form of pleading. The question whether the use was a public use came up on demurrer. The court said: "Taking the allegations of the complaint as a whole into consideration, and being mindful that the plaintiff has acquired franchises from the city of Redding and the county of Shasta for the purpose of serving the inhabitants of both such municipalities with light, heat, and power, I am of the opinion that the plaintiff is shown to be a public service corporation, and hence that the complaint is within itself sufficient. The objection that the contemplated use is vague, indefinite, and uncertain cannot be maintained." The case was later tried on its merits and plaintiff had judgment, and is reported in Walker v. Shasta Power Co., 160 Fed. 858, 87 C. C. A. 660, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725.

In the discussion of what is necessary to constitute a public use, and speaking with reference to subdivision 12 of section 1238, Code of Civil Procedure, the court said: "There can be no doubt that within this provision the furnishing of electricity as it is proposed to be furnished by the defendant in error is a use for which the Legislature intended that the right of eminent domain might be exercised. The purpose of the statute is to remove obstacles in the way of development and progress in the state, and it is in harmony with the Constitution and section 1001 of the Civil Code, which gives to any person, without further legislative action, the power to acquire property for any of the uses specified in section 1238, 'either by the consent of the owner or by proceedings had under the provisions of title 7, part 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and any person seeking to acquire property for any of the uses mentioned in said title is an agent of the state or person in charge of such use, within the meaning of these terms as used in said title.' * * * And it has generally been held by the courts that the generation of electric power for distribution and sale to the public on equal terms is a public enterprise, and that water used for that purpose is devoted to a public use." (Citing cases.) It is no longer a disputed proposition that the state, through its Legislature, in the exercise of its police power, may regulate the rate to be charged by corporations doing a business affected with a public interest. Says Mr. Thompson: "Property is clothed with a public interest within the meaning of this rule when it is used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and its use affects the community at large." 3 Thomp. on Corps. § 2950.

In support of the general demurrer it is urged that plaintiff has stated itself out of court by averring ownership of the property sought to be condemned—citing City of San Jose v. Freyschlag, 56 Cal. 8. Plaintiff does not allege ownership of any interest in the riparian rights of defendants. It is alleged that the creek flows 5,000 miners' inches and over; that plaintiff is the owner of 5,000 inches flowing in the creek and the right to divert the same "except as to the riparian rights of said defendants therein, which said riparian rights are, as set forth herein, sought to be condemned in this action." It appears from the complaint that defendants have a certain interest in the waters to be condemned, namely, riparian rights therein—and these are the rights put in issue.

We think the complaint states facts sufficient to show that the use is a public use, and that plaintiff is in charge of a public use. It is true, as claimed by defendants, that the complaint must show that the use for which the property is to be taken is a public use, so declared to be by the Legislature. It is also true that the courts will not condemn property for a use "which is evidently private or to accomplish some purpose which is not of a public character."

The right of the people or government to take private property for public use is given by section 1237, Code Civ. Proc., and may be exercised in the manner provided in the subsequent sections, part 3, title 7, of the same Code. Section 1238 sets forth the public uses in behalf of which this right may be exercised, "subject to the provisions of this title." Among those public uses are found in subdivisions 12 and 13 the following:

"12. Canals, reservoirs, dams, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes and outlets natural or otherwise for supplying, storing, and discharging water for the operation of machinery for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity for the supply of mines, quarries, railroads, tramways, mills, and factories with electric power; and also for the applying of electricity to light or heat mines, quarries, mills, factories, incorporated cities and counties, villages or towns; and also for furnishing electricity for lighting, heating or power purposes to individuals or corporations, together with lands, buildings, and all other improvements in or upon which to erect, install, place, or use or operate machinery for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity for any of the purposes or uses above set forth.

Section 1239 divides the estates and rights in lands subject to be taken for public use, into three classes: 1. A fee simple when taken for certain purposes not here involved. 2. An easement, when taken for any other purpose. 3. The right to occupy land, to remove therefrom such earth, etc., as may be necessary for some public purpose. Section 1240 classifies and enumerates the private property which may be taken under this title: "1. All real property belonging to any person. * * * 6. All classes of private property not enumerated may be taken for public use when authorized by law." And section 1241 provides that "before any property can be taken, it must appear: 1. That the use to which it is to be applied is authorized by law. 2. That the taking is necessary to such use."

The act of March 22, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 777), provides for the sale of franchises by counties and municipalities, among others, "to erect poles or wires for transmitting electric heat and power over or upon any public street or highway," and provides for the payment of 2 per cent. of the gross annual receipts for the enjoyment of such franchise. Section 629 et seq. of the Civil Code are regulatory, to some extent, of corporations engaged in supplying electricity. The statute relating to eminent domain, however, seems to clearly recognize the object in which plaintiff is engaged and for which it was incorporated as a public use.

The proposition principally discussed and upon which defendants mainly rely is as follows: "The statute does not authorize the condemnation of water or riparian rights for creating power, for generating electricity, for power lines, heat lines, or electric heat, light, or power." The contention is that section 1240, Code Civ. Proc., "fails to provide expressly for the condemnation of water or the riparian right of the landowners to the flow of water over their lands, thereby leaving a doubt as to the intention of the Legislature as to what property should be condemned," and there being a doubt, it must be resolved against the right to condemn. Attention is invited to subdivision 7 of section 1240 as showing that the "classes of property not enumerated" may be taken only "when such taking is authorized by law." But this latter clause adds nothing to the statute, for section 1241 provides that "before property can be taken, it must appear that the use to which it is to be applied is a use authorized by law." This condition applies to all the classes of property enumerated in section 1240. The question, then, is, Is water, or the riparian right to water, property, and does it come within any of the classes enumerated as the subject of condemnation? The word "property" includes property real and personal. Civ. Code, § 14. Anything of which there may be ownership is called property. Civ. Code, § 654. Clearly, water, and the right to its use, as riparian to land, is property. If it is to be regarded as real property it falls within subdivision 1 of section 1240, and if it is to be regarded as property other than such as is enumerated in the eight other classes, it falls within subdivision 7.

The Supreme Court said, in Hill v. Newman, 5 Cal. 445, 63 Am. Dec. 140: "The right to water must be treated in this state as it always has been treated, as running with the land, and as a corporeal privilege bestowed upon the occupier or proprietor of the soil; and as such has none of the characteristics of mere personalty." In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 392, 10 Pac. 754, the court said: "The right to running water is defined to be a corporeal right or hereditament, which follows or is embraced by the ownership of the soil over which it naturally passes." (Citing cases.) It would seem to be too plain for argument that if land may be condemned its incidents may also be taken; and, whatever doubt there may be of the intention of the Legislature in using the term "land," such doubt is cleared away by the declaration that "all classes of private property not enumerated may be taken for public use when authorized by law." These provisions would seem to invite but a single further inquiry, Is the taking authorized by law? The answer here is equally clear and free from doubt and is given in section 1238, which authorizes the exercise of the right of eminent domain in behalf of the uses mentioned in subdivisions 12 and 13 of that section. We have, then, the clearly expressed authority to take property for the use in question and we also have a clearly expressed description of the property which may be taken. The fact that the statute does not specifically mention water and riparian rights to water suggests no doubt to our minds as to the intention of the Legislature.

Mr. Lewis says: "Land and all estates, rights, interests, and easements in, or appurtenant thereto, may be taken under the power of eminent domain. There may be a question whether the taking of a particular property, right, or easement has been authorized, but if the intention of the Legislature is clear, its power is beyond question. The right of a corporation to maintain one or more bridges across a street may be condemned. The rights of riparian and abutting owners may be condemned without taking any estate in the land to which they pertain." 1 Lewis' Em. Dom. § 262a. The same author says: "All kinds of property, and every variety and degree of interest in property, may be taken under the power of eminent domain." Id., sec. 262. We cannot doubt that the Legislature meant, by subdivision 7, section 1240, to include every class of private property not specifically enumerated, and that the language is not to be interpreted as excluding water and riparian rights simply because they are not distinctly mentioned. Defendants would have the court engraft upon the statute an exception so that it would read, "all classes of private property not enumerated except water and riparian rights may be taken for public use." This the court cannot do. There is no element of sacredness peculiar to water that should exempt it from bearing the burden placed upon other property, when necessary to be taken for the public good.

In the case of St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 659, the proceeding was "to condemn the waters of the creek (York creek) for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town with water," and the court stated the principal question to be "whether or not, under the laws of this state, the right of a private individual to enjoy the flow of water in its natural channel, upon or along his land, can be taken from him for such purpose." Sections 1239 and 1240 were under review, and the court decided that the right claimed by defendant could be condemned. The court, in Alta Land, etc., Co. v. Hancock, 85 Cal. 219, 24 Pac. 645, 20 Am. St. Rep. 217, referred to the riparian right of Hancock (to the extent that it existed) "as an appurtenance to the land, running with it as a corporeal hereditament. It was one which might be segregated by grant or condemnation, or extinguished by prescription." While the question was not directly involved, the opinion is not without value. In Gould v. Stafford, 91 Cal. 146, 155, 27 Pac. 543, 546, the court said: "The right of a riparian proprietor to the flow of a stream of water over his land is an incident of his property in the land, is annexed to the land, and considered part and parcel of it (citing St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes), but may be 'segregated' from the land by grant, condemnation, or by prescription," and, resulting from this doctrine, it was held that the grantors of plaintiff might grant their riparian rights, and hence a subsequent deed of the land would not convey riparian rights. In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 300, 10 Pac. 697, the court stated that in St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, supra, "the main question was whether the Code provides for a condemnation of that species of property (riparian right) to public uses. The question was answered in the affirmative." City of Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 105, 30 Pac. 197, was an action to condemn the right to the waters of a certain creek. Enright claimed that there was neither authority nor necessity for the exercise of the power, but if there was such power he was entitled to compensation not only as a riparian proprietor, but as an appropriator. The distinct question now here was not before the court, but the waters of the creek were condemned and the judgment was affirmed. Hercules Water Co. v. Fernandez, 5 Cal. App. 726, 91 Pac. 401, was an action to condemn riparian rights. The judgment of condemnation was reversed, but the right to condemn was not questioned. In both the cases last above cited eminent counsel appeared and it is not probable that both they and the court would have failed to observe so vital a matter as is now being urged, had the point been deemed to possess merit.

Subdivision 7, section 1240, of our Code of Civil Procedure, is the same as subdivision 6 of section 5958, Revised Codes of North Dakota. In the case of Bigelow v. Draper, 6 N. D. 152, 69 N. W. 570, it was held that riparian rights of a landowner may be condemned—citing St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, supra, and other cases. There a railroad corporation condemned the right to a strip of land across the bend of a creek by which to divert the water of the creek and to extinguish the riparian rights to the stream in the bend of the creek thus cut off. The court said, among other things: "It was not necessary to condemn the land through which flows the river to be diverted from its channel. There appears to be no necessity for the taking of the real estate itself; and it is a familiar principle of law that the wresting of private property from the hands of the owners for a public use should never be permitted to extend beyond such property or such interest in property as is reasonably required to subserve the interests of the public." The principle was followed in State ex rel. Burrows v. Superior Court, 48 Wash. 277, 93 Pac. 423, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005, 125 Am. St. Rep. 927, the court saying: "If riparian rights, right of access, right of light and air, and other kindred, intangible rights appurtenant to real estate, are property, they are certainly such property, and such an interest in real estate, as an owner would be entitled to alienate, thereby conveying an easement. If such rights may be conveyed, we see no reason why they may not, under the right of eminent domain, be condemned when necessary for public use, without an appropriation of the land itself." It was also held in Clear Creek Water Co. v. Gladeville Imp. Co., 107 Va. 278, 58 S. W. 586, that riparian rights could be condemned. Also in Watauga Water Co. v. Scott, 111 Tenn. 321, 76 S. W. 888, although in that case the law failed to provide for compensation, and the power was for that reason alone held not to have been given. In Crawford v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647, the court decided that riparian rights could be condemned under a statute authorizing condemnation of real property. The court said: "The right of riparian proprietors to the use of the waters flowing in the streams to which their lands are adjacent, when once attached, is in its nature a vested right in property, a corporeal hereditament, being a part and parcel of the riparian land which is annexed to the soil, and the use of it is an incident thereto, of which the owner cannot be rightfully divested except by grant, prescription, or condemnation. * * * This property right, like any other part of his realty, is subject to condemnation and appropriation for public use in the manner provided by law." In McGhee Irr. Ditch Co. v. Hudson, 85 Tex. 587, 22 S. W. 398, it was held that a statute authorizing condemnation of land carried with it the authority to condemn riparian rights. These cases appear to treat such rights as land or as embraced within the term "land," as was the basis of the decision in St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, supra. We do not feel justified in attempting to test the question by a comparison of the advantages and value of irrigation with the benefits to the public that may be derived from the exercise of the power here invoked. Considerations looking to the value or necessity of the property to the private owner must give way to the requirements of the public at large, for the theory upon which all property is held and enjoyed is that whenever the state needs it as necessary to the welfare of the people thereof, it has the right to so declare by law and to take it in accordance therewith, the assumption being that the private owner is compensated in damages and in sharing with other citizens the benefits of the use to which his property is dedicated. And should this in a given case seem inadequate, there is the still further consideration that the rights of the public are paramount to those of the individual, and the welfare of society may rightfully demand unrequited sacrifices of its individual members. It seems to us that the right to condemn water and the riparian rights thereto, as a public use, is too well grounded in this state, under the law as it now exists, to justify us in setting it aside upon some new view that may now be urged.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In our decision it is possible that we failed to give due consideration to all the reasons which may be urged against the exercise of the right of eminent domain by electric power companies to obtain water for power. The case is one of far-reaching importance and we are disposed to receive all the light possible which may be thrown upon it.

The petition for a rehearing is granted. The case may by stipulation be resubmitted upon printed briefs or upon the petition and answer thereto, or the court will hear oral argument at such time as may suit the convenience of counsel and the court.

On Rehearing.

Geo. O. Perry and Perry & Kerrigan (Guy C. Earl, amicus curiæ), for appellant. Francis Carr and Herzinger & Herzinger (Reed & Dozier, amici curiæ), for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. We still adhere to the conclusions reached in the former opinion for the reasons there given.

We invited further consideration of two questions: First, Does the complaint state sufficient facts upon the issue of the necessity for the taking? and, second, Does the statute authorize the taking of water for electric power, light, and heat purposes? In addition to what is said in the former opinion, it may not be amiss to make some further observations upon these two questions.

First, as to the question of necessity. Section 1241, Code Civ. Proc., provides, as we have seen, that "before any property can be taken, it must appear: (1) That the use to which it is to be applied is authorized by law; (2) that the taking is necessary to such use." The point urged is that the complaint does not allege facts sufficient to present the issue of necessity; that the averments do not meet the requirements of the law without showing: (1) That the wants and needs of the people require the production and supply of electricity in excess of the present supply; (2) that the present equipment controlled by appellant, is insufficient to meet such needs; (3) that the particular property sought is available and can be and will be used for the public purposes mentioned, and that it is necessary to take the property to meet the public needs.

It is alleged that a large number of people are without electricity whose needs in that regard appellant alleges its desire and purpose to supply and to this end that it is necessary to condemn the property sought. Electric light and power companies, like other public service corporations, have a right and it is their duty to anticipate future needs of the public. They cannot reasonably be required to limit their preparations for future demands by their ability to provide for them out of their present supply. New uses for electricity are constantly being discovered and applied. The supply which in the same community would at present be sufficient might be insufficient in a short time. Nor can public service corporations state with certainty to what extent their facilities to serve the public will be availed of. Neither can they determine, nor should they be required to determine in advance, and set forth in their complaint that their present equipment is insufficient to meet the needs of the people. It is, of course, required that the particular property sought be available and can be used for the purposes desired, and also that it is necessary to meet the public needs. But these are matters the particular facts in support of which are evidentiary, rather than subjects of pleading. In Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 532, 28 Pac. 681, and in Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 309, 92 Pac. 849, cited by respondent, it was the evidence necessary that was being considered, and not the pleadings. The complaint is set out quite fully in the original opinion and its averments need not be here repeated. They seem to us sufficient to present the issue of necessity for the taking. The burden of establishing this issue is upon plaintiff, and it was not required of plaintiff to set forth in its complaint the evidence on which it relies to prove the alleged necessity. This evidence may or may not be found sufficient when subjected to proper test at the trial, but we do not think that the burden is upon plaintiff to present all the facts in its complaint in order that this test may be fully and properly determined on demurrer.

The more serious question urged is, Does the statute authorize the condemnation of property by electric power, light, and heat companies, under any condition of facts? Respondent denies to such corporations such power. The claim is that while they may condemn property for "canals, reservoirs, dams, ditches, flumes, aqueducts, and pipes and outlets, for storing and discharging water for the operation of machinery for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity for the supply of mines (and for many other specified purposes) with electric power," as set forth in subdivisions 12 and 13, § 1238, Code Civ. Proc., they cannot condemn water, without which the canals, reservoirs, etc., would be useless, but must acquire the water by appropriation or purchase; that they may condemn the means whereby water may be used, but not the water itself. This denial, of course, extends to all persons or corporations, municipal or otherwise, to acquire water in any other method than by appropriation or purchase for such purposes, however imperative the need of the public. In our former opinion we endeavor to show that water is property and may be taken like other property. It is conceded now that water is property and may be taken for purposes authorized by law, but the claim is that it is not so authorized in terms or by implication in subdivisions 12 and 13 above referred to; that in neither one of these subdivisions is water expressly mentioned "for power purposes or for generating electricity as one of the uses of the power company for which condemnation may be made."

Section 1238 provides that, "subject to the provisions of this title, the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following uses." Then follows an enumeration of the uses, among them the uses mentioned in subdivisions 12 and 13. The property which may be taken is classified and enumerated in section 1240, and, as we have held, includes water and riparian rights to water. Section 1238 declares: "The right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following uses," and among them are canals, reservoirs, etc., "from sources other than a navigable lake," for "supplying, storing, and discharging water for or in connection with the operation of machinery, for the purposes of generating and transmitting electricity," etc. If water may be taken and canals, reservoirs, etc., may be taken for supplying, storing, and discharging water, it seems to us that water may be taken to be used in canals, ditches, pipes, etc., or stored in reservoirs for the uses enumerated. The limitation upon the taking of water is found in section 1238 and the taking must be for one of the uses authorized by that section; and if water is sought under eminent domain the power may "be exercised in behalf of the" uses enumerated. When the statute says that land may be condemned (section 1240) the right to take it for canals, reservoirs, etc., i. e., "in behalf of the following uses," is found in section 1238. Water is as necessary for the uses and purposes mentioned in subdivisions 12 and 13 as is land. And land is therein mentioned only in connection with the site on which to erect the machinery to generate electricity. When the statute declares canals, reservoirs, etc., to be public uses, it does not mean completed or already constructed canals, reservoirs, flumes, pipes, etc.; it means the right to take land to be used for the purpose of constructing these agencies or instrumentalities "for supplying, storing, and discharging water" for the purposes named. Respondents' contention, carried to its logical conclusion would deprive the corporation of the right to condemn land for canals, reservoirs, ditches, etc., because land is not expressly mentioned, and would confine the right to condemn only completed canals, reservoirs, etc. Obviously this cannot be the true construction to be given the statute. Yet water is as essential to the use of canals, reservoirs, etc., as is land; each is useless without the other. Reading sections 1238 and 1240 together, they mean to say this: Water may be taken by the right of eminent domain in behalf of the following public uses, namely, canals, reservoirs, etc., in connection with the operation of machinery, for the purpose of generating and transmitting electricity.

The case is quite supposable where certain land is susceptible of being utilized as a reservoir, and may be indispensable to the success of plans for furnishing power with which to generate electricity for the purposes mentioned in the statute. The owner of this land may have it in a high state of cultivation under irrigation from a stream of water flowing through it which he has appropriated for such use. To convert this land into a reservoir must necessarily deprive the owner of both land and water and in assessing the damage in taking the land, the damage would be enhanced by the water appropriated with it. In such case the water is appurtenant to the land and would be taken with it. The statute gives the right to take the land for a reservoir and this right would not be affected because it also involved the taking of water with it.

Somewhat similar provision is made by subdivision 3 of section 1238, for the exercise of eminent domain "in behalf of * * * ponds, lakes, canals, aqueducts, reservoirs * * * for conducting or storing water for the use of the inhabitants of any county, incorporated city, or city and county, village or town." Respondents' contention would prohibit the taking of water "in behalf of" these objects, which it seems to us would be no less violative of the intention of the statute than that sought to be given subdivisions 12 and 13.

In St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 659, where sections 1238 and 1240 were under review, and where it was held that water might be taken for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of a town, Mr. Justice Myrick very clearly elucidates the question. He said: "The land through, over, and upon which pipes, aqueducts, flumes, and ditches may be constructed or laid is not used by the public; the corporation uses the land for the conveying of water; the water after having been conveyed, is taken by the public, and at that point, strictly speaking, is where the public use commences; but both the water and the land are taken, to the end that the public may be supplied with the one by the use of the other. In this case the plaintiff has already acquired the one, viz., places for its pipes, etc. (which are worthless and serve no purpose without water), and now seeks to acquire the necessary water; such water, when acquired, to be used in behalf of, for the benefit of, to the interest of, for the behoof of, ditches, etc., for conducting water for the use of the inhabitants of a village. (See Worcester's Dictionary, 'Behalf'.)" In the same case Mr. Justice Ross said: "There can be no sort of doubt that the supplying of the inhabitants of a town with pure, fresh water is one of the 'public uses,' in behalf of which the Legislature has declared the right of eminent domain may be exercised. Code Civ. Proc. § 1238." Following this declaration that the supplying of water to the inhabitants of a town is a public use (subd. 3, § 1238, Code Civ. Proc.), the court further says: "It is equally clear that the plaintiff is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain in behalf of such use. Section 1001 of the Civil Code provides: 'Any person may, without further legislative action, acquire private property for any use specified in section 1238 of the Code of Civil Procedure, either by consent of the owner or by proceedings had under the provisions of title 7, pt. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure (relating to eminent domain); and any person seeking to acquire property for any of the uses mentioned in such title is an agent of the state, or a person in charge of such use, within the meaning of those terms, as used in such title.'" The opinion then proceeds to show that water, which was the property in question, "comes within the category of real property."

In Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604, it was held, under section 1001 of the Civil Code, that private property might be taken for any use specified in section 1238, Code Civ. Proc. So held in Santa Cruz v. Enright, 95 Cal. 105, 30 Pac. 197, both of which cases are referred to approvingly in City of Los Angeles v. Leavis, 119 Cal. 164, 51 Pac. 34. We confess our inability to escape the simple logic of these cases, which is, when reduced to the simplest statement, that water is property and may be taken "in behalf of" any of the uses specified in section 1238, Code Civ. Proc., and that the objects and purposes of plaintiff constitute a public use under that section. See Shasta Power Co. v. Walker et al. (C. C.) 149 Fed. 568; later, after trial, as reported in 160 Fed. 856, 87 C. C. A. 660, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 725. Paragraphs quoted in our first opinion.

PEOPLE v. HATCH. (Cr. 217.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 31, 1910. Rehearing Denied July 28, 1910.)

1. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Motion to Quash—Grounds—Irregularity in Formation of Grand Jury.

Under Pen. Code, § 995, providing that an indictment may be set aside where it is not found indorsed and presented as prescribed in the Code, when the names of the witnesses examined before the grand jury or whose depositions were read before them are not indorsed on the indictment, when a person is permitted to be present during the grand jury session when the charge in the indictment is under consideration, with certain exceptions, and when accused has not been held to answer before finding of the indictment on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge, either to the panel or to any individual grand juror, no mere irregularities in the formation and impanelment of the grand jury, other than such as are grounds of challenge, either to the panel or to an individual juror, are grounds for setting aside the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 480–487; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

2. Criminal Law (§ 1144*)—Appeal—Presumptions.

Where the bill of exceptions does not show that accused was not held to answer before finding of the indictment, the appellate court cannot presume that he was not so held, since appellant must affirmatively show error.

3. Criminal Law (§ 1088*)—Appeal—Record—Affidavits.

An affidavit of accused, filed in the appellate court on appeal, is no part of the record on appeal.

4. Criminal Law (§ 1158*)—Appeal—Review.

5. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Motion to Quash—Grounds—Excusing Grand Jurors.

That the district attorney after ascertaining from questioning the grand jurors that three of them may have entertained opinions upon the case, and that such opinions were probably unfavorable to accused, and suggested that it would be better that such jurors retire, so that they take no part in the proceedings resulting in the indictment, was not ground for setting aside the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 480, 481; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

6. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Motion to Quash—Grounds—Misconduct of District Attorney.

That the district attorney advised the grand jury that the evidence was sufficient to warrant an indictment was not ground for setting aside the indictment, not being included in the grounds specified by Pen. Code, § 995, declaring the causes for which an indictment may be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 480; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

7. Indictment and Information (§ 144*)—Nature of "Indictment."

An "indictment" is but an accusatory paper, and on motion to dismiss, irregularities in the proceedings before the grand jury cannot be reviewed, except as expressly provided by statute.

8. Indictment and Information (§ 137*)—Motion to Quash—Hearing—Admissibility of Evidence.

The court cannot inquire into the sufficiency of proof or the mode of examining witnesses by motion to set aside an indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 848; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

9. Indictment and Information (§ 148*)—Demurrer—General or Specific.

Where a demurrer to an indictment does not specifically point out a certain defect therein, it can only be considered under the general demurrer that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 495; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

10. Indictment and Information (§ 147*)—Sufficiency of Accusation—Participial Form—Demurrer.

While the use of the participial form in alleging facts necessary to the statement of an offense is not to be commended, it will not render the indictment bad, as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 490–494; Dec. Dig. § 147.*]

11. Indictment and Information (§ 125*)—Duplicity.

Where several acts are prohibited and made punishable, accused may be charged conjunctively with doing two or more of the prohibited acts without rendering the indictment duplicitous, and hence an indictment under Pen. Code, § 506, making it embezzlement for an agent intrusted with or having control of property for use of another to fraudulently appropriate it to any use not in the lawful execution of his trust, or to secrete it with a fraudulent intent to so appropriate it, which alleges both that accused secreted the money with the fraudulent intent to appropriate it, and that he did fraudulently appropriate it, is not duplicitous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 334–400; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

12. Criminal Law (§ 409*)—Evidence—Admissions by Accused—Preliminary Evidence.

While there must be some proof of the body of the crime before extrajudicial statements or admissions of accused may be considered, it is not required that such proof establish the crime beyond all reasonable doubt; and hence in an embezzlement case a requested charge that, in determining whether a crime had been committed, apart from who committed it, the jury should not consider any admission or statement of accused, and should look exclusively to the other evidence in the case, and if such other evidence did not show the commission of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt, accused should be acquitted, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 918, 919; Dec. Dig. § 409.*]

13. Embezzlement (§ 48*)—Instructions.

In an embezzlement case where the only controverted matter was whether accused had embezzled the money of his principal, and it appeared that accused had handled the money as an agent and while insolvent had taken or borrowed the money for his own use without disclosing his financial condition to his principal, a charge that the essential element of embezzlement is the fraudulent conversion by accused of property received by him in a trust capacity, and that in all matters connected with trust relations an agent is bound to act in the highest good faith towards his principal, and cannot obtain any advantage therein over the principal by the slightest misrepresentation or concealment, was misleading, as giving the jury to understand that though the money had been lent by the principal to accused, yet if such loans were obtained without full disclosure of his condition by him to her, he would be guilty of embezzlement of the money thus lent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 72–75; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

14. Criminal Law (§ 30*)—Distinct Offenses.

Where an agent had at different times made loans to himself of his principal's money in different amounts, if such loans amounted to embezzlement he was guilty of a distinct offense for each appropriation, and a demand by the principal for payment of the general balance would not consolidate into one offense the several embezzlements previously committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 32–34; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

15. Criminal Law (§ 678*)—Election Between Acts.

Where several substantive offenses have been proved, either one of which would support a verdict of guilty under the indictment charging one offense, the district attorney should elect as to which offense he will rely upon for a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1580–1583; Dec. Dig. § 678;* Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 425–437.]

16. Criminal Law (§ 678*)—Election Between Acts.

Where in an embezzlement case a statement furnished by accused as agent to his principal, whose money he was alleged to have embezzled, was introduced in evidence early in the trial, showing the receipt of various sums during the period covered by the statement, at which time no offense had been proved, and it did not appear that more than one offense would be proved, a request that the district attorney be required to indicate which item he relied upon as supporting the charge in the indictment was properly denied, since before a fraudulent appropriation can be shown it must appear that money has been received, and it might happen that an aggregate amount was finally appropriated by one act which was received in many items.

17. Criminal Law (§ 814*)—Instructions—Applicability to Case.

In an embezzlement case, where under one charge in the indictment several distinct fraudulent appropriations had been proved and no election had been made as to which was the substantive offense upon which the indictment was predicated, a charge that if accused as agent received his principal's money as charged in the indictment, and fraudulently appropriated it to an amount above $50 not in the due execution of his trust, but to his own use, he should be found guilty as charged, was erroneous, since under it the jury could convict of the offense charged, though the jurors founded their verdict upon different offenses.

Jackson Hatch was convicted of embezzlement, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. Reversed and remanded.

Walter H. Linforth, Frank Freeman, E. M. Rosenthal, and Owen D. Richardson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. The defendant was charged by indictment under section 506 of the Penal Code with having embezzled on the 17th day of February, 1908, the sum of $37,075.42 of the money of Sarah E. Sage, intrusted to him and in his control and custody as the agent, attorney, and trustee of said Sarah E. Sage. He was found guilty as charged, and made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and judgment pronounced. From the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial he in due time appealed to this court.

Defendant at the proper time made a motion to set aside the indictment on various grounds specified in the motion. The motion was denied, and the proceedings thereon are set forth in the bill of exceptions.

The grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside are set forth in section 995 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "The indictment or information must be set aside by the court in which the defendant is arraigned, upon his motion, in either of the following cases. If it be an indictment: 1. Where it is not found, indorsed, and presented as prescribed in this Code. 2. When the names of the witnesses, examined before the grand jury, or whose depositions may have been read before them, are not inserted at the foot of the indictment, or indorsed thereon. 3. When a person is permitted to be present during the session of the grand jury, and when the charge embraced in the indictment is under consideration, except as provided in section 925. 4. When the defendant had not been held to answer before the finding of the indictment, on any ground which would have been good ground for challenge, either to the panel or to any individual grand juror."

It is well settled in this state that under this section no mere irregularities in the formation and impanelment of the grand jury, other than such as are grounds of challenge, either to the panel or to an individual juror, are grounds for setting aside the indictment. People v. Southwell, 46 Cal. 142; People v. Welch, 49 Cal. 174; People v. Colby, 54 Cal. 37; People v. Hunter, 54 Cal. 65; People v. Schmidt, 64 Cal. 260, 30 Pac. 814; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161; Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 267, 28 Pac. 341. Most of the grounds relied upon by appellant are clearly of this character. Others are grounds of challenge, and can only be relied upon by a defendant who has not been held to answer before the finding of the indictment. Pen. Code, § 995, subd. 4. The bill of exceptions does not show that this defendant was not held to answer before the finding of the indictment. In the absence of such showing we cannot presume that he was not. The appellant must affirmatively show error, and as his right to rely upon grounds that would have been grounds of challenge either to the panel or to an individual juror depended upon his not having been held to answer before the finding of the indictment, the record on appeal must show it. People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 444, 50 Pac. 675; People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1, 34 Pac. 490; People v. McAuslan, 43 Cal. 55; People v. Russell, 156 Cal. 450, 105 Pac. 416. True, as one of the grounds of defendant's motion, it is stated, "that this defendant had not been held to answer before the finding of said indictment," but such recital in the motion is not evidence of the fact. Appellant in this connection has called our attention to a copy of an affidavit of defendant filed in this court. But this is no part of the record on appeal, and on its face does not appear to have been read or used on the hearing of the motion to set aside the indictment, but upon a motion for a continuance of the hearing thereon. So far as defendant now relies upon grounds that are cause for challenge, either to the panel or to an individual juror, the record does not show that he was in a position to raise such objections upon his motion to dismiss the indictment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

It is urged that the indictment was invalid and the motion to dismiss should have been granted because, as it is claimed, the district attorney excluded three grand jurors from participation in the proceedings resulting in the finding of the indictment. Presumably this is urged as showing that the indictment was "not found, indorsed, and presented as prescribed in" the Penal Code § 995, subd. 1. Whether or not the facts claimed to exist are grounds for a dismissal of the indictment is at least questionable. But in passing upon the action of the trial court we must view the evidence in the light most favorable to supporting the action of the trial court. The district attorney's evidence upon this point is to the effect that after ascertaining from questioning the grand jurors that three of them may have entertained opinions upon the case to be submitted, and that such opinions were probably unfavorable to the defendant, he suggested that it would be better that such jurors retire and take no part in the investigation of the charges against Mr. Hatch. The three doubtful jurors accordingly took no part in the proceedings resulting in the indictment. The action of the district attorney was for the purpose of preventing disqualified jurors from acting upon the indictment. By reducing the number of jurors it reduced the chance for obtaining 12 affirmative votes for an indictment, and the defendant could not have been injured thereby. We have been cited to no case which holds that such action invalidates an indictment.

It is also urged that the indictment should have been set aside because, as it is claimed, the district attorney advised the grand jury that the evidence was sufficient to warrant an indictment. Unlike the preceding point, it cannot be claimed that this conduct affected the validity of the grand jury itself. It is presented simply as misconduct on the part of the district attorney. The authorities seem to be agreed that a district attorney should refrain from expressing an opinion to the grand jury as to the effect of evidence or the sufficiency thereof. But the only grounds for which an indictment found and returned by a valid grand jury may be set aside are those specified in section 995 of the Penal Code, and we do not think that this comes within any of the provisions of said section. The law contemplates that only competent evidence be received by the grand jury, yet if it should receive incompetent evidence and found an indictment thereon, there is no method of reviewing its action in so doing. An indictment is but an accusatory paper, and it was never intended that on a motion to dismiss, irregularities in the proceedings before the grand jury should be reviewed, except as expressly provided in the statute. "An indictment is a record of the action of a judicial body, and such action is final when there is no appeal therefrom and no other method provided for reviewing it." In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 634, 78 Pac. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117.

The court refused to allow the defendant to introduce evidence as to the sufficiency and competency of the evidence heard by the grand jury. In this the court committed no error. "The court cannot inquire into the sufficiency of proof, or the mode of examining witnesses, to invalidate an indictment." In re Kennedy, supra.

We have examined all the contentions of appellant as to the action of the court in denying his motion to set aside the indictment, and are unable to say that the court committed any error in its ruling. Neither did the court err in denying appellant's motion to strike the indictment from the files. This motion was in substance and effect a motion to set aside the indictment, and was properly denied.

It is urged by the appellant that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the indictment, which is drawn under section 506 of the Penal Code, defining embezzlement by an agent, attorney, and trustee. The fact that the defendant was the agent, attorney, and trustee of Mrs. Sage, and that he had possession and was intrusted with her money as such agent, attorney, and trustee, is not alleged in direct and positive terms, but only in participial form. Thus it is alleged that the defendant * * * "being then and there the agent, attorney, and trustee of one Sarah E. Sage, and being then and there intrusted with and having in his control and custody * * * as such attorney, agent, and trustee, etc., etc." This defect is not specifically pointed out in the demurrer, and under the rule laid down in People v. Bradbury, 155 Cal. 808, 103 Pac. 215, can only be considered under the general demurrer that the indictment does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. That the use of the participial form in alleging facts necessary to the statement of an offense is not to be commended we do not doubt, but it is sufficient in the face of a general demurrer under the liberal system of pleading allowed in this state. In People v. Ennis, 137 Cal. 263, 70 Pac. 84, the defendant was charged with perjury, and the fact that he had been sworn was only alleged in the participial form, thus: "Having taken an oath then and there before, etc., etc." It was held sufficient. The court said: "The participial form of the averment is not the best method of stating a fact; but it is sufficient under our liberal system of pleading." In People v. Hamilton, 97 Cal. xvii, 32 Pac. 526, defendant was charged with embezzling money that he had received as county clerk. The method of charging the official character of the defendant and his possession of the money was substantially the same as in the case at bar. The trial court ordered an arrest of judgment, and this order was reversed by the Supreme Court of this state. The court expressly held that the use of the past participle in alleging the official character of the defendant and his receipt and possession of the money did not render the indictment defective. The indictment in People v. Page, 116 Cal. 386, 48 Pac. 326, was drawn under the same section and in the same form as is the indictment in the case at bar, and it was held sufficient as against demurrer. See, also, to similar effect, People v. Piggott, 126 Cal. 511, 59 Pac. 31; People v. Carpenter, 136 Cal., 392, 68 Pac. 1027.

Neither does the indictment charge two offenses in alleging both that the defendant secreted the money with the fraudulent intent to appropriate it and that he did fraudulently appropriate it. Where, as in section 506, Pen. Code, several acts are prohibited and made punishable, the defendant may be charged conjunctively with doing two or more of the prohibited acts, and the indictment will not be open to attack for duplicity. People v. Thompson, 111 Cal. 242, 43 Pac. 748. The demurrer was properly overruled.

Many exceptions were taken during the course of the trial to rulings of the court, but we do not deem it necessary to notice any considerable number of them. As the cause must be remanded for a new trial for errors committed by which defendant was prevented from having that fair trial to which under the law he was entitled, we shall only notice such errors and such other matters as we deem important for the guidance of the court upon the retrial.

The defendant was the agent and attorney of Sarah E. Sage for a period extending from the latter part of 1900 to about the close of 1907. During this time he attended to her business affairs, and received large sums of money for her as her agent and attorney, so that when a demand was finally made upon him for a settlement and the payment of the amount of money in his hands belonging to Mrs. Sage, according to the theory of the prosecution he should have had in his hands money belonging to her to the amount of upwards of $31,000. During the period covered by his employment defendant had from time to time rendered to Mrs. Sage written statements, showing the receipt and disbursement of moneys for her and balances on hand. When demand was made upon him for a final accounting and settlement, he furnished a statement of the condition of his account with Mrs. Sage, and, as witnesses for the prosecution testified, made certain oral statements or admissions concerning the money that should have been in his hands.

The defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "In determining whether or not a crime has been committed in this case, apart from who committed it, you must not consider any admission or statement of the defendant; you must carefully exclude from your minds any and every statement made or alleged to be made by the defendant, when you come to consider whether a crime has been committed; and on that question you must look exclusively to the other evidence in the case. If the other evidence in the case does not show the commission of the crime charged beyond a reasonable doubt, then the defendant must be acquitted, notwithstanding his statements or admissions, if any. In other words, the law prohibits a conviction of crime solely upon the statements or admissions of the defendant." The court refused to give this instruction, and was justified in so doing. The vice of the instruction is that it requires that the corpus delicti be proved beyond any reasonable doubt before extrajudicial statements or admissions of defendant may be considered at all. This is not the law. The correct rule is laid down in People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698. While it is true that there must be some proof of the body of the crime before extrajudicial statements or admissions of the defendant may be considered, it is not required that such proof shall go to the extent of establishing the crime beyond all reasonable doubt.

The evidence of the people tended to prove that the defendant had used for his own purposes from time to time money that had come into his hands as the agent and attorney of Mrs. Sage in the aggregate of between $30,000 and $32,000. Defendant claimed, and so testified, that of this amount he had borrowed from Mrs. Sage at different times sums of money aggregating about $30,000, and was and always had been able and ready to pay to her the balance. Mrs. Sage testified that she had never authorized or knew of any of the so-called "loans" to defendant. The evidence also tends to show substantially without dispute that at the times that defendant claimed to have borrowed such sums of money from Mrs. Sage he was her agent and attorney, and was in a very bad way financially; that he was in fact insolvent; but made no disclosure to her of his condition, and took or made the loans to himself without giving any security to Mrs. Sage therefor. Much prominence had been given in the cross-examination of defendant as to his want of good faith in his dealings with Mrs. Sage in negotiating the alleged loans from her. In this connection, although the court charged the jury that defendant had a legal right to borrow money from Mrs. Sage, it further charged the jury as follows: "You will observe that the essential element of the offense of embezzlement of which the defendant is charged is the fraudulent conversion or misappropriation by the defendant of property received by him in a trust capacity. In all matters connected with trust relations an agent, attorney, or trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his principal, client, or beneficiary, and cannot obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind."

Under this instruction the jury would probably understand that though the money had been loaned by Mrs. Sage to defendant, yet if such loan or loans were obtained without a full disclosure of his condition by him to her, he would be guilty of embezzlement of the money thus loaned. If there could be any doubt about this construction being placed upon this instruction by the jury, such doubt is removed by the fact that after deliberating upon their verdict the jury returned into court and asked for the reading of this instruction. It and others were read, and they subsequently returned the verdict of guilty as charged. The only controverted matter before them was as to whether or not defendant had embezzled the money of Mrs. Sage. They naturally would suppose that this instruction was intended to guide them in determining that issue, and that it was intended to inform them that if he obtained the loan of her money from her by the slightest concealment he was guilty of embezzlement in so doing. While the latter part of the instruction was a correct statement of the law governing the relations of an agent, or attorney, and his principal concerning their respective duties and rights in their civil relations, it was misleading and incorrect as a rule for the guidance of a jury in determining whether or not the agent was guilty of embezzlement. Under the condition of the evidence as above indicated, and in the connection in which the latter part of the instruction was given, it was erroneous, and, we think, clearly prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

We now come to a matter that must be discussed in several aspects. As we have already stated, the defendant was charged with the embezzlement of $37,075.42. The evidence given by the people proved that he should have had on hand when a final settlement was demanded of him about $32,000 in money belonging to Mrs. Sage. This amount includes the moneys that he claimed had been loaned to him, and which Mrs. Sage testified she had never loaned or consented should be loaned to defendant, or knew that he had loaned to himself. When the prosecution had closed its case in chief it was quite clear that if defendant was guilty at all, he was guilty of several distinct embezzlements. The statements that he rendered to Mrs. Sage from time to time indicated that he had from time to time loaned the money of Mrs. Sage, claimed to have been embezzled, in various amounts. Upon these statements the so-called loans were indicated by numbers only, although bona fide loans to other people were indicated by the name of the borrower. Mrs. Sage testified that she did not authorize these loans to defendant, and had never consented that he should loan such moneys to himself. There is abundant evidence in the writings to support her testimony. No reasonable person can read the record in this case without being convinced that if defendant is guilty at all, he is guilty of several distinct embezzlements. The money appropriated by him was not appropriated at one time, but at different times and in different amounts. It is perfectly clear from the record that when the demand was made upon defendant for a final settlement he did not have on hand $30,000 or any considerable portion thereof, but had used upwards of $30,000 of Mrs. Sage's money for his own purposes, but the appropriations had been made at various times and in various amounts. Under such circumstances each appropriation is a distinct offense. Edelhoff v. State, 5 Wyo. 19, 36 Pac. 627. Under such circumstances a demand for payment of a general balance does not consolidate into one offense the several embezzlements previously committed.

Where several substantive offenses have been proved, either one of which would support a verdict of guilty under the indictment charging one offense, the district attorney should elect as to which offense he will rely upon for a conviction. People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 11, 65 Pac. 13; People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 Pac. 323; Edelhoff v. State, 5 Wyo. 19, 36 Pac. 627; Goodhue v. People, 94 Ill. 37; West v. People, 137 Ill. 189, 27 N. E. 34, 34 N. E. 254; State v. Crimmins, 31 Kan. 376, 2 Pac. 574; Mayo v. State, 30 Ala. 32; Stockwell v. State, 27 Ohio St. 563; Bainbridge v. State, 30 Ohio St. 264. In the case at bar a statement furnished by defendant to Mrs. Sage was introduced in evidence early in the trial. This statement showed the receipt of various sums of money during the period covered by the statement. Defendant asked the court to direct the district attorney to indicate which item he relied upon as supporting the charge set forth in the indictment. To this the district attorney replied in effect that he would connect all with the charge made in the indictment, and the request of the defendant was denied. In this the court committed no error. At this stage of the trial no offense at all had been proved, and it did not appear that more than one offense would be proved. Although the evidence at this point showed the receipt of several items or different sums of money, the embezzlement does not consist in the receipt of the money, but in its fraudulent appropriation. Before a fraudulent appropriation can be supported it must of course be shown that money has been received. It may happen that an aggregate amount may finally be appropriated by one act which was received in many items and at different times.

The defendant at several stages renewed his motion, and at different times objected to the admission of evidence upon the theory that the proof of the first item of receipts was in law an election to predicate the charge upon that item. Appellant is mistaken in this. The mere receipt of any item of money was not an embezzlement of such item, and when the motion for an election was renewed it is not at all clear that any embezzlement had been proved. No such motion was made at the close of the people's case or afterwards. Nevertheless the course pursued by the district attorney has resulted in an error prejudicial to the defendant in a vital right. The court instructed the jury that "if you should find that the defendant was the agent, attorney, or trustee of Sarah E. Sage, and as such agent, attorney, or trustee he received her money as charged in the indictment, and within three years prior to March 23, 1908, fraudulently appropriated it to an amount above $50 not in the due and lawful execution of his trust, but to his own use and benefit, you must find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment." If there had been but one offense of embezzlement proven by the evidence this charge would have been correct; or if the court had limited the jury in clear and explicit language to the consideration of but one of the offenses proven. But in the case at bar, under the one charge set forth in the indictment several distinct and separate fraudulent appropriations had been proven, and no election had been made as to which was the substantive offense upon which the indictment was predicated. Under this instruction, in the condition of the evidence in the record, the jury could bring in a verdict of guilty as charged, although each juror founded his verdict upon a different offense from that considered proven by every other juror in the box. Under this instruction, the several jurors could range over the evidence at will, and pick out any one of the dozen or more offenses proven, and found his verdict thereon. No court can say from this record of which offense proven under this indictment the jury found the defendant guilty.

In the case of Edelhoff v. State, 5 Wyo. 19, 36 Pac. 627, the defendant was charged with the embezzlement of $208, which was the aggregate of 18 months' rentals collected by him for his employers. The evidence showed that each month's rental had been converted as collected. The case was reversed, the court saying: "No man should be tried or convicted of several offenses when he is charged with but one."

But we need not go out of our own state for authority that such an instruction as we are now considering under the facts of the case is prejudicially erroneous. In People v. Williams, 133 Cal. 165, 65 Pac. 323, the evidence showed that defendant had been guilty of several offenses, to wit, several rapes upon the same person, and the court gave an instruction to the effect that if the jury found that defendant had had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix at any time within three years before the finding of the indictment, she being under 16 years of age, etc., they must find him guilty. It does not appear that in the Williams Case any attempt had been made to secure an election by the prosecution, or that any objection had been made to the evidence proving the several offenses; yet the court held such an instruction erroneous. The court said: "A verdict of guilty could have been rendered under such an instruction, although no two jurors were convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, or at all, of the truth of the charge as to any one of these separate offenses. * * * Such a trial, upon a charge so indefinite as to circumstances of time or place, or any particular, except by the general designation, would be a judicial farce, if it were not something a great deal worse." The court concluded by saying that when a charge may be supported by proof of one of several distinct offenses the district attorney should indicate at the commencement of the trial what particular offense he intends to prove in support of the indictment. Such should be the rule in the case at bar, and no instruction should be given which will permit the jurors to found their verdict upon more than one offense.

In what we have said concerning the several offenses proven in this case we do not wish to be understood as indicating that only one offense can be proven by the district attorney. In embezzlement cases, as in some others, the proof is not always confined to proof of one offense. For the purpose of proving intent, system, or knowledge and the like, it is often proper to prove offenses other than the substantive offense upon which the indictment is predicated. People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 271, 5 Pac. 240; Edelhoff v. State, supra.

As the cause must be remanded for a new trial for the errors above discussed we do not deem it necessary to pass upon the other points raised by appellant.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GRIGGS v. HARTZOKE. (Civ. 548.)

1. Municipal Corporations (§ 978*)—Taxes—Collection by County—Statutes.

St. 1895, p. 219, and San Jose City Charter (St. 1897, p. 603) art. 4, provide that the city may by ordinance avail itself of the privilege of having its taxes assessed and collected by the county officers. Held that, reading the entire act of 1895, there was a clear intent to make provision for the collection of municipal taxes under the ordinary machinery employed in collecting taxes for county and state purposes, as established in chapter 7, tit. 9, pt. 3, of the Political Code (§§ 3746-3819), and hence the sale of property by county officers for delinquent city taxes is valid.

2. Pleading (§ 129*)—Admissions by Failure to Deny.

In an action to quiet title in which the cross-complaint set up a tax title, plaintiff cannot assert that the levy was void, where she failed to deny in her answer the allegations of the cross-complaint of such levy; since plaintiff thereby admitted it.

3. Taxation (§ 773*)—Recitals in Tax Deed—Evidence.

Under Pol. Code, § 3786, a recital in a tax deed that a levy was made is prima facie evidence of its truth.

4. Taxation (§ 762*)—Certificates — Deeds—Amount of Taxes—Variance.

Pol. Code, § 3786, requires that tax deeds recite the matters recited in the certificate of sale, and by section 3776 the matters to be set forth in the certificate are enumerated and no mention is made of the total tax or the amount which goes to make it up. Held, that a variance between the tax deed and the certificate, in that the certificate recited that the tax levied for county purposes was $26.07, and the deed recited $20.04, did not affect the deed.

5. Taxation (§ 679*)—Sale of Property to State—Resale—Sale in Excess of Tax.

Under Pol. Code, § 3787, property deeded to the state for delinquent taxes belongs wholly to the state. Pol. Code, § 3817, requires that notice of sale by a state shall contain a statement of all taxes, penalties, costs, and expenses up to date of sale. Held, that where a notice erroneously computed the interest so that a deed from the state to a purchaser was for little more than the amount of the taxes, the deed was not void, since the state, as owner of the property, could sell it in excess of that amount.

6. Taxation (§ 734*)—Sale of Property—Failure to Redeem—Rights of Owner.

Where an owner of property could have redeemed his land from a tax sale at which a deed thereof was given to the state before the state sold the land to a purchaser, the fact that the state thereafter sold the land for a little more than the amount of the taxes, expenses, etc., because of the erroneous computation of interest in the notice required to contain the amount of taxes, will not avoid the sale.

Action by Eveline A. Griggs against John Hartzoke. By judgment for defendant and from an order denying a motion for a new trial and to vacate a judgment, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and orders affirmed.

A. H. Jarman and Will M. Beggs, for appellant. Nicholas Bowden, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment in favor of defendant, also from an order denying her motion for a new trial and from an order denying her motion to vacate the judgment, amend the conclusions of law, and enter a different judgment; the last-mentioned motion being made under sections 663 and 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The complaint in this action is so framed as to cover both the elements of an action in ejectment and an action to quiet title to the land described in the complaint, which is situated within the city of San Jose. Defendant answered, and also filed a cross-complaint, setting up title in himself by virtue of a tax deed.

The facts presented by the record are briefly as follows: On July 26, 1897, plaintiff purchased the property, and on March 1, 1898, it was assessed to her at $4,260. According to the assessment the amount of taxes on said property for the year 1898 was, for county purposes $26.07, for city purposes $54.74, and for state purposes $20.79. Said taxes were not paid, but became delinquent, and costs, penalties, and charges accrued thereon in the further sum of $13.17. Nearly five months after plaintiff purchased the property, to wit, December 21, 1897, she delivered to Eveline Dubois a mortgage thereon as security for the payment of $8,000, which was not recorded until March 12, 1898. The mortgage being for more than the assessed value of the property, it may be supposed that plaintiff assumed that the mortgagee would have the mortgage assessed and pay taxes thereon, and that there would be no assessment against the land as distinct from the mortgage. However that may be, taxes on the property for the year 1898 were not paid, nor were they paid for any year thereafter up to and including the year 1904. The taxes for the year 1898, as mentioned above, having become delinquent, the county tax collector on June 27, 1899, duly executed a certificate of sale of said property for nonpayment of city, county, and state taxes for that year to the state of California. Subsequently on July 25, 1904, he made and executed a deed to the state for the nonpayment of such taxes. Thereafter the tax collector, pursuant to an authorization from the controller, advertised the property for sale and sold the same to the defendant.

The first question raised by the appellant is, Has the state, through the county tax collector, authority to sell property for delinquent municipal taxes due the city of San Jose? The city of San Jose is governed by charter (St. 1897, p. 592). Article 4 thereof deals with the subject of revenue and taxation, and in substance provides that the mayor and common council shall have full power and authority to assess, levy, and collect taxes, and that the city may by ordinance avail itself of the privilege of having its taxes assessed and collected by the county officers. It is also the duty of the mayor and common council, under section 4 of said article, in providing for levying and collecting city taxes, to be governed by state laws relating to the levying and collecting of state and county taxes, as far as applicable. This section further provides that "all sales and conveyances of property made and executed for the nonpayment of delinquent taxes shall have the same force and effect as when made and executed for the nonpayment of taxes levied for state and county purposes." By general law (St. 1895, p. 219) the Legislature provided that the governing body of any municipal corporation, such as the city, by ordinance might avail itself of the privilege of having its taxes assessed and collected by county officers. The common council of San Jose, pursuant to section 3 of article 4 of said charter, did pass such an ordinance, and thereby brought itself within the provisions of the said general law. Section 1 of the act of 1895 among other things provides that after a city, by ordinance, has availed itself of this act "all assessments shall be made and taxes collected by the assessor and tax collector of such county." Section 5 provides for the adding of a separate column for the city tax to the general county assessment book. It provides further that "such taxes so levied shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as state and county taxes; and when collected the net amount ascertained by sections 6 and 7 of this act shall be paid to the * * * municipal corporation or city to which it respectively belongs, under the general requirements and penalties provided by law for the settlement of other taxes." Section 9 provides that "whenever any real property situate in any city or municipal corporation which has availed itself of the provisions of this act has been sold for taxes and has been redeemed, the money paid for such redemption shall be apportioned by the county treasurer to such city or municipal corporation, in the proportion which the tax due to such city or municipal corporation bears to the total tax for which such real property was sold."

In brief, a reading of the entire act of 1895 shows a clear intent on the part of the Legislature to make provision for the collection of municipal taxes under the ordinary machinery employed in collecting taxes for county and state purposes. The manner and time for the collection of state and county taxes are established in chapter 7, tit. 9, pt. 3, of the Political Code (sections 3746–3819, inclusive). And so far as the state and county taxes are concerned it is not disputed that the proceedings in the case under consideration were regular. Proceeding under the act of 1895 and the ordinance passed under the authority of the charter, the city taxes for which the land in controversy was sold were collected at the same time and in the same manner as the state and county taxes by the county tax collector, and in view of the circumstances related this official not only had the power, but it was his plain duty to make the collection in this way.

Plaintiff next contends that there is no evidence that the city of San Jose ever authorized or levied a tax for the year 1898, and that therefore the deed made by the county tax collector to defendant is void. By failure to deny in her answer the allegation in the cross-complaint of such levy the plaintiff admitted it. Moreover the deed of the property to the state recited that such a levy was made, and under the provisions of section 3786 of the Political Code such recital is prima facie evidence of its truth. Rollins v. Wright, 93 Cal. 395, 29 Pac. 58.

The deed from William A. January, tax collector, to the defendant was executed in the usual form, and it was sufficient in form to divest the title of the state. Section 3898, Pol. Code; Chapman v. Zoberlein, 152 Cal. 216, 92 Pac. 188; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352; Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936. Section 3786 of the Political Code requires that the tax deed recite the matters recited in the certificate of sale, and by section 3776 of the same Code the matters to be set forth in the certificate of sale are enumerated. In this case the certificate of sale recited that the tax levied for county purposes was $26.07. The deed recited that the tax for county purposes was $26.04. Plaintiff claims that these recitals being different, the deed to the state is void; but neither the total tax nor the amounts which go to make it up are required to be stated. It is the amount of the assessment which must be recited, and that is the same in both documents.

The notice of sale by the state is required to contain a detailed statement of all delinquent taxes, penalties, costs, and expenses up to the date of sale. Pol. Code, § 3897. The notice under which the sale was made in this case incorrectly computed the interest, and accordingly the property was sold for an amount slightly in excess of the amount of taxes, penalties, interest, and costs; and plaintiff claims that on this account the deed from the state to the defendant is void. Under the statute as it formerly read, when the property was sold to the person who would take the least quantity of land for the amount of the tax, a sale for more than the tax was void. But under the present law this property belonged to the state, and it might sell it for a sum in excess of the amount of the tax. Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 59, 62, 91 Pac. 1005. And while it may be that if the state failed to publish, post, or mail the required notice of sale, or improperly described the property in such notice, a sale made thereunder might be void as to plaintiff, still in this case, as the plaintiff before the sale could have tendered the true amount due and redeemed the property, the mere fact that it was sold for a little more than the exact amount due does not render the sale void.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

I concur: COOPER, P. J.

HALL, J. I concur in the judgment, but in addition to what is said in the opinion prepared by Justice KERRIGAN concerning the regularity of the sale of the property in suit by the state to the defendant, I am of the opinion that plaintiff is in no position to attack the title or possession of defendant, who is in possession claiming title under the sale by the state and the deed thereunder. By the deed to the state, under the sale for unpaid taxes, the plaintiff was divested of all title to the property in suit. "Such deed conveys to the state the absolute title to the property described therein." * * * Pol. Code, § 3787. Her only right was a right to redeem or repurchase from the state, by complying with the provisions of section 3817, Pol. Code. This she has not done or offered to do. The owner of real property sold and conveyed to the state for unpaid taxes has no title thereto until he has redeemed under the provisions of section 3817, Pol. Code. Such redemption is in effect a repurchase. Not only is it expressly provided by section 3787 that the deed to the state conveys the absolute title to the state, but it is provided by section 3817 that the recordation of the controller's receipt for the redemption money shall have the effect of a reconveyance of the interest conveyed by the deed to the state. It is thus clear that the delinquent property owner has no title intermediate the sale and deed to the state, and the redemption from the state. Having neither redeemed nor offered to redeem under the provisions of section 3817, Pol. Code, plaintiff is in no position to attack either the possession or title of defendant, claiming under the sale by the state and the deed thereunder.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 765 v. McPHEE.

(Civ. 639.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1910. Rehearing Denied July 8, 1910.)

1. Drains (§ 14*)—Reclamation Districts—Publication of Petition.

Pol. Code, § 3447, provides that a petition for the formation of a reclamation district "must be published for four weeks next preceding the hearing thereof." The affidavit of publication of a petition for the formation of a district showed its publication on March 11, for the first time, and that the publication ended on April 3d, in the regular issue of a newspaper named therein. The hearing as fixed by the notice was set down for April 4th. Held, that the publication did not conform to the requirements of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Drains, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

2. Drains (§ 14*)—Reclamation Districts—Jurisdiction to Form District.

Under Pol. Code, § 3447, the due publication of the petition and notice of hearing is jurisdictional.

3. Drains (§ 13*)—Reclamation Districts—Organization—"De Facto Corporations."

Where the proceedings to organize a reclamation district were entirely regular in form, except for the insufficiency of the publication of the petition for its formation, under the rule defining a de facto corporation as one which exists where a number of persons have organized and acted as a corporation, have conducted their affairs to some extent by the methods and through the officers usually employed by corporations, and have assumed the appearance, at least, of a legal corporate body, the reclamation district had a de facto existence.

4. Drains (§ 14*)—Reclamation District—Organization—"De Facto Corporations"—Collateral Attack.

The validity of a "de facto reclamation" district cannot be attacked collaterally in proceedings to foreclose a lien of an assessment, levied by the district upon land.

Appeal from Superior Court; Yolo County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., and Angellotti and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The judgment in this case was reversed, after a careful and somewhat extended discussion of the points involved, by Justice Burnett. Upon the petition of plaintiff a rehearing was ordered and the cause is again before us for consideration.

In our former opinion we held that the board of supervisors was without jurisdiction to create the district, for the reason that there was a failure to publish the petition for its organization for the statutory period; and, further, that the validity of the organization could be attacked in this action. Since the opinion was filed the decision of the Supreme Court in Keech v. Joplin, 106 Pac. 222, has been called to our attention, which, it is claimed, holds that the organization of the district can only be questioned by quo warranto. Upon this point as well as upon the sufficiency of the publication of the petition the rehearing was particularly urged.

The action is to foreclose the lien of an assessment levied by the complaining district upon the lands of the defendant, Anna McPhee.

1. If the case were to turn wholly upon the sufficiency of the publication of the petition and notice of hearing thereof, as required by section 3447 of the Political Code, we should still incline to adhere to our former opinion. The statute reads: "The petition must be verified by the affidavit of one of the petitioners and must be published for four weeks next preceding the hearing thereof in some newspaper published in the county in which the lands are situated, * * * and an affidavit of publication must be filed with such petition."

Plaintiff at the trial introduced the proof of publication which was admitted over defendant's objection as insufficient to show compliance with the statute. No other proof was offered on that question. The hearing, as fixed by the notice published with the petition, was set down for April 4, 1905, at 10 o'clock a. m., as the time also for hearing the petition, and the order purporting to form the reclamation district was made and entered on that day. The affidavit of publication showed the following: "That the notice of petition, a true and correct copy of which is hereto annexed, * * * has been printed and published four weeks in said newspaper, commencing on March 11, 1905, and ending on April 3, 1905, both days inclusive, and in the regular and entire issue thereof, as follows." Then follow the days in March and April on which the notice was published, commencing March 11th and ending April 3d. Did this satisfy the statute which required the petition to be "published for four weeks next preceding the hearing thereof"? "A week consists of seven consecutive days." Pol. Code, § 3258. The Code rule of computation (Code Civ. Proc. § 12) excludes March 11th and includes all of April 3d which would make the earliest day for the hearing April 8th, if the publication must continue for four weeks next preceding the hearing. That due publication of the petition and notice of the hearing is jurisdictional cannot be doubted. Williams v. Sacramento Co., 58 Cal. 239; In Matter of Central Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 390, 49 Pac. 354. In Williams v. Board of Supervisors, 58 Cal. 237, which was a case similar to the one here, the day fixed for the hearing was June 17th and the publication was made May 20th, 27th, June 4th and 12th, but was held insufficient. The court said: "It is obvious that the petition could not be published for four weeks next preceding its hearing, unless it was published for four consecutive weeks. And inasmuch as the petition could not be published at least once a week for that period, and since the statute defines a week to be seven consecutive days, it necessarily results that it could not be published for four weeks next preceding its hearing, unless it was published at least once every seven days for the period of four weeks next preceding the hearing." See, also, S. & L. Soc. v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 347; Misch v. Mayhew, 51 Cal. 514; Hagenmeyer v. Mendocino Co., 82 Cal. 214, 23 Pac. 14; Derby v. City of Modesto, 104 Cal. 515, 38 Pac. 900. In Sherwood v. Wallin, 154 Cal. 735, 99 Pac. 191, the statute required the publication to be "at least two weeks before such action in some newspaper," etc. The meeting was set for March 4th. The publication of notice was made on February 10th and February 17th, one insertion on each date, in a daily newspaper, which was held sufficient, for the court said: "It may be assumed (thus implying) that the language of the statute is such as to require a publication once a week for two weeks before the day noticed for the meeting," and this was done.

2. Could the validity of the corporation be attacked in this proceeding? The position of respondent is that section 803 of the Code of Civil Procedure has prescribed a remedy for usurpation of corporate functions by quo warranto, and that "such remedy is exclusive of all other remedies, except in those special cases where another remedy is also given by statute, such as election contests." Our attention is also called to section 358 of the Civil Code, which provides as follows: "The due incorporation of any company claiming in good faith to be a corporation under this part, and doing business as such, or its right to exercise corporate powers, shall not be inquired into collaterally in any private suit to which such de facto corporation may be a party; but such inquiry may be had at the suit of the state on information of the Attorney General." As to this latter point it might be answered that the plaintiff is not claiming to be a corporation "under this part," i. e., part 4 of the Civil Code. But whether applicable or not, we are still confronted with the claim made that a de facto corporation was shown, and that the existence of such a corporation cannot be collaterally questioned, where it is in good faith exercising the functions of a corporation. Apart from section 358 of the Civil Code we understand that the rule contended for by respondent is the same where either a de jure or a de facto corporation is shown. Here "due incorporation" was averred in the complaint and denied in the answer. In our former opinion it was held that the "due" incorporation, i. e., a de jure corporation, was not shown, and that as there was no evidence introduced specifically addressed to the establishment of a de facto corporation, there was a failure of proof of any corporation. It did appear, however, that a petition for the formation of the district was signed and notice of its hearing given, though insufficient as to time of publication; at the appointed time it was heard and upon the hearing the board of supervisors made and entered its order "purporting to form the said reclamation district," and "ordered that the said petition and application hereto (i. e., to the order) attached be, and the same is hereby approved." The record further shows: "Thereupon the plaintiff offered in evidence (over objection of defendant to the jurisdiction of the board of supervisors) the papers filed in the matter of said reclamation district, showing the appointment of trustees, and other proceedings, regular in form, terminating with the assessment list, which showed an assessment of $1,709.90 against the lands above described as tracts 5 and 6." In Martin v. Deetz, 102 Cal. 55, 65, 36 Pac. 368, 371, 41 Am. St. Rep. 151, the court said: "An averment of the existence of a de facto corporation is as issuable as an averment of the existence of a corporation de jure; and its existence does not consist in the mere assertion of its existence in a pleading. What is a corporation de facto? It exists where a number of persons have organized and acted as a corporation; have conducted their affairs to some extent, at least, by the methods and through the officers usually employed by corporations; and have assumed the appearance, at least, of the counterfeit presentment of a legal corporate body." In the case here no claim is made that the proceedings were not taken in good faith; no objection was made to the evidence showing what the corporation had done in pursuance of the purposes of its organization, except that the proof of publication of notice was insufficient. The answer denied that the district "was or is duly, or at all, organized as a reclamation district; deny that it constitutes a public corporation, or public agency, under, pursuant to, or in accordance with, the statutes of California, or any state; or under the by-laws adopted by said reclamation district, or at all." No objection having been made to evidence tending to prove a de facto corporation upon the ground that it was not within the issues, we may consider it under the averments and denials. It is not necessary that some particular period of time should elapse in order to show a de facto existence. Such existence depends rather upon what has been done under and by virtue of the organization, rather than upon the length of time which may elapse after its inception. The definition of a de facto corporation, given in Martin v. Deetz, supra, would seem to have been met in the present case.

We have then the question: "Can the validity of a de facto reclamation district be attacked collaterally?" In answering this question the fact that the petition was not published as required by law seems to me to be a negligible quantity. That infirmity goes to the de jure organization and does not preclude the idea of an existence de facto. De facto organizations are upheld upon grounds distinct from those upon which a de jure organization rests. It was held in Martin v. Deetz, supra, that where it appeared that the corporation has no de facto existence its right to exist may be attacked collaterally in a private action. But where de facto existence is shown we understand the rule as enunciated in that case to be otherwise, and its right to exist can be determined only upon quo warranto proceedings. It has been so held in several cases as to private corporations under section 358 of the Civil Code. Martin v. Deetz, supra; Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 181, 22 Pac. 76; First Baptist Church v. Branham, 90 Cal. 22, 27 Pac. 60; People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50. In People v. La Rue, 67 Cal. 526, 530, 8 Pac. 84, 87, which was the case of a swamp land district, the court said: "A corporation de facto may legally do and perform every act and thing which the same entity could do or perform were it a de jure corporation. As to all the world except the paramount authority under which it acts and from which it receives its charter, it occupies the same position as though in all respects valid, and even as against the state, except in direct proceedings to arrest its usurpation of power, it is submitted its acts are to be treated as efficacious." Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506, 37 Pac. 514, 777, was an action to enjoin the sale of lands for assessments levied under an irrigation district organization. Said the court: "An irrigation district of this character is a public corporation, formed under a general law, and its object is the promotion of the general welfare. People v. Selma Irr. Dist., 98 Cal. 206, 32 Pac. 1047, and cases there cited. Corporations organized under the act of the Legislature, popularly known as the 'Wright Act' [Stat. 1887, c. 34] being public corporations, it is immaterial whether they be corporations de jure or de facto. That is a matter which cannot be inquired into upon collateral attack; and in a case like the present, where the validity of an assessment levied by such a corporation is the subject of litigation, the validity of such assessment does in no way rest upon the fact of the de jure character of the corporation. This principle must be considered settled law in this state.

Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 411; Reclamation Dist. v. Gray, 95 Cal. 601 [30 Pac. 779]; Swamp L. Dist. No. 150 v. Silver, 98 Cal. 53 [32 Pac. 866]." See People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 484, 61 Pac. 86. The principle laid down in Quint v. Hoffman, supra, and Reclamation Dist. v. Turner, 104 Cal. 335, 37 Pac. 1038, was approved in Keech v. Joplin, 106 Pac. 222. Said the court: "The evidence abundantly shows that the district has been organized and that it has been acting as a district. In other words, that it is a de facto district. It is a public corporation of a similar character to irrigation districts and reclamation districts. The law is well settled that the validity of the organization of such a district cannot be questioned by private individuals, but only in a proceeding in quo warranto at the suit of the state."

At the former hearing the stress of the argument was placed upon the question whether a de jure district had been created, and our decision rested mainly upon the right of defendant to call in question its validity where it clearly appeared, upon plaintiff's own showing, that the supervisors were without jurisdiction. It was assumed that plaintiff had not shown de facto existence. Inasmuch, however, as this fact now appears to us to have been established, we think that the decisions of our Supreme Court compel a conclusion favorable to plaintiff's contention.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

13 Cal. App. 300

PEOPLE v. DUNNING. (Cr. 113.) (Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 25, 1910.) Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; A. J. Buckles, Judge. W. H. Dunning was convicted of lewd and lascivious conduct with a child, and he appeals. Affirmed. Carl E. Lindsay, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of lewd and lascivious conduct with a child, as provided in section 288 of the Penal Code, and he appealed from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial. No brief has been filed by appellant, and no appearance was made on his behalf when the cause was called for oral argument. The record, however, has been carefully examined and we find that the evidence abundantly supports the verdict, the instructions fully and accurately presented the questions of law involved, and no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant appears to have been committed. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. HOFFMAN. (Cr. 116.) (Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 25, 1910.) Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge. O. E. Hoffman was convicted of arson in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed. Charles H. Crocker, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. The case was submitted without oral or written argument on the part of appellant. Since our attention has not been called to any alleged error, we would be justified in sustaining the action of the court below without any examination of the record. We have, however, carefully read the transcript, and we find therein nothing to demand a reversal of the judgment. The evidence against the defendant was circumstantial in its nature; but we are not prepared to say that it was insufficient to warrant the verdict of guilty of arson in the second degree. The instructions were fair and complete, and in the trial of the case all the rights of the defendant seem to have been scrupulously regarded and protected by the learned trial judge. No error appearing, the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

PEOPLE v. STANLEY. (Cr. 125.) (Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 25, 1910.) Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge. James R. Stanley was convicted of forgery, and appeals. Affirmed. Beard & Beard and I. R. Wells, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. The defendant was convicted of forgery, and sentenced to the penitentiary for the period of five years. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and a notice of appeal from this order, and also from the judgment, was given as provided by section 1239 of the Penal Code. No further proceeding seems to have been taken by appellant, probably for the reason that his counsel were satisfied after deliberation that no error was committed during the trial that would justify a reversal of the judgment. At any rate, an examination of the record convinces us that no reason exists for an interference with the action of the trial court, and the judgment and the order are affirmed.
